To Catharine M. Torrey and Samuel W. Torrey:

By virtue of an order of the Court of Chancery of New Jersey, made on the day of the date hereof, in a cause wherein The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States are complainant, and you and others are defendants, you are required to appear, plead, demur, or answer to the complainant's bill, on or before the Tenth day of July next, or the said bill will be taken as confessed against you.

The said bill is filed to foreclose a mortgage made by William S. Maddock to the complainants dated the twenty-eighth day of June, eighteen hundred and eighty-seven, on lands in the city of Plainfield, Union County, New Jersey. And you Catharine M. Torrey are made party defendant because you claim to own said lands, and you Samuel W. Torrey because you are the husband of Catharine M. Torrey, and may claim some interest in said lands.

Dated May 9th, 1889.

—The new prize conundrum: What is Gen. Fisk's politics?

—Coal has been discovered on the outskirts of Plainfield. It was in a bin, however.

—The W. C. T. U. will hold a strawberry festival, Thursday evening of this week.

—Growers say there will be a big crop of Jersey strawberries. Marketing will begin within a week.

—The Plainfield Cornet band is rehearsing some new music, which will be brought out on Memorial Day.

—Gardeners are perfectly delighted with the style of weather with which they have been favored during the past few weeks.

—New Jersey will receive $6,547.43 as her share of the allotment of the $400,000 appropriated by Congress for the equipment of the militia.

—Governor Green has signed House bill No. 241, which gives to cities the power to borrow money with which to light their streets.

—A party of fishermen from this city spent Monday angling at Weston, Somerset county. They report a total catch of 42 fish and a cold.

—In order to give better street lighting the shade trees in North Plainfield's streets are being trimmed to a height of ten feet from the ground.

—Among the recent transfers of real estate in North Plainfield, as recorded, is that of Isabelle Marsh to Ann Verdon, for $675.20, and of Sheriff [illegible] to Julia Peck, for $11,000.

—Beginning on Monday next and continuing for a week, a fair will be held in the new Saenger and Turner Hall, on Somerset street, for the benefit of St. Joseph's church in North Plainfield.

—At the Trenton Tournament, May 15, Mr. Charles Smith of this city, came in for first, second and third moneys in three events, and Mr. F. H. Keller for fourth, first and second in the same.

—It is understood that a prominent merchant in this city is ready and willing to repair and keep the town clock in running order, provided the Council will make an appropriation for that purpose.

—South avenue, East of the Netherwood station is in a horrible condition, and needs repairing at once. The late rains have washed the top dressing from the road-bed, leaving the coarse or second size stone exposed.

—Chief Doane with a thirty-foot ladder and two assistants, succeeded in releasing an oriole that had become fastened in a tree, the other day. The bird flew away singing with joy at its freedom, and the Chief joined in its happiness.

—No more charming place to spend the Summer can be found than at Mount Pocono, Pa. The "Brunswick House" there opens on June 1 with farm and dairy connected and livery attached. Write for circular and terms.

—There is advertised elsewhere a warning all parents should read to their children. The Trustees of the First Presbyterian cemetery intend to make an example hereafter of those who are caught stealing flowers from the graves.

—Postmaster General Wanamaker has decided that letters intended for newspapers, and which contain no personal correspondence, may be sent by express or may be taken by train hands without going through the post office.—Ex.

—According to the programme, as already arranged, June will be a very busy month in the public schools. The final examinations for the year, together with the Commencement exercises, will keep the teachers and scholars' time well occupied.

—Since the Council of 1889 has said that Plainfield should be "dry," Otto Arend, who formerly kept a saloon on East Second street, has moved to "pastures new," and opened a place known as the "Plainfield House," at No. 146 Mulberry street, Newark.

—In the midst of the singing of one of the choir selections in the Crescent Avenue church, Sunday evening, the electric lights died out but revived again before the organist lost her place. Also during the address of one of the missionaries the lights gasped for life.

—From 8 o'clock on, Sunday evening, all the electric lights on North avenue, and on Fourth street between Peace street and Madison avenue, also on Park avenue from the railroad north to Fifth street were out and that section of the city was in total darkness.

—Some of the congregation of the Seventh Day Baptist church, having strongly objected to the future use of that church for the Sunday Unitarian meetings, the Trustees have notified those in charge of such meetings that they cannot have the church again.

—"Figs in the pan," has had its "run," and it is suggested that [illegible] be hung on the gate posts and doorknobs for the entertainment of tramps and book agents, so that either may amuse themselves while the mistress is examining the work, or the servant is getting ready the frugal meal.

—Plainfield will be honored by the presence of two bishops on Sunday next. Bishop O'Farrell of Trenton will preach in St. Mary's church during the afternoon and Bishop Scarborough will administer the rite of confirmation in Holy Cross church in the morning and in Grace church in the evening.

—A young clerk in a New York house, who lives in the Borough, was noticed hurrying from the 11:20 train, the other morning, towards his house. "Hello!" said a friend who met him on Park avenue; "Did you get the [illegible]?" The sad reply was: "No! but I guess I will when I get back. I left the [illegible] home."

—Rev. J. B. Cleaver preached in Cotter's Hall, West Front street, Sunday evening, another of his highly instructive and thoroughly entertaining sermons before a large audience. The subject of his discourse was: (1) The pre-life of the Son of God; (2) His earth life; (3) His present existence. Governor, Ruler of the Metropolis of the Universe.

—Comfortable and most convenient stools are quite an appropriate accessory to the soda-water department of Field & Randolph's pharmacy, 21 West Front street. At all times of the day and evening numbers of ladies and gentlemen are noticed seated around the marble counter refreshing themselves with frozen cream, sherbet and other original delicacies drawn only at that place.

The Union County Board of Freeholders may appoint Mr. F. A. Dunham of this city, Superintendent and Engineer for the construction of the county roads at a salary of $2,500.

The death occurred May 15, of Leslie—infant son of Leslie M. and the late Elizabeth M. Daniel—whose birth fifteen months ago was attended with such fatal results to his mother.

Mr. A. Lyatt has recently purchased the well-known Guerrier Hotel property back of Scotch Plains, and it is rumored that he has leased it to a New York man who will again open it as a Summer resort for theatrical people.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter M. McGee occupied their new residence, May 15, on Rock View avenue, Washington Park. Its architect was Mr. Charles H. Smith, who also built the Charles W. McCutchen residence.

Mr. James Hardy the contractor and builder, has recently purchased of Mr. I. W. Yawger the dwelling at No. 27 Duer street, which, after the addition of a number of improvements, Mr. Hardy will occupy as his residence.

Mr. Geo. Conover Monday purchased from Mr. Aaron Thompson, a handsome team of grey horses, which he has placed in Gazelle Engine house to be driven to the engine in place of the bay team heretofore doing fire duty.

The reception given afternoon of May 15, by the "King's Daughters," at the residence of Miss Musgrave, Washington Park, was largely attended by the elite of Plainfield and the Borough. It was a great success both socially and financially.

Among the thousand Presbyterians who sailed down the Bay on a big iron steamer, Saturday, as guests of Col. Elliott F. Shepard, were Councilman and Mrs. J. K. Myers, Mr. and Mrs. I. C. Pierson, and Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Baynon, of this city.

Among the fourth-class postmasters appointed by Postmaster-General Wanamaker, yesterday, was Mr. Hezekiah Hand, postmaster at Scotch Plains. The appointment is a just one, and Mr. Hand is to be congratulated upon his success in securing the position.

Mrs. James Leggett, mother of Mr. Howard J. Leggett of this city, died at her home in Princeton, at 11 o'clock, May 15, after a sickness of about eight months. She leaves a husband, two sons and a daughter. The funeral services were held in Princeton on Saturday.

Rev. Dr. Livermore, of New Market, occupied the desk of the Central Baptist church, at Elizabeth, on Sunday, in the absence from the city of the pastor, Rev. E. T. Tomlinson, Ph. D. In the morning he preached on "Forgiveness." The evening sermon was in regard to "Conscience."

Invitations are out for the marriage of Marie Champion Ohl and John L. Topping, at the Church of the Reformation, Brooklyn, June 5, at eight o'clock in the evening. The bride is the only daughter of Mr. William H. Ohl, formerly of this city and brother of Mr. Percy C. Ohl of Pemberton avenue.

In our report of the meeting of the Friend's Temperance and Literary society, told exclusively in THE PRESS, Thursday, we omitted to state, unintentionally, that Dr. Uner was present and made a few congratulatory remarks. The doctor heartily endorsed the society as one of sound principles.

Mr. J. J. Sharp of New street, has just got back with renewed health from a trip to Charleston and Jacksonville. He went and returned on the steamer "Iroquois," of the Clyde line, and has nothing but good things to say of the service and accommodations provided him aboard that elegant and comfortable ship.

Mr. Herbert Winthrop Peck, of this city, passed a most creditable examination at Poughkeepsie, Thursday, and was admitted to practice at the bar of New York. This had been his ambition for months, and he is naturally and justly very proud of his success. He is now enjoying a rest at his home on West Front street.

Mr. John V. Beekman and family of New York have leased ex-Fire Commissioner F. C. Knowland's furnished house, East Seventh street, for [illegible] from June 1. Mr. Beekman is connected with the [illegible] firm of [illegible], with offices at No. 86 Liberty street, New York. Mr. Knowland and family will Summer at Leggett's Ferry, near [illegible], where they own a handsome home.

Mrs. Patrick Motley of West Second street, died Tuesday of consumption and dropsy.

Mrs. Phoebe Vail and daughter, Miss Cheilla, have returned to Plainfield after an extended trip through Canada.

The arrangements—all but signing the lease—have been completed for the occupancy of Reform Hall by the Rev. J. B. Cleaver and his earnest and growing congregation of righteous workers.

The wedding is to take place in a few weeks, of Mr. Albert Winter, formerly of the firm of Schepflin, Baldwin, Tweedy & Co., of this city, and Miss Benson, niece of the late ex-Mayor Wm. B. Maxson. Mr. and Mrs. Winter will go to Europe on their wedding trip.

The comfortable grand stand for ladies and others who do not smoke, and the annex just built this season on the Y. M. C. A. grounds, for smokers, will probably be filled next Saturday. It may be the closest game of the season, and a great credit to Plainfield if its nine wins.

For the first Sunday in eleven years, Henry Kline, sexton of the Crescent Avenue church, was absent from his post last Sunday. After twenty years faithful service to the church, old age and illness have seemingly broken him down, although his friends hope to see him about the church once more.

Mr. George Wotherspoon of this city, has been engaged as the Director of the Australian tour of "Little Lord Fauntleroy." Mr. Wotherspoon has long been recognized as one of the foremost of New York's musical and dramatic critics, and is chock full of just the experience and ability that will make that tour a success.

Mrs. Matilda Hoagland of Council Bluffs, Iowa, accompanied by her husband, are visiting at the residence of Mrs. Hoagland's brother, Mr. Peter Hoagland, on West Front street, this city. Mrs. Hoagland formerly resided in Plainfield, but left the city about thirty-five years ago, and is now visiting here for the first time since.

Mr. John Haynes, son of Station Superintendent Haynes of this city, was married at noon of last Saturday to Miss Minnie Bowers of Annandale. The ceremony took place at the home of the bride's parents. Mr. and Mrs. Cramer, grandparents of the bridegroom, will tender Mr. and Mrs. Haynes a reception at their home in Annandale, next Saturday evening.

The Dog Catcher at Work.

Dog-catcher Babbitt has again undertaken the work of gathering in unmuzzled dogs, and judging from the large number of canines which roam the streets, he has a broad field of labor before him. The dog pound is located in the yard at the city jail, but the neighbors have lodged a complaint with the Mayor, claiming that the dog pound is a nuisance, and it is likely that a more desirable place will be selected. Thus far about a dozen dogs have been gathered in.

Tea, Pansies and Music.

The inside walls of the First Presbyterian chapel were decorated with enormous pansies, Thursday, and the room was comfortably filled with the city's best people, including such distinguished guests as Miss Shephard, daughter of Col. Elliott F. Shepard, Mr. John Howells, son of Wm. Dean Howells, the Rev. and Mrs Karner, of Manchester, and others.

The occasion was a "Pansy Tea" given by the members of the Young Ladies Mission Band of the Crescent Avenue and First Presbyterian churches. The financial profit realized will be over fifty dollars.

During the evening the following enjoyable programme was rendered:

Polonaise—Chopin..........Miss Dewey
Song—"A Gude cup o' tea"—(In character)
Misses H. Ames, Fenn, Anna and Josie Petrie.
Violin solo—LaReve..........Mr. Joseph Sistelle.
Song—"Rose"—Lacome..........Miss J. J. Ketcham.
Song with Violin obligato—
"Thou Wondrous Youth"—Abt.
Miss Alice Holmes.
Violin solo..........Mr. Sistelle.
Serenade—Adolf Jensen..........Miss Dewey.

DOWN A FLIGHT OF STAIRS.

A little after 9 o'clock of Sunday evening, Mr. George Weaver, a carpenter, residing in North Plainfield, met with a serious mishap in this city, which will confine him to the house for several days to come. At that time Mr. Weaver alighted from a buggy in front of Moore's butcher shop on North avenue, to call on his daughter who is stopping with a family over the store.

In some unaccountable manner he got into the wrong doorway and ascended the stairway leading to the flats in the Paoli building, adjoining. The hallway was dark, and becoming confused Mr. Weaver pitched headforemost down the back stairs, where he was found soon afterward, unconscious and lying in a pool of blood. Willing hands raised the prostrate form and carried the unfortunate man to the landing above. Dr. Andrew Manning was at once summoned.

The doctor made a hasty examination and found that three ribs on the left side, and its front had been broken, besides an ugly, deep cut on the forehead, over the left eye. The wounds were dressed and the patient was taken home in a carriage.

To a PRESS reporter above evening, Dr. Manning stated that the wounds were of such a serious nature that the patient would at least be confined to the house for several days to come.

THE REV. AND MRS. MITCHELL DELAYED.

The hosts of friends of the Rev. and Mrs. Mitchell, who during Saturday often thought of that couple who sailed from New York at 8 A. M., as steaming on their way to Liverpool, will be surprised to learn that the "Servia" on which were the Methodist pastor and his wife, was stuck on a sand bank in a fog off Sandy Hook all day and until after 10 o'clock of Saturday night.

The news was brought to this city by Mr. Charles E. Doane's homing pigeon, "Leander." This brave bird is one of the very few in the State with a 400 mile record. He flew from Martinsville, Va., last year, a distance of 400 miles, to his loft in this city, when many others lost their way home.

His fly Saturday was in an entirely different direction, and when it is considered—as the message proves—that he was let off in a dense fog out in the ocean, his return home is more than marvelous. Mr Mitchell took three homings with him. Two, "Leander" and "Aerial," belonging to Mr. C. E. Doane, and one, "Schiedam," belonging to Mr. J. Hervey Doane.

"Leander" got home at six o'clock Saturday evening, with the message written on tissue paper and wound around one of his tail feathers with silk. "Schiedam" arrived at 7:30 Sunday morning, and "Aerial" at 3:30 in the afternoon. Neither of the last two birds carried messages, so it is supposed that they were all released at once.

Following is "Leander's" message, a copy of which Mr. Doane sent at once to the gentleman addressed:

SERVIA, 5.45 P. M.
OFF SANDY HOOK.

We arrived at the bar in a dense fog and are on a sand bank and will not get off till high tide to-night at 10.30.

I send this message by a carrier pigeon which Mr. Mitchell brought with him. It will return to Plainfield, N. J., and thus will be mailed to you. Of course we are all well. No sea sickness yet. I would rather be moving. We will be in [illegible] late at Queenstown. Good bye.

[illegible]

Noonday Prayers.

Don't forget the noon prayer meeting every day from 12 to 1 o'clock, at the W. C. T. U. rooms. Every one welcome and a blessing for all who come.

The Monday meetings conducted by Mr. Seely Edsall. The Rev. Mr. Goodrich, Mr. George Morrison, Rev. Mr. Schenck, Rev. Asa R. Dilts, and Mr. Harry Manning, leaders successively through the week.

OBITUARY.

WILLIAM A. WHITEHEAD.

Wm. A. Whitehead, son of the late Frasee Whitehead of this city, died at his residence in Newark on Wednesday, May 15, in the 65th year of his age.

Mr. Whitehead was one of Newark's active business men up to two and a half years ago, when he was suddenly stricken with paralysis and has ever since, up to the time of his death, been an invalid.

He was well known in Newark, where he has lived for over forty years, and was a Deacon and President of the Board of Trustees of the Sherman Avenue Baptist church of that city. He was highly respected by all classes for his extraordinary Christian character and genial manners.

Mr. Whitehead leaves a wife, three sons and two daughters. His aged mother survives him, and still lives at the old homestead on Front street.

Solomon Levy is in trouble, and, likewise, in Ludlow Street Jail, New York, where he was cast upon his return from an absence of nearly two years in Europe.

It was in June, 1887, that Solomon married Rachel Dreier of this city. Before the end of July he had borrowed from her $1,500, for the alleged purpose of extending his oilcloth business. When his borrowings had reached this amount she mentioned the transactions to her parents. They advised her to get back the money. Her husband gave her a check for $1,500 on the First National bank of Plainfield, which proved worthless, Mr. Levy having never had an account there.

Charles Steckler was retained to bring a suit for the money, and Mrs. Levy, fearing desertion, an order of arrest was granted in August 1887, by Judge Ernest Hall of the City Court. Levy eluded the Sheriff and went to Europe. He returned a few days ago, and the order of arrest was resurrected.

Mrs. Levy was granted a divorce by Judge VanBrunt in December, 1887. She has since resided with her parents in this city.

LUCIUS W. POND, DEAD.

The death of Lucius W. Pond, father of David W. Pond of this city, occurred at Worcester, Mass., Tuesday.

Mr. Pond was born at Hubbardston on April 20, 1826. For many years he was a prosperous manufacturer of machinists' tools, and a leading churchman. He served in the Common Council and the Board of Aldermen, and was three years a State Senator. He was generally looked upon as a prosperous business man and a model of integrity, until he suddenly disappeared, in October, 1875.

In spite of the ruin he made of his business career, Mr. Pond retained a great hold upon the affections of many of his church and business friends. He returned to Worcester and was welcomed back by some of the best known citizens, who, after he had worked at his old trade for a few months, put in money behind him and established the L. W. Pond Machine Tool Company, of which he was made Superintendent. He was also taken back into a full fellowship.

Mr. Pond leaves a wife, a married daughter and one son, D. W. Pond, who is at the head of the Pond Machine Tool Company of this city.

KILLED BY A FALL.

About four o'clock yesterday afternoon Mrs. William Allen of North Plainfield, fell down a flight of stairs leading to the cellar of her residence on Somerset street, and received injuries which resulted in her death an hour later. Mrs. Allen carried a porcelain jar in her hands. She started to descend the cellar stairs, when she tripped, and fell headlong to the landing below, where she was found some time afterward in a semi-conscious state, by Mr. Warren Townley who occupies apartments in the upper story of the house. The jar was broken into fragments, and the woman's face was horribly cut and disfigured. Among the first to arrive were Father Freeman of St. Joseph's church, and Doctors Endicott and Davis of this city.

The unfortunate woman was carried into the house, blood streaming from the wounds on the head. The doctors labored faithfully with her, but she died soon afterward in great agony.

The deceased's husband was at work in an adjoining field, and when notified he hurried to the scene of the accident, but his wife was too weak from loss of blood to explain in detail the occurrence and all she could say was "Will! Will!"

Mrs. Allen's maiden name was Eliza J. Flannigan, and she was a resident of New York. Eight years previous to her marriage to Mr. Allen in 1884 she became the widow of a man named Fisher. The deceased was 37 years of age.

FAREWELL TO THEIR PASTOR.

The pretty little, or rather commodious, Vincent chapel, never looked more stately than it did last Thursday, when Rev. Chas. B. Mitchell, the pastor, and his wife entered, perhaps, for the last time, previous to their ocean voyage to points named in that day's PRESS. The reverend gentleman's face was wreathed in smiles, as he flitted about among his vast congregation, stopping now and then to exchange a few words with those he met. Mrs. Mitchell was the centre of attraction from the time she entered the building, until the moment she left, and the gallant little woman was the recipient of many a hearty hand-shake during the evening.

The scribe who attended the reception in the interest of THE PRESS, is not far advanced in botany, and it is therefore hard to describe the floral decorations. Suffice it to say that on the wall in the rear of the speaker's desk was a "branch of white flowers." The attendance was large.

Councilman H. A. McGee of North Plainfield, presided, and announced the hymn, "Blest be the tie that Binds," as the first number on the informal programme. Mr. McGee followed with a touching prayer, in which he asked for the pastor's safe return and renewed strength.

Miss Laura Baker followed with a delightful soprano solo, accompanied on the piano by Mr. A. Mulford. The Misses Emma and Adelaide, and Master Clifford McGee then favored the audience with a beautiful vocal and instrumental duett, Miss McGee being the accompanist.

The chairman, or, rather master of ceremonies, had said early in the evening that fifteen minutes would be allowed between each number on the programme, for social enjoyment, and the time was well occupied between talking and patronizing the refreshment tables.

The next number on the programme was styled "Emotive Gestures," arranged by Mme. Alberti, the well-known elocutionist, and performed by Miss Hampston and Miss Morrison. Like the rest of the programme it was well received and warmly applauded. A vocal solo by Miss Baker brought the musical and instrumental portion of the programme to a close, and for an hour or so afterward general sociability prevailed.

Robbing the Bird's Nests.

Complaint is made against a number of bad boys who are in the habit of shooting birds and robbing the nests in Washington Park, North Plainfield. Boys should remember that robbing birds nests is a crime, and is punishable by a fine and imprisonment.

Twenty-one Years a Freeholder.

At the closing session of the old Union county Board of Freeholders a resolution of thanks was extended to Director J. Frank Hubbard of Plainfield for his courtesies and efficient administration of affairs as presiding officer. Mr. Hubbard then closed the twenty-one years of his service in the Board.

Grace Church.

Bishop Scarborough will visit Grace church, preaching and administering the Holy Apostolic Rite of Confirmation on Sunday evening next at 7:45 o'clock. During his stay in the city, the Bishop will be entertained by Mr Jno. B. Dumont, at whose house, No. 23 East 7th street, a reception will be held on Saturday evening, from 8 to 10 o'clock.

Reform Hall.

The audience in Reform Hall Sunday evening was not large. Pres. French being absent in consequence of a severe cold, Vice President Harper occupied the chair. Mr. Edward Titsworth conducted the devotional services, and the music was rendered by Mr. Vanderbeek and a full choir.

There being no regularly appointed speaker for the evening, Vice President Harper filled the gap, and in a short address portrayed the terrible effects of liquor drinking, and called upon all, as a duty to humanity, to dedicate unceasing efforts for the suppression of the devastating evil.

It was announced that ex-Mayor Randolph would be the speaker next Sunday evening.

A SWEET REVENGE.

Smarting under the shame of the previous week's defeat, the Crescent Y. M. C. A.'s stepped into the field last Saturday with blood in their eye and a new pitcher in the box, determined to wipe out the disgrace that had been put upon them. And they did it.

For eight consecutive innings the representatives of the Brooklyn Y. M. C. A., clad in all the cast-off raiment of their gymnasium and swimming baths, were not allowed to get around the bases nor score a single run to their credit, while the Crescents had rolled up eighteen of them.

Gately, the Crescents' new pitcher, proved himself a match for these Brooklyn boys at least. He cannot hear nor speak a word, but he could smile a most aggravating smile Saturday, as he struck out man after man from the City of Churches. For eight innings he held the visitors down to three little hits, and assisted in putting sixteen of them out. Then in the ninth pity seized him—or else he was afraid to travel home on the same train if he didn't give the Brooklynites a run—and this is the way he presented them with a tally.

Sammis was first to the bat, and although Gately had struck him out every time before and had not yet given a man his base on balls, he sent Sammis purposely to first with four wide pitches. But Condon was not so kind, and he subsequently lined the ball down to Voehl in time to catch the Brooklyn third baseman four feet short of that bag. Buckner who had also been struck out every time, was then given an easy one that he took advantage of and soaked out into centre field for two bases. But Demarest got up from his camp stool, pulled the ball down out of the atmosphere, and there was no run for Brooklyn yet. Gately then gave Prentice his first on balls, and he subsequently got home assisted by Tilton's base hit and Cornwell's error.

A detailed account of how the Crescents made their runs would be monotonous. Of course Brooklyn's 23 errors helped them, and then the ease with which they hit Packard was an unusual factor in the Crescents' victory. Of the individual playing much might be said. Condon put up a good game as usual, and Carter's was equal to it. The rest of the Brooklyns were no good, however, and Edgar especially. Mr. Tee Kay umpired the game very satisfactorily to the Crescents.

The score was:

FREEHOLDERS PROCEEDINGS.

OFFICIAL.

ELIZABETH, N. J., May 2, 1889.

Regular meeting of the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union met on Thursday, May 2, 1889, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

Present—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Briant, Doty, Donahue, Howard, Houston, Jones, Kyte, Kleinhans, Pierson, Roll, Thompson, Vanderbeek, Van Saun, Wright, West, Whaley—17.

Absent—None.

The minutes of the last meeting (omitting list of bills ordered paid) were read and on motion approved.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A petition from the taxpayers and property owners of Linden township, Elizabeth and Rahway asking that Linden-ave and Elizabeth-ave be made a county road, and, on motion of Freeholder Pierson, was unanimously ordered placed on file.

From committee on county roads:

ELIZABETH, N. J., April 26, 1889.

In regard to the Union county road bonds I have to say that I will take the entire issue.

The bonds to be ten, twenty coupon bonds, with interest at 4 per cent per annum.

If the committee do not deem it expedient for the interest of the county to dispose of the entire issue at once, we will make advances from time to time of such sums as may be necessary for the completion of the work. The advance to carry the same interest as the bonds.

Very truly yours,
JOHN KEAN, JR.

On motion of Freeholder Howard received and ordered placed on file.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

From county attorney:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

GENTLEMEN—I hereby respectfully report that the suits against the county, commenced by George M. Stiles and Thomas Forsyth, late sheriffs of the county of Union, have been settled in full, and that the suits have been discontinued and releases in full obtained from the above named and filed with the clerk.

C. D. WARD,
County Attorney.

On motion of Freeholder Howard received and ordered placed on file.

The committee on county roads reported that map of roads was not yet completed, but would report at next meeting.

RESOLUTIONS.

By Freeholder Van Saun:

Whereas, At a special meeting of this board held on Thursday, the 18th day of April, to consider the matter of the county roads, section 1, as recommended by the committee on roads, was unanimously adopted, namely the road from Elizabeth to Rahway, via St. George's-ave, and

Whereas, The action of this board in the matter has been disapproved by certain residents of Linden township at a public meeting held to discuss the question, and

Whereas, The sentiment of such meeting was that the only proper road to Rahway from Elizabeth is via the Elizabeth and Linden turnpike, therefore be it

Resolved, That the director of this board call a committee of the whole, whose duty it shall be to go over each of the roads in question, and then determine whether the action of the board in the premises shall be sustained.

Freeholder Howard moved its adoption.

On roll call, adopted, as follows:

Nays—Freeholders Pierson, Roll, Thompson, Whaley—4.

Not voting—Freeholder Briant—1.

By Freeholder West:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to make inquiry as to who would be a good, practical man for this board to select for appointment as an engineer duly qualified by knowledge and experience to supervise the laying out and making of the county roads, and make such recommendation at the earliest time possible.

On motion of Freeholder Roll, adopted unanimously.

Freeholder Vanderbeek offered a resolution to make the road from Springfield to Scotch Plains a county road, which on motion of Freeholder West, was laid on the table until the next meeting of the board.

Freeholder Van Saun asked that privilege be granted to citizens of Linden township to be heard in relation to county road between Elizabeth and Rahway, which on motion was unanimously granted.

Freeholder Howard moved that when this board adjourn it be to meet on Tuesday, May 7, 1889, at 2.30 o'clock p. m. Carried.

YOU CAN'T PLEASE EVERYBODY!

Is an old saying. But it's astonishing what a number of people we manage to please with our stock of Spring Clothing. This is especially true of the goods we make up for the little ones. It would take a good deal of space and an eloquent pen to do justice to the many pretty and tasteful garments which we design and make up for the youngsters. All of these styles are our own, and are the result of much patient thought and effort. There may be places where an assortment equal to our own is to be met with, but you'll travel a long way to find it, and when you succeed you'll note that the prices are far above our limit for a similar class of goods. We study to please, and we succeed. Mothers are pleased because they find just what suits their boys without a long hunt for it. The boys are pleased because the clothes fit them so well and look so handsome. The rich and the poor are both pleased because they secure good value, and everybody is pleased with the prices. Our Clothing for larger boys and men has the same artistic and shapely appearance, and as to value for the money, it is simply unapproachable.

A KENTUCKY ROMANCE.

How the Present Governor of That State Lost and Regained His Fortune.

"Did you ever hear how General Simon Bolivar Buckner, present Governor of Kentucky, lost and won his fortune?" asks a Louisville, Ky., correspondent of the New York Sun. It is one of the most remarkable of real romances.

General Buckner's first wife was a Miss Kingsbury, a very beautiful and accomplished woman. She inherited a large fortune, and at the time of her marriage was considered the wealthiest heiress in the South. Her estate was valued at $500,000. Through investments and judicious management General Buckner largely increased this amount.

At the opening of the war General Buckner went with the South. Most of his wife's property was in Northern cities, principally in Chicago. When he joined the Confederacy he feared that all this would be confiscated by the Union Government. After much thought it was decided to save the whole of it by deeding it to Mrs. Buckner's brother, Mr. Kingsbury, who strongly sympathized with the North. This was done, and General Buckner took command of a division of the Southern army.

Young Kingsbury had become a gallant soldier with the Federals. One day as he was going into battle he said he had a premonition of death. Remembering the trust the Buckners had imposed upon him, he told the story to a brother officer, and wrote an account of the conveyance of the large estate upon a slip of paper. He requested his companion in arms to put it away, and in case of accident to send it or deliver it to the Buckner family when opportunity presented itself after the war. The young officer complied with the request. The battle came on and Kingsbury was among the slain.

The war ended and Kingsbury's friend went to Europe. The rush of incidents had caused him to forget all about the paper. He did not return to America for several years. Shortly after his return he was in Washington and met General Burnside, whom he had known during the war. He inquired of the General concerning the Buckners of Kentucky. General Burnside told him how General Buckner had made over his property to his brother-in-law, Kingsbury, who had been killed in battle. The property had then reverted to young Kingsbury's heirs, as no will or memorandum of the transfer had been found.

"But there is a memorandum," exclaimed the young officer, "and I have it, too."

The next day after the dinner party he started out to find the document, of which he had not before thought since the death of young Kingsbury. After a long search he found the paper, and a tedious and costly lawsuit resulted, for it clearly established General Buckner's right to a great property, the larger part of which consists of some buildings in the heart of Chicago, from which he receives a rental of $75,000 a year.

THE MALE SHOPPER.

A Nuisance of the Great Dry Goods Stores That Seems to Be on the Increase.

"Is that a man?"

"No, that's a male shopper."

"And what is a male shopper?"

"Oh, I see."

This brief and breezy interview, says the New York Star, took place in the gentlemen's furnishing department of one of the great dry-goods establishments which line Sixth avenue, between Fourteenth and Twenty-third streets, the party of the first part being a pleasant-faced, motherly woman in front of the counter, and the party of the second part an equally pleasant, but thoroughly annoyed, clerk behind it.

A youth with a soft-brown derby hat a size too small for his small head, a cape overcoat of a pronounced check, patent leather shoes covered with light gaiters, a ponderous walking-stick and a pretty bow, [illegible] had just left the counter, where he had forced the patient employe to haul down a dozen boxes and overturn half the stock of shirts, neckwear and silken half-hose without making a sale.

When the work of upheaval was complete the youth remarked pleasantly:

"Thanks, awfully. I'll call again."

And flitted away like the giddy thing that he was, to pass before the Hoffman and give the ladies a treat of his beauty.

As the clerk sought to reconstruct his goods he ventilated his sentiments by the use of several emphatic words.

"I'd rather wait on twenty women than one of those dude shoppers," he continued. "They never buy anything worth more than fifty cents, and yet I'm forced by the rules of the house to bring out every thing they ask to look at. I can tell one of them as soon as he strikes me, but that doesn't do any good. I can only grin and bear it."

"Do many of them come in here?" "Yes, too many. [illegible]"

HINTS ON MARRIAGE.

Why Young Couples Should Not Live in Boarding Houses.

[illegible] until they were sixty years old they would not have sense enough to make it a success. These are the cases where marriage is a failure. And young men should be careful to get a helpmeet, with all that it implies, instead of a helpmate, as somebody has said. Some old cranky has defined getting married as "An abstract desire on the part of a young man to pay some nice young lady's board." Now the idea of a young couple going to boarding after getting married is one of the most ridiculous things I can conceive. If the girl does not want to go to housekeeping, she shouldn't get married. If they haven't money enough to start keeping house, wait until they have, and they will appreciate it so much the more. They'll never save any money while boarding. I had a young friend who was boarding in a private family, and who became smitten with the charms of his landlady's daughter and married her. And instead of going to housekeeping, they continued boarding with her ma, and whereas the aforesaid young lady had been doing all the work down town, now she can stay at home and play lady, and visit and gossip as only people who have lived in boarding houses know how, and he, poor fellow, has his nose to the grindstone earning enough to pay their board, where when he was starting out he had only his own to pay. Shrewd mamma, sharp daughter. Verily she had what the vulgar would call a "snap." Young people, if you will get married go to housekeeping, even if you only have money enough to furnish one room. You'll be the happier and never regret it. And always live within your income. Do not build in advance on a raise in salary which may not come.

DARCY'S JEANNIE.

WE were speeding East from the frontier, fast as the express train could rattle.

He was seated facing me, grizzled and gray, old, but erect and hard-fleshed. He sat well forward, as though to make room for accoutrements, the poise of his head and body, the passing of his sinewy hand over his close-shaven lip where the mustache ought to have been, told me at once of the "old saber."

Several times I caught his eye closely scanning me; at last, with hand to forehead, in quick salute, he spoke:

"Beg pardon, sir; but ar'nt you in the service?"

I replied that I had that honor, and further said that I recognized the soldier in him.

"Proud to know that it ain't rubbed off yet, sir. I could tell you from your set up the moment I clapped eyes on you."

Well, we talked and talked, at least he did and with the simple honesty of the soldier, recognizing my interest, he told me much of his life, and here's part of it:

"I 'listed when I was but a boy, not twelve months from the old sod, sir, and boy and man I ate Uncle Sam's rations and burnt his powder for nigh forty year.

"Wounded? Oh, yes! Off and on I'd get a shot or a hack, but all that goes with the fun you have; and sure it's part of the trade, ain't it? I was a wild slip of a boy at first, but I married young, as good luck 'd have it, and married well, a better soldier's wife never stepped than the girl I won. She kept me up to the mark, sir, and made all the man that was in me tell for all it was worth, and it's me that's proud to say that there are few officers, high or low, of the old army, that ain't glad to give the good word and honest grip to First Sergeant Bernard Darcy of the [illegible] dragoons.

"Why did I leave the service? Because me heart was broke, and it's broke again to carry the coat sleeve without the stripes. But I'll tell you of it.

"It was just after the war, in sixty-six, and we were quartered at —— Barracks. The wife and Jeannie, that's our daughter, sir, had come to join the command again; they had left when we took the field. Jeannie was then just short fourteen; but my! when she came back, she was that of a beauty and a lady that, faith! she took the breath out me mouth.

"We had fine accommodations at the barracks, for the wife and myself were favorites, and yet I misdoubted that it was the right place for such a diamond jewel as our girl. So when with her independent spirit she would go into the city to learn the dress-making, I forced myself to give consent. But off and on, two or three times a week, and always of a Sunday, the darling was with us.

"There was one Liftinint in our troop that I had learned to love as a son; brave and true a lad he was as ever threw leg over saddle. I knew, or thought I knew, that he was all good, yet I could not but worry when I found him making chances and excuses to see our Jeannie, and watched the face of my girl when he came near her. His people were millionaires and aristocrats, and what could be between the son of such and an old sergeant's daughter?

"There came one day, in the evening, when I were looking about in the stables, and in not an over-pleasant humor, when up comes the Liftinint, holding out his hand to me. Charles Foster his name was.

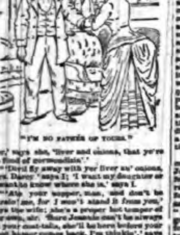
"'I must bid you good-bye in a hurry, Sergeant Darcy,' says he. 'I want to catch the train in the city.'

"'And where might I ask would you be going of the suddint, sir?' said I, taken all aback.

"'Oh, I'm going—going away,' said he, kind of confused like. 'I sent in my resignation some time ago, but we kept it quiet. The acceptance and order has just come, and now I'm off. Remember me always and kindly, sergeant,' and he was gone.

"Well, that upset me entirely and I went to my quarters, wondering how Jeannie would like that news, for it was her regular evening to come to us.

"So when I walked in and slammed the door, I looked for her, but no Jeannie there. 'Where's the girl?' I said to the wife. 'How's I to know,' says she, 'she'll be here presently I've no doubt. There's your supper,' says she, 'liver and onions, that ye're so fond of, [illegible].'



"I'M NO FATHER OF YOURS."

"'Devil fly away with yer liver an' onions, Mrs. Darcy,' says I; 'I want my daughter or I want to know where she is,' says I.

"'Ate your supper, man, and don't be [illegible] me, for I won't stand it from you,' says the wife; she's a proper but temper of her own, sir. 'Sure Jeannie can't be always at your coat-tails, she'll be here before your [illegible] comes back, I'm thinkin',' says she.

"Well, I couldn't take no satisfaction out of my supper, and a better no man ever had. I lit my pipe and stepped out in behind the stables. Soon I saw a carriage drive up, very quiet, and it was my Jeannie, in silks and satins, and with her was Liftinint Foster. I stood petrified to the spot while I see her slip out and make her way to our door and open it.

"Then I followed and found the child on her knees before her crying mother. [illegible]

[illegible] to the Continental,' says she; 'you've been sent for twice in this hour,' says she.

"'Who is it and what is it?' says I.

"'Never a one of me knows,' says she. 'You go and find out.'

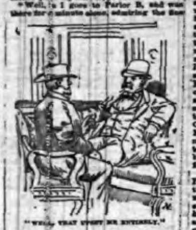
"'May be it's the railroad job,' says I, for you see I was trying to get signal man on the new line.

"So up I goes to the hotel, and marches to the clerk, bold as a sinner. 'My name's Bernard Darcy,' says I. 'There's some one here's been sending for me.'

"With that he touches a bell, and he tells the black man: 'Take this gentleman to Parlor B,' says he.

"'Gentleman!' says I to myself, as I follows the darkey up the marble stairs. 'Parlor B!' says I; 'next you us, Sergeant Darcy! may be it's president of the road they'll be making you.' I was joking myself to quiet my nerves, you see.

"Well, as I goes to Parlor B, and was there for a minute alone, admiring the fine curtains and the like, when I hears the swish of a woman's dress to the side of me I faced about instanter.



"WELL, THAT UPSET ME ENTIRELY."

"There stood Jeannie, our Jeannie, only more beautiful, more sweet, than ever, with the tears in her grand eyes looking the love her tongue couldn't speak.

"I stepped back. 'Oh daddy! daddy!' she cried, just like when she were a little baby. 'Daddy! don't drive me from you again!'

"'I'm no father of yours, your no daughter of mine, you are—'

"'My wife!' said a man's clear voice right behind me. I turned my head and there stood my Liftinint Foster.

"'My wife now, as she was my wife the night you drove her from you,' said he, putting his strong arm about her.

"I saw it all then, my pride, my temper, my dishonest suspicion, had made me blind to the truth that I could have learned at any time. All that saved me from dropping to the floor or turning like a coward and bolting, was a little grasp about my knees and a little voice saying: 'Kiss me, gran'papa!'

"I looked down, and there was my darling, my Jeannie herself, a child again.

"We talked, God forgive us, without ever thinking of the poor mother at home until Jeannie begged to be taken to her; then we went, baby and all, fast as a carriage could roll.

"'Is that you, Bernard?' says the wife from the bed-room; 'I hope you had good luck—I was tired waiting. Your supper's behind the stove; I got liver and onions for a treat for you.'

"'Divil fly away with your liver and onions, Mrs. Darcy!' says I. 'Come out of that and see the treat I have here in my arms for you,' says I.

"But Jeannie was past me and in the mother's arms before the words were all out of my mouth, and the crying and hugging and kissing made them look as big lunatics as I were just then myself.

"We talked all of that blessed night, the little Jeannie sleeping in the arms of her auld grandaddy. The Liftinint had married my girl before bringing her to ask our consent. When I drove her from me they went to Europe as she could be educated to do credit to his people. When they met her they fell in love with her. Who wouldn't?

"So it was settled that I was to turn farmer after their country place. 'May be,' says I, 'you young people want a little small change,' says I; 'there's a trifle of five thousand dollars or so in the bank that I've been saving up for somebody these years past.'

"'Oh, you proud, stubborn old daddy,' sobbed my girl, 'and you wouldn't touch our money, thinking what you did of me, even if you starved. I might have known it.'

"'Whist, darling!' says I, 'it's all right now, anyway.' And so it is, sir. The wife and I are on the fine place bought with their money, and we're not too proud to be beholden to them, though they don't think of such a thing; and the youngsters—there's more of them now—boast of their old soldier grandad."

We were near the city by this time. I brought out my flask. "Will you join me, sergeant?" I asked.

"I'd be proud and happy to some other time, sir," he replied; "but I'm going to meet them; there's a fine boy, sir, to be christened Darcy Foster; the old grandmother wasn't come, but I had to, and I'd rather have the kisses of my children without any drinkin'. You'll excuse me this time, I'm sure."

As I sprang from the cars I spied the old soldier in the midst of a ring of happy, noisy youngsters, with a noble man trying to control their overwhelming welcome to their grandfather, and I breathed low: "God bless Sergeant Darcy's Jeannie and all blessed by her love."

ALEX. DUKE BAILIE.

THE SPARROWHAWK.

How the Craft Was Preserved in a Sand Dune—[illegible] in 1863 by a Patriotic Son of New England—One of the Newest Relics in Plymouth Hall.

One of the wonderful stories of both land and sea is the tale of the vessel Sparrowhawk. The ship was wrecked on Cape Cod in the winter of 1627, on a voyage from England to Virginia, and for a time its passengers were sheltered by the pilgrim fathers at Plymouth. The vessel was preserved in a sand dune about two miles from Orleans harbor, which opens on the Atlantic, and until 1863 was lost to recollection. It was lifted into a creek by a great storm, and then by the incidents of sand drift was covered up. The vessel was well-built of oak, and there was no trace of decay, while all iron about her had disappeared. Her upper works had been burned, probably after she was stranded. When whole she was probably a vessel of seventy tons, and her midship section was semi-circular, showing good carrying capacity and stability, while her deadwood was very long, which indicated a long run, and consequently, a fast sailer. The ribs were pieced up in a manner which had always been thought to be a modern innovation in ship carpentry. It is also mentioned that the hull showed but one mast-step, and indicates the probability that the vessel had a small mast away aft, after the at that time common rig of the ketch.

The Sparrowhawk was big enough to cross the Atlantic, says the Providence Journal, but had a hull only twenty-eight feet and ten inches long. She had a great rake at both stem and stern, and measured forty feet long on deck, with a depth of nine and a half feet. She is said to have had "many passengers in her and sundrie goods," and from what Governor Bradford's "History of Plymouth plantation" tells of the wreck her importance was comparable with that of any vessel in the trans-Atlantic service of those days. The history of [illegible]. Bradford on this point reads:

"They had lost themselves at sea, either by the insufficiency of ye maister or his illness; for he was sick and lame of ye scurvie, so that he could but lie in ye cabin doore and give direction; and it would seem he was badly assisted, either with mate or mariners; or else ye fear and unrulines of ye passengers were such as they made him steere a course betweene ye southwest and ye northwest that they might fall with some land, whatsoever it was they cared not. For they had been six weeks at sea, and had no water, nor beere, nor any woode left, but had burnt up all their emptie caske; only one of ye company had a hogshead of wine or two, which was allso almost spente, so as they feared they should be starved at sea or consumed with diseases, which made them runne this desperate course. But it pleased God that though they came so neare ye shoulds of Cape Codd (Peaked hill and [illegible]) [illegible] they came right before a small blind harbor that lies about ye middle of Manamoyake bay to ye southward of Cape Codd, with a small gale of wind, and about high water touched upon a barr of sand that lyes before it, but had no hurte, ye sea being smooth; so they laid out an anchor. But towards the evening the wind sprunge up at sea and was so rough as broke their cable and beat them over the barr into ye harbor, where they saved their lives and goods, though much were hurte with salt water; for with beating they had sprung ye butt end of a plank or two, and beat out their oakum; but they were soone over and ran on a drie flat within the harbor, close by a beach, so at low water they got out their goods on drie shore and dried those that were wette, and saved most of their things without any great loss; neither was the ship much hurt, but she might be mended and made serviceable againe."

When every thing and every body was ashore in the wilderness, [illegible] Indians at length offered to guide them to Plymouth, and two men were sent with guides to bring assistance. It was supposed that the vessel could be saved, and some repairs were made upon her, but a storm arose and she was thrown upon the shore. The shipwrecked company went to Plymouth and remained there until the end of the next summer, when they were taken to Virginia.

The creek in which the vessel went ashore became in time a swamp, and at last was lost sight of. A sand dune rose above it, and this was for a century called "The Old Ship." The wreck remained covered for over two hundred and forty years, with the exception of a single day in 1782, when the sands slid away and showed its timbers. But nobody cared about it then. It was not uncovered again until 1863, upon May 6 of which year it was seen by Messrs. Solomon Linnell, 2d, and Alfred Rogers. Mr. Linnell had passed the very same spot without seeing the relic two days before that time. The hulk remained where it had been found for several months, and was visited by many antiquaries. In August, 1863, it was again covered with sand for a short time. Mr. Amos Otis, of Barnstable, about that time made a statement of the finding and history of the wreck, and a little later Mr. Charles W. Livermore, now of this city, but then a resident of Boston, together with Mr. Leander Crosby, of Orleans, dug the wreck out of its sandy bed. Mr. Livermore paid the bill and it was removed to Boston. It was exhibited on Boston common for six weeks and was then brought to this city and was on exhibition for a week.

Mr. Livermore has given the relic to the Pilgrim Society, which owns Plymouth Hall, the home of so many colonial relics, at Plymouth, Mass. He had kept it in this city, in storage, from 1865 till February 15, 1889. It had always been his intention to give it to an antiquarian society. The Pilgrim Society was written to and two members of it visited this city and looked over the old timbers. They found them apparently as solid as they were in 1863, and Mr. Livermore passed them into the society's hands for all time. The timbers were boxed up and sent off, and they are now at Plymouth, where ship carpenters will set them up in Plymouth Hall, if they have not already done so.

The Oldest Piece of Iron.

The oldest pieces of wrought iron now known are probably the sickle blade found by Belzoni under the base of a sphinx in Karnac, near Thebes; the blade found by Colonel Vyse, imbedded in the masonry of the great pyramids; the portion of a cross-cut saw exhumed at Nimrod by Mr. Layard—all of which are now in the British Museum. A wrought bar of Damascus steel was presented by King Porus to Alexander the Great, and the razor-steel of China for many centuries has surpassed all European steel in temper and durability of edge. The Hindoos appear to have made wrought iron directly from the ore, without passing it through the furnace from time immemorial, and elaborately wrought masses of iron are still found in India which date from the early centuries of the Christian era.

TOLD BY PREACHERS.

Queer Experiences of Some Noted New York Ministers.

Dr. Howard Crosby's Encounter with a Drunken Passenger—Funny Wedding Fees—How an Episcopal Clergyman Was Buzzed by a Groom.

The duties of clergymen often lead to strange experiences and most preachers who have spent a large portion of their lives in their profession could tell of many quaint happenings in their intercourse with their fellow-men, says the New York Journal.

Dr. Howard Crosby says of himself that a short time ago he was in a Fourth avenue horse-car, when a drunken man entered and began to use profane and offensive language. None of the passengers told him to "shut up," but the fellow became worse, and Dr. Crosby went over to him and began talking to him soothingly. The fellow instantly quieted down, and as he got up to leave the car scowled at the man who told him to shut up, but turned with an amiable expression on his face to Dr. Crosby and said, patting his back familiarly:

"I like you, old feller; you know how it is yourself."

A well-known clergyman in New York City was one evening belated when returning home from a pastoral visit to a sick member of his congregation on the West side, at Eighty-fourth street, near Eleventh avenue. The night was very dark, and he struck into a number of vacant lots and finally lost his bearings. He saw a man a short distance before him and asked him the nearest way to a Ninth Avenue Elevated station. The man proved to be drunk, and the clergyman thought he would improve the occasion by giving him a short lecture on the evils of alcohol. Bracing himself against a lamp-post the man said:

"You're a preacher, mister!"

The clergyman admitted the allegation, and the man, shaking his forefinger unsteadily, said:

"See that, now. You're tryin'—hic—to show me the road to Heaven, an' ha' ter ask a sinner like me for the road ter New York. Way, doncher learn the roads on earth fust?"

Rev. Robert S. MacArthur, the pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, has had some unique experiences. He is sometimes asked to unite in marriage an Irish or German girl and a Chinaman. In such cases he always institutes a rigid inquiry to find that all is right before he unites the pair.

On one or two occasions when the bride was Irish he has been asked to give the Chinaman an Irish name in performing the ceremony, as the girl did not want her friends on the other side to know that she had married a Chinaman, and he found it difficult to impress on them the fact that it would be wrong.

It is in the wedding fees occasionally tendered that the greatest oddities of human nature are illustrated. Mr. McArthur told the writer that he knew a country clergyman who recently married a couple and was given a bag of potatoes as a fee. On another occasion this clergyman was given a valuable colt as a wedding fee. A brother clergyman received a present from a grateful bridegroom of a dog for tying the nuptial knot.

A kiss from the bride is now and then offered. Rev. W. S. Rainsford, of St. George's Episcopal Church in this city, says that once when he was a curate in Canada his rector was called upon to unite a couple in marriage and was asked by the bridegroom to take as a fee the first kiss from the bride. This would usually be thought a privilege, but the good rector didn't look at it in that light. The fact was that the happy pair were both full-blooded negroes. Mr. Rainsford in telling the story to the writer, said:

A very mean trick was played by a groom on the pastor of a Mariner's church in New York City, whose name the writer has been requested to withhold. The groom was a respectably-dressed young fellow, and his wife a dapper, smiling young girl, who did not appear the equal in station of the groom. After the nuptial knot was tied the groom slipped a paper apparently containing a gold coin into the clergyman's hand, and went away with the expression on his face of a man who had done a generous act.

After the couple had gone the clergyman unwound one paper. Then another envelope appeared, and then a third, which was tied over the coin. Two more papers were unrolled, and a shining new one-cent piece was revealed.

A more elaborate trick was, however, played upon a prominent Episcopal clergyman, at present living in this city, by a bridegroom. This clergyman is well known in social circles, and to prevent his friends keeping up a perpetual joke at his expense his name, by request, is not given.

The pair who came to be married were an honest-looking young fellow of handsome appearance and good address and a young girl scarce out of her teens.

The bridegroom, after the ceremony, produced a fifty-dollar bill and said, in a shamefaced way:

"I would like to give you this bill as a fee for making me so happy, but I feel as if I could not afford it. I could spare ten dollars. Would you—would you—er—mind giving me the change?"

"Certainly not," said the minister, as he took the bill and went to the drawer. He took out forty-five dollars in bills and gave them to the bridegroom, telling him he would only accept five dollars as a fee. The married couple departed, but when the clergyman tried to pass the fifty-dollar bill it was found to be counterfeit.

A Chemical Experiment.

The Practical Teacher gives the following simple experiment in chemistry, which any child can try: Cut three leaves of red cabbage into small pieces, and, after placing them in a basin, pour a pint of boiling water over them, letting them stand an hour; then pour off the liquid into a decanter. It will be of a fine blue color. Then take four wine-glasses—into one put six drops of strong vinegar; into another six drops of solution of soda; into a third the same quantity of a strong solution of alum; and let the fourth glass remain empty. Fill up the glasses from the decanter, and the liquid poured into the glass containing the acid will quickly change to a beautiful red; that poured into the one with soda will be a fine green; that poured into the alum will turn to a purple, while that poured into the empty glass will remain unchanged.

A LIMITED VOCABULARY.

Belinda was a maiden
Divinely picturesque
As any child of "Aidenn," (See Poe, in "Tales Grotesque");
Her manners were most gentle,
Her voice was music sweet,
And I grew sentimental
When first we chanced to meet.

We danced a waltz together,
And oh, the way she danced!
Each little foot a feather
Across the carpet glanced;
We ogled o'er the ices,
Until my heart said: "This Must be what paradise is—Superlatively bliss."

In all our conversation,
We cordially agreed,
Her highest commendation
Was always: "Yes, indeed!"
I criticised, I queried,
It grieves me to confess,
I actually grew wearied
With "Yes," and "Yes, Oh, Yes."

But girls that are so stupid
Oft have a pretty face;
They get the help of Cupid,
And win us by their grace.
Thought I, since she's so willing Forever to agree,
Some day, I'll bet a shilling,
She'll answer "Yes" to me.

So at the beach last summer,
Beneath the moonlight clear,
I sought to capture from her
That affirmation dear;
But her vocabulary—
'Twas limited, and so,
Her language just to vary,
She tenderly said "No!"
—Paul Modest, in Munsey's Weekly.

LOSING HER HOLD.

A Summer Sermon and the Fruits It Bore.

The schoolmaster and his wife, after morning meeting was over, took their way as usual down Prout's Lane and across the hill homeward. The path was narrow; the dominie walked first. He made a remark at long intervals to his wife behind him, but without looking back.

"Squire wasn't out. Reckon his lumbago's worse?"

"'S likely."

"The doctor had his little grandchild with him. I suppose his daughter has come for the summer?"

"I reckon she has."

There was a long silence after that, broken only by the buzz of the bees in the red clover and the ck'k-k of the grasshoppers through the hot grass. The old man stopped, as he always did on Sunday, to see how much the corn in the lower field had grown during the week and to gaze meditatively at the pigs in their pen. But Mrs. Holmes had no thought to-day for the pigs or corn. She walked with her head bent on her breast, almost forgetting to hold up the skirt of her Sunday merino out of the grass. There had been a strange preacher that day—a bold man with a quick, sharp tone like the bell of a born to wandering sheep—very different from Father Langley's prolonged, drowsy hum. One or two of his sentences rang in Ann Holmes' ears.

"While you live, live! You wrap yourselves in selfishness and fat content as in grave-clothes before you are dead. The world is full of your brothers, starving, cold, ignorant. Go to them! You owe them service to the last breath of your life."

Mrs. Holmes had asked the doctor's wife anxiously what she thought of the sermon as they came out of the church-yard.

Mrs. Perry shook her head contemptuously.

"He's one of these half-cracked, sensation preachers. What has Amity township to do with the starving poor? We keep up our almshouse well. Let the big towns see to their own paupers!"

Ann was comforted for the moment, but she remained uneasy. That hint about the grave clothes seemed a personal hit at herself. Could the man know—!

She hurried past the schoolmaster when they reached their own gate, going up the spotless board walk, with beds of geraniums and roses on either side, to the side door. She could not resist a complacent glance at those beds. Not a weed; the brown earth sifted fine and smooth. There was no such garden in the village; no kitchen was so exquisitely neat, no parlor so speckless and prim. Surely her conscience told her she was a good Christian woman, fulfilling her duty, and had no cause for the wretch and misery of soul which she felt just now.

She went up the stairs to her own chamber, laid off her bonnet carefully, and then unlocked a drawer in the press. She did not need to lift the white towels. She knew perfectly well what was pinned up in them. The underclothing of snowy linen, the worked flannels, the fine woolen shroud. She had put in every stitch in them. Could the man have known!

Every matron in Amity had her "funeral stuff" provided. It was a matter of pride to them, just as Mrs. B., in Boston, would delight in her old satsuma or her Corot. The Amity people gloried in their new cemetery. The Holmeses had their lot like the rest, a narrow one, for there were only two to be buried in it. Ann had her choicest roses set out there. She had directed in her will every detail of the trimming on her coffin.

She thrust her hand under the shroud now and pulled out a little bag of gold coin. They were the savings of years; pennies scrimped out of clothes, milk, meat. They were to pay for the handsome granite monument "Erected to the memory of Daniel Holmes and Ann his wife."

"While you live—live!"

She dropped the bag as if some one spoke at her back, locked the drawer and went down stairs.

The "piece" was spread as usual on Sunday noons; flaky bread, clover-scented honey, delicious pies. Ann, as she cut the pie, was comforted by a sense of spiritual well being. No woman made such crust in Amity. No woman was more faithful at meeting, at Sunday-school, at missionary society. In what had she come short? her starved soul demanded of its Maker. Every duty, great and small, had been well finished.

Mrs. Holmes was fifty-five years of age, but she used to speak of herself as near her grave. She twisted up her hair in a wisp, and wore the scuttle bonnets proper to old age. The work of life, she held, was finished for her and Daniel. They had paid for the farm, so that when one died the other was sure of maintenance; the farm and house were in perfect order, the cemetery lot was bought. The money for the monument was a kind of frilling embroidery on this perfected life, the handsome flourish to the signature which closed the deed.

As she sat pouring out the tea, thinking these things over, her husband "reckoned" again that the squire's lumbago was bad, and that the doctor's daughter was at home. Then he yawned drearily and fell asleep in his chair in the sun.

How much of his time he spent in yawning and sleeping! Yet thirty years ago Daniel Holmes was an eager teacher, keeping well abreast with the knowledge and ideas of his time, living in the world of books, newspapers, music and pictures. She, too, had been a live woman then. But they had come out of town into this village, and set themselves to scrape together money to buy this farm. What was this change that had come to them? Had they been really spinning their grave clothes out of selfishness?

Ann went to afternoon service; but she did not hear a word of Father Langley's discourse. She was back in the town; long-forgotten voices sounded in her ears. There was Dan's brother, Jack, poor fellow! She saw him plainly in the crowd. A gay, affectionate lad who might have turned out well if he had been guided! But he had married a feather-headed girl, and Ann, out of patience, had turned them both adrift.

As they walked home that evening she said to the schoolmaster: "How long is it since we heard from John, Daniel?"

He did not reply at first, and when he did it was with a strained, annoyed voice.

"Twenty-six year."

"I wish I and Abby could have hit it off together. I am 'feared that it was not right to shove them off, with neither money nor religion 'for a staff.'"

Daniel made no reply, but Ann understood his silence as a more bitter reproach than words.

The next morning she brought to him a small canvas bag.

"There is some money I had saved for burying expenses, Daniel," she said. "I'd like to take it instead for us to spend a week in Philadelphia."

"What tomfoolery's that?"

"There's no poor folk in Amity, 'n may be we might see some there as we could give service to. And you could look up the libraries and museums."

"Nonsense!"

But his eye gleamed, attentive.

"And may be we might meet John."

But four days later Amity was shaken to its center by the news that the schoolmaster and his wife had gone for an outing to Philadelphia.

"There's a queer customer," whispered one of the attendants in the old Franklin Library to another a week afterwards. "He comes every day, and goes from shelf to shelf breathless, as if he had not touched a book for years. Been buried in the country, I suppose."

"And why should anybody who can live out of doors and dig want to smell this musty leather?" grumbled the other lad, who was lean and stooped, with an ugly cough.

He went up to Daniel, however, and helped him in his explorations.

Our country pilgrims put up at an old-fashioned inn in the lower part of the city. Daniel came back to it at night fairly panting with the triumphs of his researches. He had visited kindergartens, industrial schools and museums, where art and science were taught without charge to the poorest.

"As for the libraries, whole continents of knowledge have been discovered while I was dozing and snoring in Amity," he exclaimed.

Ann had made her rounds among the asylums, the hospitals for children, the free classes, the creches. Her cold, gray eyes were dim and wet.

"Half the world seem to be cold and hungry, and the other half are working to warm and feed them," she said. "And I could find nothing to do but to make fine my shroud and gravestone! But have you got any trace of John or Abby, Daniel?"

"No; I doubt it's no use, Ann."

But as Ann woke day by day, and got her hold upon the world again, her search became more energetic. One day she came in at noon red with excitement.

"I've found them, Daniel! That is to say, John and Abby are dead; but they've left three children. The eldest boy supports them, and he is that consumptive lad in the library you took such a fancy to. Come right along! Don't stop for dinner! Come! Three children! And the Lord never before gave us one!"

Mrs. Ann Holmes' house is no longer the neatest in Amity. The chubby little girl of fourteen who helps her in the kitchen leaves her work and school books here and there, and the baby who tags after Ann from morning until night drops her greasy bread and butter even in the sacred parlor, unrebuked.

"What's a clean floor compared with the flesh coming on to their bones!" she asks, triumphantly. "Look at Albert! He's another boy. He's a born farmer. That library was killing him."

"I'll have no abuse of libraries," Daniel says. "I'm going up for study twice a year. It doesn't do to lose your hold on the world. You've got to keep step while you live."

"Y-es," Ann replies, absently. She is looking out a hymn simple enough for Abby to understand, and after that she is going to make some flannel petticoats for baby before the cold weather comes. They are cut out and folded neatly in her basket, and the drawer up-stairs which held her fine shroud is empty.—Rebecca Harding Davis, in Congregationalist.

GUM-CHEWING GIRLS.

The Amount of Power Wasted Every Day by Each One of Them.

The gum-chewing mania having become a question of National importance, like that of the utilization of the water-power of Niagara Falls, one of the Chicago public-school principals has, according to a Chicago journal, recently taken the necessary time from his arduous duties to compute statistics on the loss of power daily expended—wasted, I may say—in the gum-chewing practice. In arriving at correct mathematical conclusions as to the energy required to keep the gum-mills grinding, our learned friend estimates the gum-raising capacity of the fair gum-chewer at the rate of eight ounces per "chaw." This is on the supposition that the mouth is opened half an inch each time in the act of chewing, and that the gum is of the elastic or non-sticky variety, thereby giving the minimum of power required in the operation. With this basis as a starting-point, the professor easily deduces a startling series of tables of rates, weights and measures, which can be epitomized. In the first place, if the jaw be raised one-half an inch with each effort in the act of gum-chewing, with the process kept up on an average of ten hours a day—some chewers chew till late at night, and others, even, when asleep—each individual motion of the jaw consuming a second of time, the aggregated opening of a gum-chewer's jaws in one day alone would represent a mouth fifteen hundred feet across, measuring the abyss in its widest diameter. But, since the jaw travels back with every motion, retracing each successive stretch, the space traveled in a day on the ten-hour plan is double the foregoing figures, or three thousand feet—something like three-fifths of a mile. Again, if the force expended per "chaw" represents a lifting capacity of eight ounces, in the average day, as Mr. Principal figures it, enough muscular energy is exerted—wasted—to enable each individual gum-chewer to have hoisted from a cellar seven and a half feet deep thirty buckets of coal each weighing thirty pounds. In some future article I may—and I may not—pursue the interesting subject, and quote from the professor's work the amazing possibilities in store for home and society when the gum-chewing craze shall have been brought into subjugation and made to serve humanity in channels of usefulness and progress.

THE PROFESSOR.

The Widow Spencer's Experience with Electric Spectacles.

"THERE'S somebody knockin' at the door, Mrs. Spencer," gasped the widow's little maid, Norah, bursting into the kitchen one summer morning.

"La, me! what shall I do?" exclaimed the mistress, who, with her hands in the dough, was surely unfit to greet company.

"Go an' tell 'em I'm busy," she finally commanded, hurriedly putting away the bread-pan and going to the sink to wash her plump hands.

Norah languidly started for the front door, but she did not relish her task, and before she had reached her destination she was overtaken and passed by the energetic widow, who opened the door herself.

On the threshold stood a man whose appearance indicated that he was a Count or member of Congress at least. Tall, distinguished, with heavy black side-whiskers and an eye-glass, he was really a being to command attention.

"Ah, permit me to introduce myself," he said, as the hostess appeared, and bowing low he handed her a heavy beveled-edged card, which said:

PROF. DE MAUKE,
OCULIST
AND ELECTRICIAN.

The printing was very fine, and the widow could no more read it than she could fly.

He saw her embarrassment, and haughtily took the pasteboard from her.

"Permit me, mademoiselle, to decipher the very minute printing," and he read the words with a rising inflection on "electrician."

Before there was time for the lady, astounded at so much greatness, to speak, he continued: "Have I the honor of addressing Mlle. Spencer, ah?"

"My name is Spencer," responded the widow, at last finding her tongue, "but there's Mrs. before it. Won't you come in?"

"Thanks; I will, for I have important business to transact with Mademoi——; beg pardon, madam. It is so easy to mistake youth and beauty."

This last compliment was so broad that the widow, who was "fat, fair and forty," could not help blushing, and the faintest semblance of a pleased smile was visible on her face when she sat down with her guest in the parlor.

Many men had called on Mrs. Spencer since the year of mourning was over, nearly a half decade ago, but none had had the air and bearing of this one. Her impressible mind, ignorant of the great world's ways, and easily influenced by the arrogance of the stranger, was all in a whirl, and she hardly knew how to demean herself.

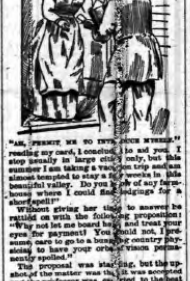
"Pardon my mentioning the subject," said the professor, urbanely; "but I noticed when I handed you my card that you had trouble reading it. May I ask if your eyes trouble you?"

"Not a—that is, only a little sometimes when the sun shines in them," answered Mrs. Spencer, evasively.

"O, I see, madam. You need not be at all diffident about it. Frequently girls of fourteen are compelled to remain at home constantly on account of weak sight, and you need have no compunctions because you who are probably ten years older than that begin to be troubled."

"To be honest," admitted she, mollified by the remark, "I am beginning to be a little—just a little—near-sighted. But I won't wear glasses, though."

"Quite right, although a great many people do. However, as to my reason for calling. I am a professor of the eye, an oculist. I stopped to inquire the way to the next town, but when I saw your difficulty in reading my card, I concluded to aid you. I stop usually in large cities only, but this summer I am taking a vacation trip and am almost tempted to stay a few weeks in this beautiful valley. Do you know of any farm-house where I could find lodgings for a short spell?"



"AH, PERMIT ME TO INTRODUCE MYSELF."

Without giving her time to answer he rattled on with the following proposition: "Why not let me board here, and treat your eyes for payment? You could not, I presume, care to go to a bungling country physician to have your orbs of vision permanently spoiled."

The proposal was startling, but the upshot of the matter was that it was accepted and the professor was escorted to the best chamber.

How pleasant he appeared when he came down to dinner! He talked of art and science, and told her of his life, how he had begun poor and worked his way up until he was worth a quarter of a million, with no one to share it.

The widow thought she had never met such a fine gentleman, and in turn confided to him a history of the late Spencer and how he had left her the two-hundred-acre farm upon which she lived and which joined that of her brother Jonas.

The boarder grew more confidential after this, and, dinner being finished, he explained how he had made so much money. It was through electricity.

"I have applied the electric current to medicine in such a way as to produce the most startling results. You have no idea of the wonders I have performed. Why, the deaf are made to hear, the halt and lame to walk and the blind see."

"La! that is mighty wonderful!" exclaimed the widow.

"Yes, and you shall see for yourself, madam, what I can do."

"Oh, professor, how?"

"By treating your own eyes."

"With electricity?"

"Yes; I will begin in the morning."

He was as good as his word and came upon the porch in the morning with a mysterious package in his hand.

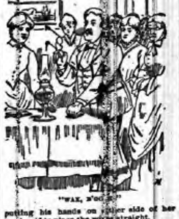
"Here are a pair of electric spectacles, Mme. Spencer," he said, opening the bundle. "They are very expensive, but are simply wonderful in their effect."

"But I don't want to wear glasses."

"It will be necessary to wear these only a short time—say a month and then you will be free from glasses or spectacles of any kind forever."

The patient looked a little dubious, but she took the wonderful spectacles and put them on.

"You will notice the electric balls on the ends of the wires," explained the professor, putting his hands on either side of her head as if to place the wires straight.



"WAX, B'GOSH!"

"Oh! oh! you hurt me!" exclaimed the widow, jumping back.

"Ha! ha!" laughed the professor; "that was the electricity acting on your nerves."

"Why, I thought you had pins in your fingers or something."

"No, madam, it was the magnetic current's action, and you must not be surprised if it is even more severe at times."

He took off the spectacles and showed her two black balls as large as peas on the ends of the frames and two more on the wires that clasped her head. Then he explained, though she did not understand the explanation, how the current passed from one to another and completed the circuit, thus curing the most stubborn case of nearsightedness.

For ten days he continued his residence at the farm-house, and his "treatment" of his hostess' eyes. It was the busy season, and it so happened that none of the relations of Mrs. Spencer had called. The whole village, though, knew of her aristocratic boarder and the ladies were wild to see him.

He seemed to care to know nobody, however, but paid assiduous attention to the widow.

Morning, noon and night he was at her side. He praised her farm, her house, her garden, and even praised Norah. He fixed the electric spectacles many times a day, and when after a week he one evening allowed an arm to drop around his patient's neck, she was too preoccupied to notice it, or at least suffered it to remain. Then he went a step farther and actually proposed.

The widow was not quite ready to take such a monstrous step without thinking it over, and promised to give him an answer in three days.

On the third day the sewing society met at the Spencer home. She knew Jonas and his wife would be there, and thought she would talk the matter of Prof. De Mauke over with her brother that afternoon when he came to take his wife home.

"How long have you been wearin' glasses, Mis' Spencer?" asked the minister's wife, as they were sitting around the dining-room table after supper discussing various little matters of interest to the community and waiting for the members' husbands.

Jonas was already there, and he and the professor were talking on the porch outside.

"Oh, only a short time," answered Mrs. Spencer. "I ain't agoin' to wear these long. They're just a little sort o' cure experiment."

"What be them balls on the ends?" she queried.

"Ahem!" came from the porch, but Mrs. Spencer, proud of her possession, did not notice it.

"How do they work?" asked half a dozen ladies, coming forward all agog with curiosity.

The professor hemmed and hawed upon the porch but he was unheeded.

Mrs. Spencer took off the wonderful spectacles and handed them to Mrs. Beanes.

"How strange they feel!" exclaimed that lady, advancing toward the lamp. "Do they help your sight yet?"

"Ya-a-s, I think they do some good, though I can't see much difference. The 'lectricity, you know, goes through—"

"Why, Mrs. Beanes, what air ye doin'?"

"Look, the balls is meltin' an' droppin' off!"

"What air they made of?" were some of the expressions that interrupted the explanation.

Jonas coming from the porch pushed aside the women and snatched the spectacles from the holder's grasp.

Bringing them near to the lamp again, he watched another "electric" ball melt and fall sizzling to the table.

"Wax, b'gosh!" he muttered, in deep disdain. "Jerusha, where'd ye git these blamed things?"

Jonas made one long stride which carried him almost to the porch—the professor was gone.

And he did not appear again.

The spectacles were confiscated by the angry Jonas, who vowed he would horse-whip the rascal if he caught him.

The Widow Spencer is still a widow. She never confided her proposal to Jonas, and she dislikes very much the word "electric." Though she has hard work sometimes to read even very coarse print, she has not yet, and declares she never will, wear another pair of spectacles.

CHARLES M. HARGER.

MRS. BAKER'S ARREST.

I had just been reading in the evening paper the account of a bold daylight burglary that had occurred that day only a block or so from my boarding-place, writes C. M. Rockwell in the Woman's Journal. The thief was a notorious one, and his ingenious manner of operation and the details of his capture occupied a prominent place in the evening papers.

As I finished, my landlady entered the parlor, and I said: "This affair was unpleasantly near us, wasn't it, Mrs. Emery?"

"Yes," she replied; "it reminds me of an adventure I had with a burglar, though I got rid of mine more easily."

I suppose she saw by my face that I wanted to hear about it, for after giving the fire a few cheering pokes, she took out her knitting and sat down, while I, who prefer my dolce far niente without fancy work, settled myself to listen, feeling that I merited entertainment after my day's work.

"About five years ago," she said, beginning on story and brilliant hosiery at the same time, "one Saturday evening, my son and I were alone in the house, my one boarder having left that day, and my husband being out of the city for a week. Joe was only twelve, but I wasn't timid at all, and about half-past seven we were sitting in here, reading, when the door-bell rang. Joe went to the door, and in a moment showed a lady in. She was very nice looking, medium size, dressed quite elegantly in black, and with a pleasant face, and dark brown hair, which she wore in curls. She was apparently about thirty. She asked if I was Mrs. Emery, and I said I was. She said she had come in that afternoon from Reading to attend the Temperance convention then going on in —— Hall, and as she was not acquainted in the city, she had asked one of the ladies to tell her of a good boarding-place near the hall where she could stay over Sunday, and she had been directed here. She also mentioned that a lady connected with the K—— Mission Sunday-school had asked her to deliver an address there in the morning. This sounded all right, and I told Mrs. Baker, as she called herself, my terms for the room, which she said were satisfactory; and then she said she would first go to the evening session of the convention, and come back and take it.

"So she started out, but came back in about ten minutes, saying that she found herself too tired to walk to the hall and that she would go right to bed. I took her up to the room—the same one you have now, Miss Leslie—and then I came down and thought it over. It was queer, I thought, and I felt a little uneasy, but a bright idea struck me.

"One of the ladies connected with the K—— Mission lived right in the next block, and I was slightly acquainted with her. I knew nothing concerning the school happened without her knowledge; so, telling Joe to be on the watch a little, I went around and inquired about Mrs. Baker. Miss Greene knew nothing about any such person, and was sure the school had had nothing to do with her—in fact, they had engaged a gentleman from Germantown to address the school. This didn't make me feel any more comfortable. I next thought I would interview Mrs. Baker again, and get a little more definite information about her. So I went up and knocked, but got no answer, tried the door and found it locked.

"You know my room is just behind that one, and communicates with it by a door in the end of the closet, papered over, and hooked on my side. I next opened that door and entered her room, as her closet door was wide open.

"The gas was turned low, and Mrs. Baker in bed, evidently asleep. I walked toward the bed, and as I passed the bureau, noticed a big bunch of brown curls on it, and her black dress near by on a chair. As I went on, rather amused at the quantity of false hair, I stumbled against something, which on investigation proved to be a bona fide pair of masculine trousers, suspenders and all. I was rather startled, and looked at the bed. Only Mrs. Baker's head and one arm were visible, but the hair on that head was a light auburn and cut very short, and the sleeve on that arm was of dark-gray flannel, and buttoned at the wrist. This was remarkable, to say the least, and I went down-stairs again without waking her, and after holding a little council of war with Joe—a sensible little chap, if I do say it—I sent him for a policeman. The station isn't far, so Joe was back in a few minutes. After hearing his story, they sent a skillful detective, and I took him up to the room.

"We both went in, and I walked over and turned up the gas, and said 'Mrs Baker!' pretty loud. The person in bed waked up, looked confused a moment, then said: 'Oh, is that you, Mrs. Emery?' in what sounded like an assumed falsetto to my suspicious ears. But just then the officer came in sight, and Mrs. Baker's voice dropped suddenly to an excited bass and made some remarks that were unladylike, to say the least, while the owner made a quick motion toward the little valise on a chair by the bed. But the detective was quicker, and snatched it first. I retired then, and as I went out heard the officer say: 'Now, Mr. Jim Warren, I shall have to trouble you to dress yourself and come with me.'

"I went down and told Joe, who was on the stairs, wild with excitement, how the thing had turned out, and in about five minutes the officer and his prisoner went out at the front door.

"After landing him securely in the station, the detective came back after the valise which he had forgotten. He said that he had recognized the man as soon as he saw him, and that he was well known to the police, who had been looking for him for several months.

"The valise contained a revolver, a small, dark lantern, some skeleton keys, and a few other small articles, which I don't remember.

"I don't know how the fellow happened to be caught napping so nicely, but he probably felt so safe that he was off his guard. Perhaps he didn't mean any mischief, and only wanted a little needed rest; but I'm very glad I got rid of him as I did."

Japanese Kindness.

A picture of Japanese life drawn by Prof Morse shows such a pleasant relation existing between the human and the brute creation that no Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals is needed: Birds build their nests in the city houses, wild fowl, geese and ducks alight in the public parks, wild deer tramp about the streets. He had actually been followed by wild deer in the streets, nibbling melon rind out of his hand, as tame as calves and lambs on our Michigan farms. A dog goes to sleep in the busiest streets; men turn aside so as not to disturb him. One day a beautiful heron alighted on the limb of a tree, and the busy, jostling throng stopped. Every man's hand went into his pocket, just as they would with us, but instead of bringing out a "popper," out came pencil and sketching paper.

A Little Mixed in Speech.

"Mamma," said Willie Harold, as he stood by the window one day, "there goes Mrs. Smif wiv an umbeller over his head and his rubber gothams and it isn't waining. Isn't he a funny woman? I think she are."

Queen Charlotte's Pearls.

Among the hereditary jewels belonging to Duke of Cumberland are Queen Charlotte's pearls, valued at $750,000, about which for twenty years Queen Victoria and the Hanoverian King quarreled with magisterial dignity. The Queen maintained they belonged by right to England. The King insisted they should have been sent to Hanover in 1837, on the death of William IV. The other jewels belonging to the Duke are valued at $5,000,000. His gold and silver plate weighs twelve tons.

IN SHARP CONTRAST.

"Womanhood"—a background of misty gray, shadows soft and dreamy, a woman floating through the shadows, with white arms raised high above her head, clothed only in thin, gray draperies, trailing and fading into the clouds in which she floated. Every curve of the gleaming white limbs, every line of the slender body was revealed by the clinging, transparent folds, which only heightened the loveliness they could not conceal, and fell away softly from the full, white throat and snowy breast. The face was uplifted and turned slightly away, in an exquisite pose, but something in the chaste lines of the beautiful figure revealed all the purity, sacredness and ideality of womanhood. Men, says the New York Sun, looked at the picture with earnest faces, women's chatter hushed as they approached it. "It almost makes me cry, it is so pure and beautiful," said a pretty, impulsive girl. "I could be always good if it hung in my room." The artist stood in the angle of the railing as the people crowded up to see his work, and some one said: "Is it an ideal figure?" to which he answered: "I painted it from life, except the face, which is idealized a little."

High up in an old tenement-house with dark passages, and up tumble-down stairs, in a tiny room a woman sat crouching over a smoking fire, endeavoring to coax its coals into life and warmth. Her dress was old and faded, and soiled, and torn at the shoulder revealing the white flesh; her shoes were ragged and down at the heel, fastened by one or two buttons; her hands were smirched with coal dust. A frowsy boy came banging into the room with a bun in one hand and a greasy newspaper in the other. "Here's the paper the boss sent up to your man, and is he any better, he says."

"He is worse," answered the woman, apathetically, as she took up the paper and went into another tiny room where, on a ragged couch, a man with consumption was watching her with burning eyes. She turned the paper to the art notes, and, after a little search, said: "The picture has sold for $1,000, and I only had $20 for the pose, and it was so hard and made my arms ache so I couldn't fix 'em in the night so I could go to sleep. The coal's nearly out and the rent isn't paid, and your medicine is all gone."

"What was the pose, Annie?"

"This. See!" She raised slowly on one toe and threw her hands above her head. The clinging, limp, faded dress outlined curves of gracious beauty, the soiled sleeves fell back from dimpled white arms; the hands, save where the coal smirches blackened them, were white as snow, and they were faultless in shape. Through the rents in her dress the bare shoulder gleamed like marble, and the loosely-fastened collar slipped back from a full, beautiful throat; the gray dusk of the twilight shrouded her with dreamy shadows and the uplifted face was turned away.

A FEMALE LOBBYIST.

"A fine figure of a woman," as Joe Gargery observes in "Great Expectations," passes by into the Capitol, sweeping under garniture of silk and genuine seal fur with as broad spread of canvas as the yacht Puritan or Volunteer. Her age ranges probably between forty and forty-five, her figure is practically embonpoint, but her face is rosy with health and her features still preserve the stamp of beauty. Her eyes are big and gray, scintillating under the flashes of dark eyelashes and brows, and were her attire less pronounced she would be styled elegant. This lady enters the reception room, and sends her card to several members, who at once respond, and soon she is surrounded by a coterie of conscript fathers, vieing with each other in playing the gallant. She jests and jokes with them all, inviting them to call at her residence, and, having played her cards adroitly, leaves the Capitol in a well-appointed coupe with the driver in livery. Sometimes she is accompanied by her daughter, a pretty girl of eighteen, and a splendid type of blonde.

This lady is a professional lobbyist, and plies her vocation with marked success. Whispers in the air are heard occasionally in criticism of her private character from those of her own sex, but, says the gallant correspondent of the Kansas City Times, neither man nor woman has ever brought forward an accusation direct and positive so far as it is generally known. She has had her fingers, however, in many a Congressional pie, whereof she received a slice of greater or lesser proportions, and no one is more thoroughly posted in the avenues and channels of legislation. She obtains a copy of every bill introduced and of the reports thereon, and if the game be worth the candle, hunts up its history and parentage. Then when the case is thoroughly digested she offers to make or mar, as the case may be, wherever the best financial opportunity is presented, and her efforts are usually attended with success. She is shrewd, and gathers honey from every honey-bearing flower.

RATS CARRYING EGGS.

An Omaha Man Watches the Performance and Describes It.

S. L. Cloud, of Omaha, in a Chicago paper, says: Last summer the girl kept complaining that she could never find any eggs in the barn. I did not think much of it at first, but finally when the complaint was repeated almost every day I began to think it was rather strange that we should not get more than three or four eggs when we had at least five dozen hens, and so determined to look into the matter. It was more than a week, though, before I solved the mystery, and then it was merely by accident. I was standing in the barn one Sunday morning when a hen came cackling from her nest in the manger, and a few minutes after a rat came from his hole, ran across the floor and climbed into the manger. I could see him, and was idly watching to see what he was doing, when you can imagine my surprise to see him rolling the egg in front of him toward the edge of the manger. After a good many efforts he finally succeeded. He paused there, gathering the egg up under his "chin;" he rolled himself completely around it, resembling the form of a hedgehog when alarmed, then he deliberately rolled over the edge of the manger and dropped squarely on his back on the floor, two feet below, thus saving the egg whole. Immediately he began to squeal with all his strength, and just as I was starting to put him out of his misery, thinking he had broken his back in the fall, two other rats appeared on the scene. They ran up to the first one, as he lay on the floor, and each seizing hold of a hind leg began to drag him, egg and all, across the barn. Just as they reached the hole, and the first grizzled fellow disappeared, pushing the egg in front of him, it dawned on me that I had at last found out where our eggs had been going.

Journalism in Missouri.

A Missouri weekly asks its readers to excuse lack of editorial matter by explaining that the editor is "now lying in bed, with one foot in the grave, while four of the best physicians of the town surround the couch and sew up the gaping wounds which disfigure us." He fell over a cow which was lying on the sidewalk.

MRS. BURNETT'S VICE.

The Author of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" Said to Be a Cigarette Fiend.

It is always a severe shock to come to one of our idols that has been dethroned, or one who has done something that makes it unworthy of our mental apotheosis, observes the Indianapolis News. Some lady friends who have been in Boston at various times for prolonged visits were telling a night or two ago of some of Mrs. Frances Burnett's idiosyncrasies. They lived in the same house with Mrs. Burnett for several months, and came to know the author of Little Lord Fauntleroy quite well. Women down in "the Tennessee mountains" may smoke and do all the disreputable things they please, but a lady who stands at the head (as one may say in truth) of America's literary women, may not do them. Now, Mrs. Burnett does not smoke a pipe, and did not when the visitors from Indianapolis became acquainted with her. But she did smoke cigarettes, and possibly continues the practice, for the list of those who abandon the habit after it is once formed, is not a long one. It was not the ordinary cigarette to be had at the drug store or tobacconist's that the literary lady indulged in, but a brand specially imported from Spain. She had, in addition, costumes from the same land, in which she arrayed herself when enjoying the weed. The dark-eyed senoritas of Spain can afford to do this unwomanly thing, perhaps, but can an American woman? Possibly the thing a man last excuses in a woman is unwomanliness—that is, where the good or ill-doing is above the mere evidence of her ill-breeding or vulgarity. A cigarette-smoking woman is not a particularly edifying spectacle.

WEALTH.

As we last week said—"Labor is the [illegible] of wealth," and the question [illegible] follows: What is wealth? Not the [illegible] representation, but real [illegible].

Some people imagine that wealth consists in handsomely engraved certificates of [illegible] stock, doubtful promises to pay and the many captivating paper securities, so-called, which are [illegible] often spread as drag nets to catch the unwary and transfer into the pockets of [illegible] money-grabbers the hard-earned savings of honest toil.

Such an enriching process as that can [illegible] make many arrogant millionaires, but its result is largely at the expense of the industrious and [illegible] [illegible].

[illegible] and prosperity diffusing wealth [illegible] entirely different character, and [illegible] down to practical reality [illegible], of course, from [illegible] the [illegible] productions of [illegible] [illegible] of earth, forest, stream and mine, [illegible] for the sustenance, comfort and convenience of mankind, both at home and abroad, and to provide places for human abode and utility, and facilities for travel and transportation.

[illegible] wealth derives [illegible], and [illegible] our previous claim that the [illegible] labor are its [illegible] and permanent [illegible].

The evidences of wealth are manifold. They can be seen on every side in cultivated [illegible], in structures for the [illegible] of varied industries, in railways, [illegible] steamers, works of public and private improvement, towering edifices and [illegible] cottages, and in institutions of religion, education and benevolence.

Wealth honestly acquired and possessed by individuals whose hearts beat in sympathy with human-kind and not [illegible] sordid self, is a blessing to any community, because its spirit is public, [illegible] generous, and its [illegible] [illegible].

But when wealth is devoted to [illegible] aggrandizement, [illegible] [illegible], to making the poor poorer and dependent, to corruptly securing [illegible] politically or otherwise, and for the display of aristocratic [illegible] and [illegible] glory, it is far removed from the [illegible] elements of [illegible] [illegible] and the people's welfare.

The printed [illegible] testimony contains about 1,300 [illegible] it is estimated that it will take two [illegible] and a-half to read it, without [illegible]. As Mr. Lindabury had [illegible] receiving his copy, [illegible] Mr. [illegible] received his, they were [illegible] into arguments, and it was postponed until June 17.

DUNELLEN BRIEFS.

Mrs. Sarah Brokaw has returned from [illegible], and taken up her residence at New Market for the Summer.

Mr. [illegible] W. Sampson is one of the proud [illegible] Dunellen, the cause of which is the arrival of a female heir, who came to brighten his household a few days ago.

Mr. [illegible] W. Gaskill who has been confined to the house for a long time past by illness, is now slowly recovering, and his friends now hope to soon see him out again.

Mr. and Mrs. William M. [illegible] of Brooklyn, who have taken possession of Mr. J. W. Sandiver's house, on May 23, entertained Mr. and Mrs. Sampson, the [illegible] Mrs. Elder.

[illegible] Gun Club.

At a meeting of the Middlesex Gun Club held at Force's Hotel, this city, Saturday evening, May 25, a communication was read from the State Sportsmen's Association, tendering to the Middlesex Club the management of the State tournament the coming Fall, which it was decided [illegible] to accept, as the [illegible] Club have decided to hold their annual tournament at Dunellen, [illegible], [illegible] 10 and 11 next, which would [illegible] [illegible] with their acceptance of the management of the State shoot, which will [illegible] probably go to the Suburban [illegible] [illegible] Claremont, N. J.

At the [illegible] tournament of the Middlesex Club, one of the features will be a guaranteed purse of $1,000, 50 live birds, $[illegible] entrance fee. Without doubt all the crack shots of the country will be in attendance on the dates above named, and no efforts will be spared by the [illegible] to make the event a success, as the Middlesex boys always do.

A PLAINFIELDER IN A MILLION DOLLAR SYNDICATE.

Notwithstanding the activity in the [illegible] market and the immense sums [illegible] invested in new buildings in New York, vast amounts of capital from that city are being invested abroad [illegible] in other cities.

[illegible] recently a New York banking firm [illegible] all the gas companies in St. Louis [illegible] comes the news that a syndicate [illegible] that city has grabbed up the [illegible] [illegible] plants of Rochester, N. Y.

The syndicate includes Messrs. [illegible] [illegible] Phillipsburg, N. J., his son, [illegible] Treasurer of the Plainfield [illegible] Light Co., and William Runkle, [illegible] Vice President Potts, of the [illegible] National Bank; T. F. Woods, Treasurer of the United States Express Company, and W. Chauncey of Brooklyn, and [illegible] paid for the property was $[illegible].

The parties to the transaction are [illegible] reticent, but it is learned that they [illegible] all the gas plants in Rochester [illegible] those owned by the [illegible] [illegible], and that their intention was [illegible] [illegible] eventually in [illegible] natural gas. Rochester is about [illegible] [illegible] from the nearest [illegible] [illegible] Pennsylvania, and the [illegible] of the scheme are confident that [illegible] successfully carry it out.

It is thought that before long Buffalo, [illegible] and other cities will [illegible] of the natural gas supply [illegible] light from this source, but [illegible] of the syndicate had anything [illegible].

The Advisory Masters in Chancery [illegible] New Jersey are closing up their business and the offices will soon be no more. The [illegible] by the Legislature last Winter [illegible] the appointment of two [illegible] [illegible]. [illegible] Chancellor has appointed [illegible] Advisory Masters. Only one [illegible] has thus far been appointed, [illegible] it is believed he will [illegible] [illegible] all the business.

North Plainfield's Proposed New School House.

Plans of what kind of a new school house is necessary for the accommodation comfortably of North Plainfield's overflowing school population, are now on exhibition at the present public school house.

The plans were prepared at the decision of the Board, so that correct estimates for building might be obtained for presentation to the coming meeting called to discuss and decide the matter.

Progressive Euchre Among the Elite.

Mr. and Mrs. Augustus VanDeventer, of Willow avenue, Washington Park, gave a progressive euchre party last Saturday evening, in honor of their guest, Miss Rodman, of Brooklyn. A most enjoyable evening was spent, and it was one of the many pleasant social events of the season. Those who were present, represented the elite of the Park, and included: Mr. and Mrs. Morgan S. Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. George P. Dupee, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel St. John McCutchen, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. McGee, Mr. and Mrs. Sam'l Townsend, Mr. and Mrs. Edward St. John, Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Waring, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. E. Hound, Miss Kingman, of Trenton, Miss Waring, Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Wells and Mr. Benjamin M. Day.

The Bishop at Holy Cross.

The annual visit of Bishop Scarborough to Holy Cross church, North Plainfield, Sunday morning, brought out a large congregation, notwithstanding the threatening appearance of the weather. The church was very tastefully decorated with flowers for the occasion. The Bishop preached a most excellent sermon and afterwards administered the rite of confirmation to 23 persons, 15 of whom were males.

Before announcing his text the Bishop congratulated the rector and congregation upon the great prosperity of the parish, and their generous contributions to the church at large, especially to missions in this Diocese, and to his own private charity fund—they having given him the largest contribution of the year.

He spoke in praise of the ladies of the parish who interested themselves in securing this fund; nor did he neglect to speak of the vested choir which he regarded as sure evidence of progressiveness. It was particularly pleasing to him.

He also spoke very feelingly and earnestly of the pleasure that the rector, Rev. T. Logan Murphy, must have enjoyed in presenting so large a class for confirmation, and hoped that all would be steadfast and encourage their rector. The services were most impressive, at the close of which a large number of the congregation remained to partake of the Holy Communion.

ASSAULTED THE OFFICER.

An incipient riot occurred in North Plainfield, about dusk last Thursday, during which Special Marshal Pangborn was knocked down, kicked and his club was wrenched from his grasp and stolen. It appears that the base ball game between the married and single men in North Plainfield, Thursday afternoon, attracted an unusually large number of colored people from this city. After the game some of the players spent an hour or so unloading schooners, and about seven o'clock the crowd started for home. In front of the Somerset House the gang became noisy, and obstructed the sidewalk.

Special Marshal Pangborn was in the vicinity at the time, and he ordered the mob to disperse. Some of the more sober ones obeyed the Marshal's order, but one of the number whose name is said to be Randolph, refused to move, and the Marshal threatened him with arrest. The mob then set upon the officer and during the melee the latter's club was stolen.

The Marshal overtook the fellow who grabbed his club and arrested him, but the mob followed and by force released the prisoner. Pangborn was knocked down and kicked, but displayed remarkable bravery, and the crowd finally dispersed and escaped into this city. It is said that a special policeman of this city was one of the ringleaders in the affair. The names of the persons implicated have been furnished the officer, and they will be apprehended and made to answer.

BLESSING ST. MARY'S PULPIT.

The commodious St. Mary's church was not large enough to seat all who applied for admission, Sunday afternoon, on the occasion of Bishop O'Farrell's visit to the church. The Bishop was present to bless the, Memorial pulpit donated to the church by the Vordon family of North Plainfield, and to occupy the new pulpit for the first time.

The handsome pulpit is the work of Messrs J. & R. Lamb, one of the finest ecclesiastical art working firms in New York city, and is a marked compliment to the oldest Catholic family in Plainfield, the late Judge Vordon being one of the pioneers of the Catholic faith in this vicinity.

The regular church choir furnished the music, Father Stafford rendering the solo parts. The service of blessing the pulpit was short and impressive. Besides the Bishop and Father Smyth, the latter the rector, Fathers O'Connor of Bound Brook and Freeman of St. Joseph's church, North Plainfield, were in attendance at the altar. Following the service of blessing, Bishop O'Farrell delivered an eloquent and interesting sermon on "The Pulpit." In beginning he said:

There are two things to be considered in connection with this sermon. First—"Why is the pulpit given?" Second—"What is the meaning of the pulpit?" In the first place, said the learned Bishop, the pulpit is an offering to God. Here he eulogized the late Justice Vordon, in whose memory the pulpit is erected, and spoke of the deceased as one of the founders of Catholicism in Plainfield. The Catholic church, he said, has grown to large proportions.

To us, the Bishop continued, the pulpit is secondary; it is the house of our Father, the palace of our King, where the heart of our Saviour is yearning with infinite love. The church of God has its centre in the altar; the altar is centred in the tabernacle, and the tabernacle is the house of God, where sermons are preached and the good passed out, according to God's words: "Go, I command you, and preach the Gospel."

The speaker went on to state how the New Testament was furnished and concerted from the epistles of the Apostles in the third century, adding that it took [illegible] years after the ascension of the Lord to complete the work. The church will go on for all time, he said, not to teach our doctrines, but to teach what we were taught by the Apostles. God's words do not change; the church, like the sun, will continue to shine until all things end with God's eternal kingdom; as Christ was yesterday, is today and tomorrow, so is the church; for God hath said: "Behold, I am with you always, even to the end of the World."

In conclusion the Bishop made congratulatory remarks concerning what has been done in the parish; he also alluded to the new parochial school as a [illegible] of religion and education. No people, he declared, loved education more than the Catholics, and none were more willing to make sacrifices to attain it. His closing words were: "May God continue to bless you, and may the parish has grown, continue to grow in the Catholic faith; the day will come when all will gather around the throne of our God."

After the sermon by the Bishop, Father Stafford sang the "Veni Creator," followed by the Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament, which concluded the ceremonies of the afternoon.

A New York Paper Goes Chasing Big and Finds Last Year's Crop.

The New York Post of last Wednesday devotes a quarter-column to a re-hash of certain rumors and indefinite schemes and projects that have been in circulation for months past in THE PRESS and its exchanges, regarding a railroad that may some day, within the next twenty years, be constructed.

There is absolutely nothing new in the matter, and our metropolitan contemporary has merely been loaded by a country reporter who can't see news under his nose and must depend on his imagination for bread and butter.

The article goes on to say that plans are being perfected to build a new railroad at the base of the Watchung Mountain, from Bound Brook, N. J., through Dunellen, North Plainfield, Scotch Plains, Springfield, Orange, and other smaller places along the route to Hoboken, with ferry entrances to New York city at Fourteenth and Twenty-third streets. A charter authorizing the projectors to build and operate the proposed new railway was granted several years ago, and since then agents for the company have been quietly at work to secure the right of way.

The last objection of private property owners has just been overcome, and only one difficulty remains. At Orange it will be necessary to cross the Morris and Essex railroad tracks, and until recently considerable obstinacy met the proposition to effect a junction at that grade. The President of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, Samuel Sloan, has said that no other road should cross his if he knew it. Negotiations are pending, however, for a settlement of this one trouble, and a railroad man well informed of the plans says that work on the new road will soon be begun and speedily pushed to completion.

"An outcome of the new line," says the Post, "would be the erection of a fine hotel on the heights at Washington Rock, from whence may be surveyed a vast extent of country, as far as the Amboys and New York Bay—the East River bridge-towers and the statue of Liberty being visible." This is also nonsense. The owner of Washington Rock and the projector of the Hotel, is not taking into consideration the proposed road, at all.

The Lehigh Valley Railroad is understood to be back of the scheme, and the Orange and Watchung Mountain Railroad would connect with the Lehigh tracks at Bound Brook.

"There are many commuters in North Plainfield who find the Central Railroad station at Plainfield very inconvenient," continues the article. "These would hail the building of the new road with delight, and it is expected that the building of many new Summer homes in the borough would follow that event."

When the sun sank towards the Blue Ridge mountains, at six o'clock of Thursday afternoon, its declining rays glinted down on eighteen culled pussons holding a wrapping match with their tongues in the vacant field opposite Blair's Mountain View Hotel on Somerset street. Seven innings of the long expected base ball contest between the bachelors and the benedicts of colored persuasion had just been completed, and as the single men had scratched the bases with the married folks, they were ready to quit. The latter, however, wanted a chance to "git shet," but the game went no further and all adjourned to tap a keg, with the score standing as below.

The married folks were early on the ground and laughed with derision at the efforts of Captain Jack Carey to get together a team of single boys. Jim Scott was loud in his assertions that "lessen er man's married he ain't no good nohow." He felt bad later, but not so bad as Tom Martin the short-legged short-stop of the Benedicts, who saw the cold dollar he bet melt away in the sixth inning.

The Crescents played a "yellow" game with the Rutgers college boys, but Thursday's game was a "black" one, and at times very "woolly." The single men had a professional catcher imported from Somerville, but he was too galias to catch anything. He looked like the late lamented Crowley in captivity, when he got the mask on, and was as stiff in the chest as if he chewed glue.

Gabey Nelson—Pop Nelson, of Westfield's boy—could catch all around the other fellow, and stood up behind the bat for the married folks like a sun-burned statue of Ajax defying a cigarette. He made a clean score himself and some of his side also played hard, but it was no use. Up to the sixth the married folks led, but in that inning the single men quit 'em. Even Atkinson on second base got rattled, and the boys without wives and babies rolled up eight tallies. Even Henry Frisby made a run that inning, with a load on his stomach of molasses cake and beer.

Mr. Peter Wina, the Crescent club's caterer, umpired the razzle-dazzle competition and escaped without a ragged cut. The only man whom disaster stared in the face, was Mr. Fred Clark, the scorer, who seemed slightly stung. At the close of the first inning he announced the score as standing two to two, whereupon the entire nine of husbands rushed in from the field shouting "too-ter-too" like an asmatic Reading-trailer, and surrounded the unfortunate Mr. Clark. The spectators started for the mountains, and the umpire "clum" a tree, but no explosion came. But Freddy dropped that score sheet very suddenly and lit out. His successor kept the following:

Each participant in the game, previously chipped fifteen cents towards a keg, and it was tapped at the close of the contest. Its effect is referred to in the following editorial of Saturday's New York World:

"The intoxicating influence of base ball upon the married and single colored men of North Plainfield, N. J., led them to defy the authorities of that town on Thursday evening and wellnigh brought on a riot. If our national game continues to agitate emotional natures as it has of late in various parts of the country, scientists, philosophers and law-makers will have to combine in an effort to remove some of its persistently exciting features. Perhaps "a nickel-in-the-slot umpire or a new rule making a home run a misdemeanor would make the game more of a sedative."

—The High school nine defeated Leal's school nine, at base ball, Thursday afternoon, by the score of 21 to 13. The High school battery was Shepard and Langdon, and Leal's was Stewart and Wadsworth. Mr. Goodrich was umpire. The game was played on the Y. M. C. A., grounds.

The Dog Question.

Should all the unmuzzled dogs running about our streets be as unfortunate as to be captured by the dog catcher, it would be necessary to secure a ten-acre lot in which to keep the brutes pending their execution. Why not employ more dog catchers; also secure ample accommodations for the captured canines, and relieve the public of this nuisance.

To Come to Netherwood.

St. John's Commandery of Elizabeth will assemble at their asylum on Thursday evening, Ascension day, at half-past six o'clock, in full uniform, for the purpose of attending divine service at Netherwood, as guests of Trinity Commandery of this city, the Elizabeth Commandery having decided at a special conclave to attend service at Netherwood instead of at Roselle.

A Plainfield Engineer Appointed.

The Union County Board of Freeholders Thursday appointed Surveyor F. A. Dunham of this city, engineer to superintend the construction of the county roads. His salary was fixed at $6 a day, and the Board will allow him to employ two assistants at a salary of $3.50 a day each.

It will take Engineer Dunham between two and three months to complete the work laid out by the Board.

A Temperance Drama.

"The Social Glass," a temperance drama, was produced at St. Mary's T. A. B. Hall, last Thursday, under the auspices of St. Joseph's Cadets of North Plainfield. The attendance was large and the play was acceptably rendered. It concluded with a laughable farce entitled: "The Haunted House." Following was the cast of the drama:

Charles Thornley	W. E. Kiely
Harold Kelley	Garret Powers
Dr. Slater	Chas. Wannan
John Parks (the bartender)	Jos. Kiely
Bob Brunt	Fred Hughes
James Bolls	W. J. Kiely

Plainfield Philanthropists and Others Who Will Visit the County Almshouse.

Friday an application was made to the Union County Court in behalf of the State Charities Aid Association, and Judge Van Syckel made an order which gives authority to a number of the residents of the county to visit, inspect and examine in behalf of the said association, the almshouse and poorhouse farm of Elizabeth, the Union County Jail, the Rahway poorhouse, and the several places in this city where the poor are boarded and lodged at the city's expense. The order directs the persons in charge of such institutions to admit the persons named, and to render them every facility to make in a thorough manner such visit, inspection and examination.

New Jersey Pharmacists.

Sixty druggists were present at the 19th annual meeting of the New Jersey Pharmaceutical Association at Bridgeton, on Wednesday. Thirty-one persons were elected to membership during the day. Messrs H. P. Reynolds and E. J. Shaw were present from this city.

The Committee on the Sale of Liquor by Pharmacists presented an opinion which they had secured from Cortlandt Parker, which was in substance that the law did not prohibit pharmacists from selling liquor as a medicine, but did as a beverage. The committee's advice from Senator Werts was that in framing the new law it was not his intention to prohibit the selling of liquor for medicinal purposes.

Resolutions were passed favorable to the removal of the special tax on the sale of liquor and of the reduction of the tax on alcohol. A prominent druggist stated that he violated the letter of the law daily that every other druggist in the State did openly violate it, and that they must continue to do so, as they were often called upon to sell liquor to relieve suffering, upon their own judgment without a prescription.

Where Some Plainfielders Spent Last Summer, in an Attractive, Novel and Economical Way.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—In the old time almanacs there used to be notations to the effect that at such and such a time certain events would take place. For instance: "About this time the birds begin to fly Southward," "About this time snow begins to fall," and so forth.

If we were editing one of the old style almanacs in these days we would note that "About this time (Spring) the fancy of the average young man lightly turns to thoughts of vacation."

While this thought is uppermost in the mind of so many Christian young men, we would like to present for their consideration a plan of spending a week or two that would not only be exceedingly pleasurable but very profitable as well.

It has been shown that recreation and culture in these days can go hand in hand, each one giving zest to the other. Recognizing this, Mr. Moody brings together each Summer, Christian college students, workers in Young Men's Christian Associations, churches and schools, at his home in Northfield, where nature has been so lavish with her charms. There are to be found mountain and river, fields and woods, delightful and enchanting glens, deep ravines, babbling brooks, rushing streams, and, indeed, almost everything in nature that charms the fancy or tempts to recreation. Young men can enjoy themselves to the full with swimming and rowing, base ball and tennis, walking and driving and field sports of all kinds. From these they can go with refreshed bodies and clear and vigorous minds to enjoy the no less varied attractions which Mr. Moody provides for the mind and heart and soul. Men who are widely known for their great learning, deep piety and noble enthusiasm respond to the call of Mr. Moody and all this learning and piety and enthusiasm are used to inspire in the hearts of their young auditors a deeper reverence for the Word of God, a greater determination to delve into its depths of truth, and a lofty and longing desire to be of service to God and man.

After personal experience, the writer of this asserts that no better place can be found to spend a vacation.

In regard to the accommodations they are great. All the Northfield Seminary buildings—5 in number—are placed at the disposal of Mr. Moody's guests, and they are provided with almost every convenience and comfort. There are separate rooms and beds and bath rooms, fine parlors, books, etc., together with good board, and all the whole thing costs is $1.00 per day. It may be mentioned that married men can take their wives or families with them to Northfield, and we venture to say that the ladies will be delighted with it as a place to spend a vacation. To those who would not be enclosed within walls of brick and mortar, tents are provided at even smaller cost. This is novel and attractive to many. Four or five friends can tent together and eat at the Halls, or if they choose can prepare their own meals. Let such a club be organized to go from Plainfield. The President or General Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., will receive applications. The encampment this year will begin June 29, and extend to July 14, inclusive.

ONE OF THE PARTY.

A Still Alarm.

A lamp in the second story hall-way of ex-Senator Livingston's residence on Broadway, set fire to the wood work a little after seven o'clock, Sunday evening, and about fifty dollars damage was done to the building before the flames were extinguished. A "still alarm" was sent out, and Gazelle Engine and the Truck were soon on the spot. Fortunately, however, the fire was put out before it became necessary to turn a stream on the building, and in this way a heavy loss by water was averted.

The Water Works Question.

The committee now considering the water and sewerage question have no hesitation in acknowledging the aid received from the views expressed to them by private citizens.

They have determined to obtain all possible light on the subject before reaching final conclusions as to what methods they will recommend to the Council at its next meeting, and accordingly invite any taxpayer who may have given thought to the subject, to give the city the benefit of it by communicating with the committee. Messrs. Newhall, Erickson and Watson constitute the committee.

Death of a Grand Army Veteran.

At his home on Chatham street, North Plainfield, on Saturday afternoon, about five o'clock, occurred the death of Mr. Samuel S. Moore, from heart disease. The deceased had been in poor health for a long time past. He was forty-seven years of age, his death occurring on his birthday. Mr. Moore was one of the charter members of Winfield Scott Post, G. A. R., of this city, and was a member in good standing at the time of his death. He leaves a family.

The funeral took place in Warren Mission chapel, Tuesday, at 3:30 p. m. The members of Winfield Scott Post attended in a body.

The Crescent Club Was Crippled by Absentees and Fell Victims to New Blood.

The return game between bowling teams of the "Plainfield" and "Crescent" clubs, took place in Olympia alley, last Thursday, and again the Plainfield team won.

Captain 'Bert Stover of the Crescents had picked a strong team and was naturally confident of victory, but when game was called McMurray, Demarest and Moore were absent, and R. Murray, W. Lowry and Corwin were substituted. Murray, however, did the best work on the team, and finished high man.

Captain Jim Davis of the Plainfield club, also tried some new blood. Half of his men had never bowled in a match before, but it was thought fair for Kieb and other big scorers to sit among the spectators and let the newcomers get some experience. This proved to be no mistake of judgment. Thiers, the freshest man in the club, bowled the highest score, while VanWinkle and Haven were far ahead of older hands like H. Teel and Andrews.

Although both clubs scored larger totals than at the previous game, yet as a general thing very poor bowling was done. The first frame opened the game alike for both teams—four strikes and six breaks. But when it was rolled off the Crescents dropped 19 pins behind. This lead the Plainfields added to on each frame, as shown below. Mr. Deloss Willetts was umpire. The game closed at 10:30, when both teams cheered for one another, and woke up the neighborhood.

After many futile attempts on the part of New York's leading horsemen to organize a representative cavalry regiment, the old First Hussars has recently been transformed into Troop A, First Dragoons. The regiment was mustered into the State service a few weeks ago.

THE PRESS copies from a New York paper the following descriptions of some of those known in Plainfield who belong to this regiment of troopers as capable in storming the hearts of women as they are in charging the enemies of the State.

First Corporal John I. Holly is the president of a big life insurance company and one of the richest sub-officers in the dragoons. Corporal Holly is as brave as a lion, generous to a fault and as handsome as an Apollo Belvidere. He is immensely popular in society, and few men are more widely or more favorably known in Wall street than Corporal Holly.

Charles L. Hyde, the banker, is another valuable acquisition to the regiment, and one that the soldier boys are not slow in appreciating. Trooper Hyde is tall and fair, and wears his beard a la Boulanger. The banker is known to his comrades as the "Solid Trooper," not so much on account of his physique as on account of his wealth, which runs up into the millions.

Percy C. Ohl is a new and valuable acquisition to the dragoons. The handsome broker now takes as much stock in military affairs as he does on the Exchange, which is saying a great deal, considering that he is one of the largest operators in the board. Trooper Ohl is the proud owner of the finest specimen of horseflesh in the regiment, and he invariably puts in an appearance on the Central Park drive after banking hours.

Second Lieutenant Oliver B. Bridgman, who spends his Summer at The Netherwood, the talented and handsome son of the Rev. Dr. Bridgman, comes next in rank and good looks. The young lieutenant is a daring rider and a crack shot. He is also a fine disciplinarian, and he is rapidly "licking" the raw recruits of the First Troop into shape. Lieutenant Bridgman was one of the original members of the New York Hussars.

Two handsome and popular troopers are the Eckert brothers, also Netherwood residents, both of whom are in the telephone business and who live in grand style on Madison avenue.

Since this crack cavalry regiment was mustered into the National Guard hundreds of applications for membership have been received; but as the number of troopers is limited to 100, considerable judgment is necessary in accepting the applicants, all of whom must need be properly recommended before they can expect to be elected.

When the First Dragoons go into camp for the Summer at the State encampment at Peekskill, the troopers will ride there and return, choosing the most picturesque roads along the Hudson for their jaunt.

—Some miscreant threw a lighted cigar stump on the awning in front of Randolph's shoe store on West Front street, at 9 o'clock Sunday evening, which resulted in burning away a considerable portion of the awning.

Building Loan.

The regular monthly meeting of the shareholders of the Plainfield Building and Loan Association, was held in Cotter's Hall, Monday evening last. Dues were paid in with commendable promptitude, and loans aggregating $3,400, sold. The Association is in a flourishing condition. The officers are: President—Joseph S. Cotter; Vice President—Lewis E. Barkalew; Treasurer—Wm. H. Codington; Secretary—Nathan Harper.

Third District Sunday School Convention.

The seventh annual convention of the New Jersey Sunday school association for the Third district, comprising Essex, Hudson, Middlesex and Union counties, will be held on Tuesday, June 11, in the Methodist church at Hoboken. There will be afternoon and evening sessions. In the afternoon session the county work will be presented by the secretaries. Rev. Dr. Hurlbut, of this city, will speak on "The Home and the Sunday school," and there will be a conference on the same topic.

W. C. T. U. Festival.

The ladies of the W. C. T. U. held a strawberry and iced cream festival in their rooms on West Front street, last Thursday, but owing to the unusually cold weather the attendance was not so large as was anticipated. The large rooms were comfortably filled, however, and the sale of iced cream, strawberries, cake, lemonade, flowers, etc., was large.

During the evening piano solos were rendered by Miss Vinnie French and Miss Carrie Dewey, and the Misses Coard, Miss Smith and Miss Dewey also favored the visitors with some choice piano duetts. Miss Minnie Tomlinson presided at the flower booth.

The following ladies constitute the Committee of Arrangements: Mrs. S. Cahoone, chairman, Mrs. McNaughton, Mrs. H. M. Eaton, Mrs. Minton Smith, Mrs. Edward Winter, Mrs. J. H. French, Mrs. A. E. Dobbins, Mrs. Samuel Mitchell, Mrs. D. Davis, Mrs. W. H. Griffin, Miss H. N. Lugar.

The waitresses were Miss Kittie Mitchell, May Cahoone, Addie Winter, Bessie Cahoone, Hattie Rockwell, Vinnie French.

The Last One this Season.

The lecture room of the First Baptist church, was handsomely decorated with flags Tuesday, the occasion being the last sociable of the season given by the Young People's League of the church.

There were a large number present including members of the Associations of the Trinity Reformed, Methodist and First Presbyterian churches. During intermission refreshments were served and a very social time was had by all throughout the evening. Mr. Stephen B. Joseph, President of the League, acted as master of ceremonies and announced the selections on the informal programme, which were as follows:

PART FIRST:

Piano Solo	Miss Vinnie French
Recitation	Miss F. A. Gaskill
Solo	Mrs. Martin I. Cooley
Recitation	Mr. H. S. Thatcher
Violin Solo	Mr. A. Carpenter

Intermission.

PART SECOND:

Solo	Mrs. Martin I. Cooley
Recitation	Mr. H. S. Thatcher
Piano Solo	Miss Vinnie French
Recitation	Mr. H. S. Thatcher
Violin Solo	Mr. A. Carpenter

A Big Bugaboo.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—I state on good authority that certain physicians of New York, who have heretofore recommended Plainfield as a place of residence—more especially for invalids, on account of its healthfulness, now bitterly oppose the idea, on the ground that the city is becoming thickly populated, minus the proper drainage, and they predict a fever epidemic if steps are not taken at once to remove all possible causes.

It is a most ridiciculous thing that a city as large as Plainfield should not have the proper sewerage. Our City Fathers should reflect a little upon this important matter and take action at once before it is too late. Do not have our beautiful city condemned when the remedy is within the power of our Council, and place Plainfield in a healthful condition.

There is nothing sensational concerning this communication. Those are facts; and the names of prominent New York physicians who are willing to testify as to their convictions, will be published if necessary. These gentlemen have made many professional visits to Plainfield, enabling them to study the sanitary conditions of our city. C. W.

A CHURCH SEXTON RUINED BY GAMBLING.

It was told all over the town Wednesday that William Washington, the trusted sexton of one of Plainfield's churches, had absconded with all the funds he could get his hands on including about $60 or $70 that he had been given by his wife, who is housekeeper at the Ostermoor residence in Netherwood, to pay the week's grocery, butcher and ice bills of that family.

But Mrs. Washington tells a PRESS reporter another story. She says that she herself has turned William out in the cold, cold World. It is the second time and it is the last, she declares. As far as his absconding with the amount of the week's bills, Mrs. Washington says he settled all the bills in town for Mr. Oster*moor, on Saturday night as usual.* The fact is, however, Washington did not pay the grocery bill, at least. He told Mr. Rockfellow's bookkeeper that Mr. Ostermoor did not give him any money for last week's account; but he paid the meat bill at Benj. Moore's.

Sunday, the last in the month, Washington received his pay as sexton, amounting to $20. This, his wife says, he gambled away as he did every cent of his own or here that he could get hold of. When he came home to his wife that night under the influence of liquor and without a cent, she was so indignant that she locked him out, and the next day gave him notice to quit.

Washington rented a lodging place in Exchange alley and left over four months rent on that for his wife to pay. All his and her money he could get was gambled away, and Mrs. Washington feels that she was justified in finally getting rid of him. She gave THE PRESS the names of those to whom her husband has been losing the money, but there is no need of their being published.

Messrs Tier, the ice men, hold a bill that Washington says he paid, but took no receipt for. Tier's driver insists he *never received the money, but Mr. Oster*moor considers his man's word as good as the other's. Mr. Ostermoor has been in the habit of entrusting a great deal of money to Washington that would have been an object for the latter to steal, but he has never known a cent of it to be misapplied.

Mr. and Mrs. Washington have been married about seven years, and are highly esteemed in colored society, and well thought of by their employers. But Mrs. Washington recently discovered a pawn ticket for her watch that William said he had taken to a jeweler for repairs. Consequently implicit trust and confidence has not reposed in the bosom of that particular Washington family for some months. The ex-Sexton's present whereabouts are just now utterly unknown to anyone.

—It is said that "matchmaking" goes slow at this season, as there is frequently a coldness between lovers. This can be proved in almost any iced cream saloon—as being all nonsense!

Coal Going Up.

Notwithstanding the fact that the coal mines in Pennsylvania are in full operation, representatives of the various coal companies in New York have advanced the prices.

The price of grate is to be advanced from $3.75 to $3.85; of egg from $3.90 to $4, and of stove from $4.15 to $4.30. The price of chestnut remains unchanged at $4. These prices go into effect June 1.

H. P. Reynolds Nominated.

At the final session of the New Jersey Pharmaceutical Association, held at Bridgeton, Thursday, as told in THE PRESS of yesterday, officers were elected and other business transacted. The Board of Pharmacy showed 1,690 registered pharmacists.

The following names will be presented to the Governor from which to select one to be a member of the Board of Pharmacy, vice August Drescher, whose term expires: H. P. Reynolds, Plainfield; August Drescher, Newark; Geo. H. Whipple, Bridgeton; G. S. Cook, Somerville; Jos. S. Bassett, Salem.

More Buildings Begun.

Mr. L. E. Hart has increased his force of men engaged in excavating the lots at the corner of Park avenue and Fourth street, and the work is being pushed forward as rapidly as possible.

Plans are completed and the specifications issued for the $15,000 building that is to occupy the corner and all along Park avenue to the line of the adjoining property of Dr. M. B. Long. Mr. W. H. Clum is the architect, and very handsome buildings they are to be with fronts of plate glass, brick and elaborate terra cotta trimmings.

Three stores, 23 feet front and 60 feet deep, will face on Park avenue. Above each will be a second and third story suite of apartments, each consisting of 6 rooms, commodious, and conveniently arranged.

Memorial Day Arrangements.

The Memorial Day Detail appointed by Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R. of this city, met in the post room on Tuesday, May 21, to further complete their arrangements for the observance of Decoration Day, and to hear from the various societies which have been invited to participate in the celebration. Only one society, the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein, accepted the invitation.

According to the plans now arranged, the graves of the dead soldiers in this city and North Plainfield, will be decorated early in the day, after which the Post will go to Westfield in stages and take part in the exercises there, arriving in Plainfield on the return trip about 12:30 P. M. At two o'clock in the afternoon a short parade will be made, over a route not yet selected, after which the usual post exercises, the oration by Rev. Dr. Yerkes, and other appropriate services will be held in Music Hall at three o'clock.

Everybody knows Borough Marshal Thomas MacDonald and appreciates the faithful service that brave soldier is doing North Plainfield in watching after its peace and good order. Never before has the Borough had a Marshal so efficient—day and night he makes his careful round of all the streets, and looks into every saloon to see that quietness reigns.

But no matter how upright a man may be—how faithful a public servant or how honored a veteran—the News is bound to openly traduce him if he is small, or slyly slur at him if he is large, whenever it feels that way. The News of May 20 stated:

> There was another disgraceful fracas at a Borough saloon Saturday night, resulting in one man having his head cut and in another receiving a slight stab on his body. This morning the Borough Marshal knew nothing about the affair.

The above is false in every particular, and only published to do the Marshal harm in the opinion of the people and the authorities. There was no fracas of the kind in any saloon in the Borough, Saturday night nor any other night.

—Prosecutor Wilson will hasten the trial of indictments this term as much as possible, as he has arranged to go to Europe about the 1st of June.

—Today is Ascension Day.

—The Lehigh Valley Railroad Co., is fixing up the grounds about the station at New Market.

—Soda water and milk shakes are now on tap, and our druggists can furnish the best in the land.

—All unmuzzled dogs are liable to be killed on sight, as the new law authorizes this summary proceeding.

—Only a little while will elapse before the small boy and green apples will renew their unhappy relationship.

—"What are the wild waves saying?" We presume they are murmuring: "Elegantly furnished rooms, top floor, ocean view, $25 weekly."

—An amateur bicyclist amused a number of spectators on Park avenue, last evening, by alternately sitting on and falling off a bicycle.

—The Seventh Day Baptist Association, which includes the churches of that denomination in this part of the country, will meet in this city next month.

—Persons who throw newspapers and handbills in the street or roadway ought to stop it. Nothing will frighten a horse like a sheet of paper carried about by the wind.

—As a matter of record it may be interesting to know that at one o'clock last Thursday A. M., there was quite a fall of snow, not enough, however, to cover the ground.

—The Warren Mission Industrial School will hold its annual closing exercises, Saturday, June 1. The exercises will begin at 3 P. M. All the friends of the school will be welcome.

—The first water excursion of the season from this city will be that of the Emerald Beneficial Association and Young Men's Literary Union to Bay Cliff Park, Staten Island, on Thursday, July 25.

—Dense volumes of smoke issuing from the chimney in an East Second street residence, Sunday morning, nearly resulted in sending out a general alarm. There was no damage done, however.

—The public anniversary of the Children's Home of this city, has been fixed for Thursday evening, June 6. Col. Elliott F. Shepard will make the address, and there will be other interesting exercises.

—Mr. L. A. Hummer, of the firm of Lutkins & Hummer, has begun the erection of three new cottages on Linden avenue, near Somerset street, North Plainfield. The houses will cost in the neighborhood of $2,500 each.

—The case against Jack Dady, of this city, charged with assault, was Wednesday adjourned until the next term of Court, upon motion of the Prosecutor. Chief of Police Carey was in Court ready to proceed with the case against Dady.

—The nature of the entertainments in Music Hall, will be changed on Monday evening, June 3, at which time "a grand athletic and sparring exhibition" will take place. The price of admission has been placed at the exceedingly low figure of 50 cents.

—Don't forget the noon-day prayer meeting at the W. C. T. U. rooms. Leaders for the week: Mr. George Watts, Rev. Mr. Goodrich, Mr. George Morrison, Rev. Mr. Schenck, Rev. Asa R. Dilts and Mr. Harry Manning. Come and receive spiritual good.

—Company C, 3rd Reg't, of Elizabeth, has received an invitation to participate in the parade here on Decoration day. The matter is held subject to further consideration. If the command has time after the inspection at Somerville, they will visit this city.

—On Thursday next, June 6th, at the residence of Chas. S. [illegible], New Market, a public sale of personal property is advertised to take place at 2:30 P. M. A good bay horse, side-bar top buggy, sleigh harness, robes, etc., (all in first-class condition), are among the many articles to be sold.

—Some idea of the quantity of beer drank in North Plainfield, can be had from the fact that on a Saturday a year ago, four kegs of beer was the average number put on tap in a borough barroom. Last Saturday 24 kegs were unloaded in one barroom before ten o'clock at night. Quite a number of [illegible].

—The board walk on the East side of Washington avenue, between the property line of Mr. John W. Moore and the bridge, is in a dangerous condition, and should receive immediate attention. The matter belongs to the Plainfield authorities. The trees should also be trimmed up to ten feet, to admit of better light from the bridge lamp.

—Ladies connected with the Trinity Reformed church, will hold a strawberry and ice-cream festival in the store formerly occupied by Mr. E. C. Peck in the Dunlap building, corner of Front and Grove streets, on the afternoon and evening of Thursday and Friday, June 13, and 14. The object is to aid the debt fund of Trinity Reformed church.

—The trio of handsome, affable and skillful artists who so satisfactorily perform the tonsorial part of a gentleman's toilet at No. 26 Park avenue, are Messrs Edwin Maynard, Wm. Randolph and Chas. Mann. They serve all the better people of the city, and the cutting and dressing of ladies' hair is a specialty in which Mr. Maynard himself has no rival.

—The Memorial Day exercises at Music Hall, this year, will far surpass anything of the kind that has ever taken place before in Plainfield. Great preparations are being made by the various committees to make the affair attractive as well as entertaining. Music Hall will no doubt be filled to its utmost capacity when the nature of the occasion are made known.

A Wedding Surprise.

About a dozen young people from this city and North Plainfield, went in a stage to the residence of Mr. [illegible] Smalley, between Dunellen and Washington Rock, Tuesday, and tendered a surprise to Mr. and Mrs. Smalley on the [illegible] anniversary of their marriage. There were about fifteen couple present. Music, both vocal and instrumental, dancing and refreshments were the principal features of the evening. After extending congratulations and a long and happy life to Mr. and Mrs. Smalley, the guests returned to their homes in this city early next morning well pleased with the evening's enjoyment.

Personals.

Mr. John Taylor Johnston and family are at their Summer home in this city.

Mrs. Dayton of New Haven, Conn., is visiting her mother, Mrs. R. C. Potter of Mt. Pleasant.

Mr. Peter Wright was thrown from a wagon on Park avenue, Saturday afternoon and considerably bruised.

Mr. and Mrs. F. C. [illegible] of East Seventh street, started on Friday for their Summer home at Logan's Ferry, Pa.

Mr. J. Oscar Stevens purchased the [illegible] property on Clinton avenue and Fourth street, at auction, Thursday, for $2,500.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Myers, and Miss Lucy Myers, returned Thursday from Colorado, where they had spent the past Winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Jasper G. Cadmus have left Plainfield for the Summer, making their first stop at West New Brighton, Staten Island.

It is rumored that one of the gentlemanly clerks in a North avenue grocery store is soon to become a benedict. June 27 is the date.

Mr. Charles Carpenter, the courteous and efficient station agent at Dunellen, is about to remove from the station into a neat new cottage built by Mr. Giles.

President Maxwell of the Central Railroad and party passed through this city in a private car, on the return trip from Wilkesbarre, Pa., on Saturday evening.

Mr. Theo. [illegible] of West Second street, is receiving the congratulations of his friends over the arrival of a boy—the tenth child which has blessed his home.

Mr. Jas. Middleditch of Washington, D. C., has leased from Mrs. D. C. Green her house at No. 36 West Eighth street, and with his family will take possession about June 1.

Mr. A. M. Layet, whose purchase of the Guerrier hotel property was recorded in THE PRESS a few days ago, does not intend to lease it but will retain it for his own private use.

Lizzie May Bachman, daughter of Mr. B. H. Bachman, formerly of this city, died recently of consumption and was buried last Thursday. She was about fifteen years of age.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Foster, formerly of this city but now living in Brooklyn, lost their baby girl, Wednesday, May 22. The child was only sick a few hours, and died of congestion of the lungs.

On Tuesday evening at Seminary Hall, Mrs. Genevieve Stebbins Thompson gave an exposition of the art of æsthetic gymnastics, including the Delsarte system, statue poses and recitation.

Officer Flannigan looks more dignified than ever, since he parted with his moustache. It is stated that his wife did not know him when he first entered the house after the operation was performed.

At the annual election to the Yale senior societies, held Thursday afternoon, Mr. Percy Hamilton Stewart of this city, was elected to the "Skull & Bones," and Mr. Albert Arthur Tilney to the "Wolf's Head."

Short-stop Cornwell of the Crescents, seems fated. Last Saturday he was hurt again. A ball that he hit at himself, glanced off the bat and striking him in the face broke a small bone in the side of his nose.

Mrs. Rafferty, widow of the late Thos. Rafferty, returned with her daughter Friday from Europe, after an absence of several months. They are stopping with Mrs. Belle Milne of Willow avenue, in Washington Park.

The boys who comprise the Grace church choir were all measured for their new surplices at the residence of Mr. F. O. Herring, on East Ninth street, Thursday evening, after which they were entertained by Mrs. Herring.

Dr. J. F. McWilliams of Somerville, Dr. J. F. Berg of this city, and Dr. A. Parrish of Flemington, have been appointed Examining Pension Surgeons for the Somerville station. We congratulate Dr. Berg upon his appointment.

Among the persons, residents of this State, who were fortunate to secure patents during the past week were the following from this city: Mr. John Brooks for a rotary printing machine, and Mr. Sinclair Stuart for a separator.

Miss Harriet Worthington Newton, daughter of Mrs. Elizabeth P. Newton, formerly of this city, will be married on Wednesday evening, June 5, to Dr. Arthur [illegible]. The ceremony will take place in St. Luke's church, St. Albans, Vt.

Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes preached an eloquent sermon before the members of Maj. Anderson Post, No. 109, G. A. R., in the 1st Baptist church Sunday evening, taking for his text the word, "Overcoming." The attendance was very large, and the service was very interesting.

Mrs. E. M. Bunting, of Mercer avenue, Washington Park, met with an unfortunate accident on Saturday afternoon. She fell and broke her left wrist in two places. Although still suffering some pain, Mrs. Bunting is getting relief under the careful treatment of Dr. O. L. Jenkins.

The officers and men comprising Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., who attended service at Trinity Reformed church, Sunday evening, are loud in their praise of Mr. Schenck for his very able sermon, and many remained after the service to personally thank him for his efforts.

After a very serious sickness which the young patient bore with courage and resignation, followed by a relapse that was full of dangerous symptoms, Miss Minnie Ammerman is now so much better that her relatives and friends feel much encouraged, and hopeful of her thorough recovery.

Messrs. William and George Craig left Plainfield Saturday for Texas, but will not spend the Winter there as the Central Times states. Mr. George Craig will be back at the opening in the Fall of the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons, from which he will soon graduate.

Miss [illegible] Clarkson and Mr. Harry R. Davis of this city, were united in marriage last Saturday evening, by the Rev. C. L. Goodrich, at the bride's home in North Plainfield. Mr. and Mrs. Davis will continue to reside in this city, where the groom occupies a high position with the Telephone company.

The marriage of Mr. Albert Winter and Miss [illegible], as already announced in these columns, will take place at the home of the bride's sister, on Fifth avenue, New York, at 3.30 o'clock of next Saturday afternoon. Mr. Dexter Tiffany, of Crescent avenue, will be the "best man," and a niece of Miss [illegible]'s will be her "maid." Mr. and Mrs. Winter will leave America about the middle of June, for a tour of Europe.

The announcement is made today of the engagement of Mrs. Kate G. [illegible] and Mr. J. Fowler Pound, both of [illegible]. The marriage will take place early in the Fall, and will be a private affair. Both parties are to be especially congratulated. The accomplishment of Mrs. [illegible], and the sterling worth and integrity of Mr. Pound, he having been a devoted friend for the past three years, specially adapts the couple for marriage relationship. Mr. Pound is engaged in business with Messrs Dodge & Olcott of William street, New York. Mrs. [illegible] is one of the only two heirs of the estate of her father, the late Charles Wilson, formerly of Savannah, Ga., and at one time a resident of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mrs. J. W. Yates has returned from Brunswick, Maine.

Miss Carrie Kingman of Trenton, is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel St. John McCutchen, of Washington Park.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Ashbrook, of Philadelphia, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. James McGee, of Washington Park.

Mrs. Arnold of Albany, formerly Miss Hattie Thomas of this city, sister of Mrs. A. V. V. Raymond, is in Plainfield the guest of Mrs. F. O. Herring of Ninth street.

The Washington Park whist club met last week at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Morgan S. Taylor of Rockview avenue. Their next meeting will be at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Martin J. Cooley, on Thursday evening.

Mr. E. J. Chaffee of New York, has sold a choice lot on Rock View avenue, between Mercer and Orchard avenues, Washington Park, 60x150 feet, to Mr. Edward R. Taylor of Duer street. Mr. Chaffee had owned this property for several years.

Mrs. M. F. Honeyman, the mother of Rev. W. R. Honeyman of North Plainfield, died at her home in Washington, suddenly, at an early hour on Sunday morning. The deceased leaves five children, of which Rev. Mr. Honeyman is the oldest.

The graduating class of Columbia College Law School, will hold their commencement exercises at Metropolitan Opera House, New York, Wednesday evening, June 12. Mr. C. Franc Goddard, formerly of this city, is one of the committee, and Mr. Herbert W. Park is also a member of the class.

Such Can't be Right.

The Central Times tells of Tier's lake and what a delightful place it is "to go and enjoy iced refreshments;" and that "Mr. Wm. Tier is caring for the ice cream department."

If "ice cream," why not "ice" refreshments."

Real Estate Transferred.

May 10—Fred Rose et ux, to L. E. Barkalow, property in North Plainfield, $1,150. Nelson Runyon, M. C. to F. A. Coudert, 169.26 acres in Union and Somerset, $6,400.

Death of Mr. Isaac Squires.

Mr. Isaac Squires, a well-known resident of North Plainfield, died at his home on Grove street, Saturday, after a lingering illness from consumption. The deceased was about forty years of age, and leaves a wife and five children. The funeral took place from Warren Mission chapel, Tuesday afternoon at two o'clock.

The Rev. Mr. Cleaver's Class Leases Reform Hall.

A lease has been signed by the authorities of Reform Hall and Mr. John J. Ackerman, Treasurer of the Rev. J. B. Cleaver's Berean class, whereby the latter secures the use of the Hall and basement for meetings during stated days of the week and certain hours on Sundays.

Mr. Cleaver's class have now the occupancy of Reform Hall, every Sunday from 9 A. M., to 4 P. M., and from 5 P. M., to 7:30 P. M. Also the basement of the building during Tuesday and Friday evenings of each week.

GOLDEN WEDDING.

Mr. and Mrs. John S. Johnson celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary at their residence on Park avenue, May 22, the occasion being one to be long remembered by those who were present. Guests to the extent of about thirty were present, including the three sons, Peter C., Alfred C., and J. Wesley Johnson, together with their respective families. Mr. and Mrs Johnson were the recipients of many elegant and costly gifts, including a purse of gold coin. The aged couple wore the same neck-wear they were married in fifty years ago.

During the evening a collation was served, and about midnight the guests departed for their homes, after wishing the host and hostess many more years of health and happiness. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are aged respectively 75 and 74 years.

Sudden Death of an Old Westfielder.

The sad death of Erastus Miller, aged 74 years, occurred suddenly Tuesday at Westfield, at 7:30 P. M. He had been at his store on Broad street in the afternoon and returned to his residence on Central avenue at 6 P. M. After supper he went to the lavatory, where a short time thereafter he was discovered dead.

About a month ago he was confined to the house by heart failure, but was so much better he could come regularly to the store again. Tuesday afternoon in conversation with several of his neighbors, he said he was feeling unusually well.

His wife died some years ago. He leaves two sons, married, and two maiden daughters. He was the head of the firm of E. Miller & Sons, in the grocery business on Broad street, Westfield, for a number of years, and has been a resident of the town for the past 40 years.

A Beautiful Tribute.

The following from the Christian Intelligencer of May 22, is the sincere tribute of the Rev Cornelius Schenck to his dead brother, the Rev. John Simonson:

"Very suddenly at his home, Plainfield, N. J., Saturday evening, May 11, 1889, in his 73d year, the Rev John Simonson died of heart failure. He was born near Somerville, N. J. He graduated at Rutgers College in 1842 and from the New Brunswick Seminary in 1845. He was licensed to preach the same year by the Classis of Philadelphia. His first charge was at West Farms, N. Y., 1845-52. His next settlement was at Bethlehem, N. Y., 1852-64. His labor here was signally owned by God. In addition to a revival of spirituality, Christian benevolence and activity in the church, there was a remarkable work of grace in the hearts of sinners, continuing for months and resulting in an ingathering of two hundred souls. In 1864 he organized and assumed the pastorate of the Central Reformed church of Plainfield, N. J. Here he labored with acceptance and fidelity until 1869, when he returned to his first charge, West Farms, where he labored for several years, until failing health compelled him to relinquish all active service. In 1882, he again took up his residence in Plainfield, where he continued to live in comparative retirement to the time of his death. April 9th, 1884, his wife, Catharine Paynter Simonson, a most excellent Christian and most estimable lady, died.

"Mr. Simonson was one of God's noblemen. The hoary head was a crown of glory because it was found in the way of righteousness. As a preacher he was earnest, evangelical, Scriptural. As a Christian, modest, unassuming, sincere. As a man, honest, honorable, high-minded. His character was transparent. His faith in God was unwavering and his hope firm unto the end. He lived and breathed the spirit of Christ. He was conscientious and consistent. There was a delightful harmony between his profession and practice, his words and works. His spirit is now with Christ, his body peacefully rests in the family plot at Newtown, L. I. but his beautiful example, his fragrant memory, his Christian influence still abide. 'He being dead, yet speaketh.'" C. S.

—At Somerville, Monday, the Court granted an order to hear the petition [illegible], asking for an increase of the liquor license fee to $[illegible], and fixed Monday, June 17, as the time to hear said petition.

The Noon-day Prayer Meeting.

Ran a Meat Hook in His Wrist.

Mr. Will Smalley of North Plainfield, while at work in his brother's butcher shop on Somerset street, Friday afternoon, received injuries of such a serious nature that Dr. Carmen was called in to dress the wounds. In attempting to hang a quarter of beef on a hook in the ice box, the hook accidentally penetrated the flesh on the left wrist, inflicting painful injuries.

A very valuable cow belonging to Mr. George Dupee of Rock View avenue, died Friday from fever, leaving a calf two days old.

One of Mr. Dupee's horses ran a nail into its foot, Friday, and the William goat that five-year-old Master Dupee drives before a buck-board, broke off one of its horns.

The services of a veterinary were required to attend the horse and goat.

Ground will be broken prior to the erection of the Crescent Avenue chapel, on Tuesday, June 4, from 8 to 10 P. M.

A large tent will be erected over the ground, and appropriate exercises under the auspices of the choir, will be arranged. After the exercises a reception, with music, will be held in the parlors. Refreshments will be served to order. Admission will be 25 cents, and the proceeds are to go toward the building fund.

OBITUARY.

ANDREW LOVE.

Andrew Love, Sr., died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Duncan Walker at Short Hills, N. J., Sunday morning. The deceased was born in Beith, Ayrshire, Scotland, and came to this country thirty-five years ago. He followed his trade as a stone setter in New York for ten years, then moving to this city. Among other work he assisted in the building of the First Baptist and Crescent Avenue churches. For several years past he has resided on his farm at Short Hills. The deceased had reached his eighty-sixth year, and is survived by five sons and one daughter as follows: Robert Love, who resides in Hull, England, Andrew Love, ex-Councilman of this city, Thomas Love of Westfield, N. J., James Love of Jersey City, William Love of Roseland, Essex Co., and Martha, wife of Duncan Walker of Short Hills, N. J., in whose house he was tenderly cared for until he passed away Sunday morning. Mr. Love's wife died about three years ago.

FISH FOR NEWARK.

Fifteen hundred people turned out last Saturday afternoon to see the overmatched Crescents defeated with ease by the stalwart 10th Ward nine of Newark. Pitcher Hammill struck out eighteen of the Plainfield boys—including every man on the team but Lee—and the rest were put out by the infielders with little exertion.

Smiling Pat Gately did his best to save his nine from disaster and succeeded in striking out all the Newark men excepting VanNess, S. Hammill and Comesky. But the Crescents could bat no more than usual, while Ashworth and Dilts stepped up to the plate eight times and fanned the atmosphere with preposterous monotony.

The visitors, headed by Hornish, were a most discourteous set. They were ready to kick on anything, but as the umpire's decision in two instances alone declared the third-out of the Newarks as safe, and added six runs to their score, there was no kicking so far as he was concerned. The visitors would not play unless they could have the umpire, John Conners, that they had brought with them. Then they would not let another player run for Dilts unless they picked the runner themselves, but they asked no one's permission when they substituted one runner for another on their own team.

A number of unfortunate occurrences also transpired to bring ill-luck to the Crescents. Collisions in the out field between Demarest and McLoughlin, and Demarest and Ashworth, spoilt fly catches and added runs to the Newarks' score. McMurray's general inability to get a move or a reach on him, caused him to lose a couple of chances and also help along the visitors' total. The Crescent's first baseman had a fine opportunity—if he availed himself of it, Saturday—of learning from Comesky's play how to fasten on a ball that may not be right over the bag.

The Crescents game at the bat was as follows: Lee stepped first to the plate and flew out to Mullen, and Gately and Ashworth promptly struck out.

Second inning: Dilts struck out; Condon was given his base on balls and reached home on scale wild throwing; McMurray and McLoughlin were thrown out at first.

Third inning: Cornwell was thrown out at first; Demarest struck out; Lee made a base hit and reached second on Hornish's error, but was left there as Gately again failed to find the ball.

Fifth inning: McMurray struck out; McLoughlin made a hit for first base but was thrown out trying to steal second without a slide; and Cornwell completed the thing with three strikes and out.

Sixth inning: Demarest reached first on O'Neill's error, stole second and third and was left there; Lee knocked a foul fly to Comesky; Gately flew out to S. Hammill, and Ashworth struck out for the third time.

The seventh inning added the other two runs to the Crescent's score that made up the day's total of three. Dilts struck out, but was followed by Condon and McMurray with a base hit each, and both got home before McLoughlin and Cornwell had struck out.

Eighth inning: Demarest made a base hit, stole second and third, and Lee reached first on Hornish's error, but both were left, as Gately, Ashworth and Dilts successfully and successively struck out.

Ninth inning: Condon knocked a foul fly to Comesky; McMurray got his first on balls, and stole second; McLoughlin struck out; Cornwell was hit in the face by a pitched ball that glanced off his bat and was given his base; and Demarest finished the game by striking out.

The score in detail was as follows:

Mr. Daft's Motor Exploded by a Vindictive Employee.

The enormous electric motor in the cellar of the Daft electric motor works in Marion was shattered into thousands of pieces a day or so ago. This motor furnishes the power for the building. It was no sooner started than it flew into fragments. Belting and machinery were injured, but, almost miraculously, not a man was hurt. An investigation showed that the wires had been twisted together so as to turn the strong current back to the motor. It is supposed that some discharged workman did the work. Mr. Daft has offered a reward for the discovery of the man. Several thousand dollars' damage was done.

The Teachers Appointed.

Messrs Kirkner, Hurlbut and Babcock, composing the Committee on Teachers from the City Board of Education met at the residence of the last named, on Thursday evening, and re-appointed all but two of the teachers in the High School, Franklin, Bryant and Washington Buildings for the ensuing year. Two of the teachers resigned, one of them, Miss Moran, it is said, sent in her resignation because she was about to be transferred to the "Irving" school.

Grace Church.

The Bishop of the Diocese of New Jersey made his annual visitation to this parish on Sunday night. The evening prayer service was conducted by the Rector, assisted by the Rev. Dr. Taylor. Bishop Scarborough preached from the text: "I have finished the work which Thou gavest me to do."

During his address the Bishop spoke in sincere commendation of Archdeacon Rodman and his work in the Diocese, and confessed how sorry he was over the resignation of Dr. Rodman as Dean, which office he had filled for fifteen years past with such gain to the Diocese and assistance to the Bishop.

He then confirmed twenty persons presented by the Rector. The offerings were devoted to the Missionary work of the Diocese.

A BAD WRECK.

A serious wreck occurred on the Central Railroad, just West of the Richmond street crossing at 7:53 Saturday morning, which resulted in piling up and splintering thirteen coal cars, and delaying travel over the road at that point for some time.

At that time a Central coal train, Engine No. 191, bound West, slowed up so as to allow the Flemington express due here at 7:58 A. M., to discharge and take on passengers at the station. The rear brakeman on the coal train did not display the proper signals.

Following the coal train was another West-bound train drawn by Philadelphia and Reading Engine, No. 338, in charge of Engineer Patrick Dugan and fireman David Halligan. Engineer Dugan told a Press reporter that the forward train was a full train's length ahead of him when he reversed his engine, but he struck the caboose of the forward train with disastrous results. Three cars on the Central "coaler" were derailed and the caboose was considerably damaged. Ten coal cars on the Philadelphia and Reading train were completely wrecked, the debris being piled up twenty feet in the air. A brakeman was standing in one of the wrecked cars when the crash came, but he escaped injury by jumping. Engineer Dugan remained at the throttle, but fireman Halligan jumped from the engine.

The wreck was the most complete of any that has taken place on the Central Railroad in a long time. Both of the main tracks and the North siding were blocked, and all trains were obliged to pass the wreck on the third track, or South siding. A wrecking crew arrived an hour or so afterwards, and it required the entire forenoon to remove the broken cars and open the road for traffic again.

There is no doubt that the cause of wrecking the cars on the Philadelphia and Reading train was due to Engineer Dugan suddenly reversing his engine so as to prevent a collision with the forward train. But the crash came, nevertheless, and four coal cars were lifted bodily from the track and deposited on a flat car, while five other cars were scattered along the track.

BEFORE THE G. A. R.

About forty of the members of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., of this city, attended divine service in a body at Trinity Reformed church, Sunday evening. According to the usual custom, May 30 is designated as Memorial Day, and the Sunday preceding Memorial Day is set apart for the veterans to attend church in a body. The church was crowded on this occasion, and the service was both solemn and impressive. Rev. Mr. Schenck took his text from Exodus 17:14—"And the Lord said unto Moses, write this for a memorial in a book, and rehearse it in the ears of Joshua."

The preacher said it was an old custom to establish memorial events; in ancient times pillars, obelisks, etc., were designated as memorials, but in modern times Easter, Thanksgiving, Christmas and Decoration Day are memorials. The 30th of May speaks of the second birth; it recalls the struggle and death and the freedom from slavery; it recalls the battles fought in behalf of the integrity of the union, the treason and triumph, the victory and defeat of those terrible days. In honor and esteem we hold the loyal dead, and the annual pilgrimage to their graves brings to mind the fact that their memory is still green.

Rev. Mr. Schenck went on to compare the civil war with the conflict between the Amalekites and Israelites in the Rephidim. When Sumpter was fired upon, it was a terrible shock to the nation; the actual separation of the North and South was unlooked for. The civil war, the most bitter of any that has ever raged, was a conflict between kindred of common ancestry; it was Anglo-Saxon in death struggle with Anglo-Saxon.

"Third," continued the preacher, "The late war was protractive and obstinate, covering a period of four years, but the clouds were finally dispersed and there was peace. The victory was not achieved by sword or bayonet or strategem alone, but by the union of God and man; while you were fighting in the valley, your wives and children were praying on the mount."

The speaker paid a loyal tribute to Grant, Sheridan, Sherman and Hancock, adding that all honor is due to the brave man who threw himself in the trench and said: "My body as a sacrifice, if you please, but a divided flag shall never be."

Finally, concluded Mr. Schenck, another similarity is the obligation of the living to the dead—to the present and past; we are not only heirs to those who have gone before us, but we are debtors; Memorial Day is in recognition of our duties to call from oblivion the names of the dead heroes. We should have written on the tablets of our heart the record of the civil war, and thus become living memorials. Twenty-five years have elapsed since the last gun was fired, and today peace reigns—one country, one constitution is our destiny forever.

The congregation joined in singing "My Country 'Tis of Thee," and the audience dispersed with the benediction.

—While responding to an alarm of fire, Sunday evening, First Assistant Eng'r R. A. Lane was thrown from the truck on Park avenue and badly bruised about the body.

Starting a New Business Street.

Mr. Edward Love has just purchased a piece of land adjoining his property at North avenue and Peace street, which gives him a lot 25 feet front on the latter street by 25 feet deep. He will erect thereon a building that will have a desirable store below and be connected in its upper stories with Mr. Love's new factory now in course of erection.

The opening of Peace street as a business thoroughfare is thus beginning, and Mr. Love will have the credit of building the first of the many stores that will line the street in a few years.

A Valuable Work.

James Crosby of Oneida county, New York, is now in Plainfield showing Johnson's Universal-Cyclopedia, a work of real merit. It has 31 Departments, with an editor of the highest scholarly standing for each. Thousands of distinguished persons have declared it to be the best cyclopedia for general reference.

It is not only the best Cyclopedia, but it is a whole library of "universal knowledge" from the pens of the greatest scholars the world has produced. 2,000 of the most eminent scholars living have become responsible for the accuracy and thoroughness of the work, by signing their names to their contributions. Do not fail to examine "Johnson's" before purchasing any other.

Mr. Crosby has a number of testimonials from our best citizens, who have the work. The following speaks for itself:

Mr. James Crosby:

DEAR SIR:—I have looked over the encyclopedia you left with me, and can unhesitatingly say that to my mind for all laymen, Johnson's Encyclopedia is the best I have yet seen. It is a library in itself. It contains one special article, (I believe) worth the price of the entire work! I should be pleased to avail myself of your offer did I not already have a set.

Plainfield, May 12, 1889. J. E. MARTINE.

Read About Spring Suits.

The popular clothing firm of Messrs Geo. Watson & Co. are having a great run on their lines of Spring suits cut from custom goods at $12, $13 and $15 a suit that are fully described in their advertisement, which we copy in full for the benefit of our readers:

"The very newest and the very choicest Spring suits complete for $12, $13 and $15.

"Just before Easter our buyer informed us of a large lot of elegant Spring suitings that had arrived too late to be sold to the merchant tailoring trade for whom they were intended, which we made a low offer on for spot cash and secured the entire lot after some delay. Our cutting force were put on them and our best tailors selected to make them up, and now the advance lots are on our lines in all the new cuts, complete for $12, $13 and $15 a suit.

"The general character of these elegant goods are the new and fashionable Saxony mixtures, stripes and plaids, in all the different shades of new Spring colors, light, medium and dark, of the soft and fine high cost quality found only in custom parlors, while the cut, trimming and make-up are in correct keeping with the value of the goods, which is far above the extreme low price at which we propose to sell these beautiful Spring suits.

"Remember, we can show you from five to nine different shades of each pattern, none of which can be found outside of our concern, all ready to put on, and you can see sample suits in our South window, and full racks of each style on our second floor.

"Look all around, but avoid future regrets by seeing these beautiful suits before you buy. Geo. Watson & Co., Broad and Market streets."

This enterprising firm are recognized as the leaders of fashion in this city and their garments are always in quick demand, but the rush for these elegant Spring suits is phenomenal and their store is like a bee hive all day long and up to 11 o'clock on Saturday nights, when the rush is too great for comfort.—Newark Press.

IS YOUR BAKING POWDER PURE?

Do its Manufacturers Publish all the Ingredients Used?

IS IT FREE FROM AMMONIA?

As is well known, ammonia is unhealthful in food, and dries up the bread material.

Protection to consumers of food compounds lies in their ability to choose those made from healthful substances. Unless manufacturers publish just what their baking powder is made of, do not use their goods, but buy instead

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER.

This powder is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, and strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, with a little wheat flour to preserve it. This is attested by the official analyses of Government and State chemists, and physicians, and chemists of Boards of Health throughout the country.

YOU CAN'T PLEASE EVERYBODY!

Is an old saying. But it's astonishing what a number of people we manage to please with our stock of Spring Clothing. This is especially true of the goods we make up for the little ones. It would take a good deal of space and an eloquent pen to do justice to the many pretty and tasteful garments which we design and make up for the youngsters. All of these styles are our own, and are the result of much patient thought and effort. There may be places where an assortment equal to our own is to be met with, but you'll travel a long way to find it, and when you succeed you'll note that the prices are far above our limit for a similar class of goods. We study to please and we succeed. Mothers are pleased because they find just what suits their boys without a long hunt for it. The boys are pleased because the clothes fit them so well and look so handsome. The rich and the poor are both pleased because they secure good value, and everybody is pleased with the prices. Our Clothing for larger boys and men has the same artistic and shapely appearance, and as to value for the money, it is simply unapproachable.

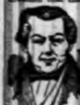
THE ROTHSCHILDS.

An Old and Remarkable Story of Enterprise and Success.

Baron Amschel and the Great Banking-House He Founded—Nathan and His Four Brothers—Baron James and His Experience with Vernet, the Artist.

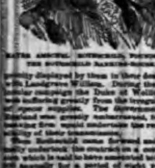
[Special Correspondence.]

FRANKFORT, GERMANY.—[illegible]



BARON JAMES VON ROTHSCHILD.

[illegible]

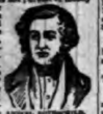


MAYER AMSCHEL ROTHSCHILD, FOUNDER OF THE ROTHSCHILD BANKING-HOUSE.

[illegible]

In 1815, on account of their support of the allied armies by their generous supplies of money and credit, the whole family was raised to the ranks of the nobility, and in 1822 received the baronial dignity.

Nathan Mayer, the first head of the English house, was the ablest of the five sons, and [illegible]



LIONEL ROTHSCHILD.

His son, Baron Lionel, born in 1808, inherited much of his father's shrewdness, and yet few of his vices. He was benevolent in the best sense of the word, and gave munificently with both hands, and it is believed that most of his beneficence was secret.

Anselm Mayer, the oldest son of Mayer Amschel, was born in 1773 and died in 1855, aged eighty-two. The next son, Solomon, was born in 1774, and died in 1855, eighty-one years of age. He founded the Vienna house. Karl, the fourth son, born 1788 and died 1855, aged sixty-seven years, founded the house in Naples. The youngest son, Baron James, was born 1792, and died in 1868, at the age of seventy-six years. He established the house at Paris. [illegible]

Baron James, the founder of the Paris house, was one of the shrewdest members of the family. When floating the bonds of the Northern Railroad of France he provoked the most formidable combination ever formed against the Rothschilds, and the only one that was ever completely successful, and ended with the formation of an anti-Rothschild syndicate for the control of the Russian railways. To illustrate his closeness, an anecdote tells that once upon a time Baron James went to Horace Vernet, the artist, to have his portrait painted. Vernet named 4,000 francs as the price. The banker tried for some time to beat the painter down, till at last Vernet threatened to treble his charge if there was another word said on the subject. "Am I to paint it, or am I not?"

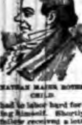
The financier bolted from the studio, thinking the artist mad. "Wait a moment," cried Vernet, after him, "I will do your portrait for nothing." And he did paint him on the gigantic canvas of "La Smala" as "a hideous-looking Jew running away with a casket of jewels and money, his face expressive of the most sordid avarice."

A somewhat different story is told by the same authority. Baron James consented to pose to Eugene Delacroix for the head of a beggar. One of Delacroix's pupils, mistaking the ragged model for what he seemed to be, slipped a trifle in his hand. Rothschild thanked him, kept the money and made inquiries. He learned that the young man was a genius, but poor, and had to labor hard for the means of advancing himself. Shortly afterward the young fellow received a letter stating that charity pays interest, and that the accumulated interest on the amount he had so generously given to the beggar was represented by the sum of ten thousand francs, which was lying at his disposal at the office of the Rothschilds.



NATHAN MAYER ROTHSCHILD.

Any attempt to give an idea of the wealth of the Rothschild family would be mere guesswork. The affairs of the syndicate are conducted with the strictest secrecy, and a system of book-keeping has been devised by the heads of the various houses which leaves clerks as much in the dark concerning the affairs of their employers as the public at large. Every body knows, however, that the Rothschilds are an influence in the political affairs of Europe, and that they can dictate war or peace whenever it may suit their interests. Whether their purchase of American securities must be considered a benefit or a danger to the United States remains to be seen, inasmuch as the family have always taken a lively interest in the political affairs of countries in which they had invested funds, and the Rothschilds as a political factor in American affairs is a prospect which may well be viewed with misgivings by all patriotic citizens of the glorious Republic.

WILLIAM WALTER WELLS.

He Must Be a Noble Man.

Secretary-of-the-Interior Noble has a habit of making friends of his enemies. A Congressman recently told him that he ought to dismiss a certain clerk, because, as he said: "I heard him say that you were cross, ill-natured and given to invective, and all that sort o' thing." Secretary Noble thanked the Congressman, bade him good day and then sent for the clerk. When that worthy came tremblingly into the presence of his superior, General Noble said: "I offended you recently, didn't I? Please tell me when and how." The man was so shocked that his teeth chattered, and he was unable to answer. With kindly inquiry, the Secretary ascertained that one afternoon just as the department was closing he had impatiently made a hurried and seemingly petulant demand upon the young man which hurt his feelings. When he had learned the facts, which had wholly escaped his memory, Secretary Noble said: "I felt that something was wrong, and I ascribe you to say that I beg your pardon for any word or deed which might have hurt your feelings, because I didn't mean to trouble you, and I know how much a little thing in a superior officer may annoy and fret a subordinate." That man's grandchildren will sing the praises of Noble when monuments are crumbled or forgotten.

It Was Gone.

"What do you see in that old Fossilby, Edith?" asked young De Smyth of his sister; "he hasn't a single redeeming feature."

The Training of Children.

The training of children in those matters which mark good-breeding should begin at an early age. A boy five years old is none too young to be taught to take off his hat to a lady, not to pass between people who are talking together, to stand until ladies are seated. All such things are acquired far more easily by early drilling than they can ever be afterwards. Indeed, it is questionable whether any one who has been brought up without such training can ever acquire that habitual courtesy which marks the true gentleman or lady.

FREEHOLDERS PROCEEDINGS.

OFFICIAL.

ELIZABETH, N. J., May 7, 1889.

Pursuant to adjournment the board of chosen freeholders of Union county met on Tuesday, May 7, 1889, at 2.30 p. m.

Present—Director Hubbard, and freeholders Briant, Doty, Donahue, Howard, Houston, Jones, Kyte, Kleinhans, Pierson, Roll, Thompson, Vanderbeek, Van Saun, Wright, West, Whaley—17.

Absent—none.

The minutes of last meeting (omitting bills ordered paid) were read and on motion approved.

COMMUNICATIONS.

To the Director of the Board of Chosen Freeholders.

HONORABLE SIR:—I would respectfully request that my name in favor of Linden-ave be stricken from the petition advocating that road. In my opinion after carefully examining into the question as to what in my opinion is most for the public good I would respectfully endorse the adoption of St. Georges-ave as being the road most beneficial to the public good.

Respectfully yours,
FERDINAND BLANCKE.

On motion of Freeholder Howard received and ordered placed on file.

From Common Council city of Rahway:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the county of Union:

GENTLEMEN:—At a meeting of the Common Council held last evening the following resolution, offered by Councilman Acker was adopted.

Resolved, That the Common Council commends the selection of St. Georges-ave as one of the roads to be macadamized, under the new county road law, and respectfully urges the board of chosen freeholders to make no change in their determination which will not include said avenue as one of the selected roads.

Resolved That the city clerk be directed to transmit a copy of the above resolution to the board of chosen freeholders.

Respectfully yours,
CHAS. H. LAMBERT,
City Clerk.

On motion of Freeholder Roll received and placed on file.

A petition from the taxpayers and property owners of Linden township, Elizabeth and Rahway, asking that the adoption of St. Georges-ave as a "county road" remain unchanged and irrevocable.

On motion of Freeholder Thompson received and ordered placed on file.

A petition from the taxpayers and legal voters of Fanwood township asking that the main road running through Willow Grove school district be made a "county road".

On motion of Freeholder West received and ordered placed on file.

Freeholder Vanderbeek asked that privilege be granted to mayor, committee of City Council and citizens of Elizabeth to be heard in relation to county roads, which on motion was unanimously granted.

By Director Hubbard:

Resolved, That eight hundred dollars be transferred from the miscellaneous account to the account of bridges and culverts.

Freeholder Thompson moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

Freeholder Howard moved that the rules be suspended, and that the payment of bills be taken up.

Which was carried.

The following bills, audited and approved, were read and ordered paid by a unanimous vote:

Stationery—Matthias Plum, $17; Cook & Hall, $21.

Members' Pay—James T. Pierson, $27.50; Frank Kleinhans, $54; William Howard, $61.80; P. D. VanSaun, $17.20; Geo. Kyte, $64.44; William T. Thompson, $64; Wm. H. Briant, $54; Wm. T. West, $170; Robert G. Houston, $30; George Wright, $7.80; John J. Donahue, $36.

Committee expenses—Bradford Jones, $7.50; James T. Pierson, $11; William H. Briant, $8.36; Wm. J. Thompson, $9.01; Robert G. Houston, $1.75; Geo. Wright, $4.25; George Kyte, $4.50; John J. Donahue, $2.

On motion of Freeholder Pierson a recess was taken until four o'clock.

On roll call after recess all the members were present.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Grand Jury:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the county of Union:

GENTLEMEN:—The Grand Jury of Union county for the May term, 1889, unanimously passed the following resolution, to wit:

That the Grand Jury hereby refuses to accept the [illegible] per diem allowed by law, and desire to accept in lieu thereof the dinners heretofore furnished to the Grand Jury by the board of freeholders.

Very respectfully,
C. A. SWIFT, Clerk.

On motion of Freeholder West received and ordered placed on file.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

From Committee of the Whole:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the county of Union:

GENTLEMEN:—By the direction of the committee of the whole I hereby report that the said committee after duly considering the interest of the county and the various cities and townships through which the road passes, leading from Elizabeth to Rahway, that it was the unanimous opinion of said committee that no change be made in the road heretofore adopted by this board leading from Elizabeth to Rahway and would recommend that the action of the board on said road be sustained.

GEORGE KYTE,
Secretary.

May 7, 1889.

On motion of Freeholder Wright adopted unanimously.

From the Committee of the Whole:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

GENTLEMEN:—At a meeting of the Committee of the Whole called this day by the Director to consider the propriety of altering or changing any of the roads heretofore adopted as "county roads" by this board, would respectfully report by their direction that in their opinion it was for the best interest of the county and all parties concerned not to make any change, and would therefore recommend that no alteration or change be made in any of the said roads heretofore adopted as "county roads," but that the action of the board be sustained on all roads heretofore adopted as "county roads" and the committee would further recommend that a road leading from Springfield to Scotch Plains be also adopted as a "county road." GEORGE KYTE, Sec.

A MOTHER'S PRIDE.

How She Tried to Conceal the Condition of Her Drunken Son.

"I am reminded of an incident which I witnessed a few days ago on an outgoing train," says a writer in the Indianapolis News. "A plainly-dressed old woman and a tall, awkward young man, evidently her son, had been in the city, and were going home. There was an uncertainty in the boy's step as he came into the car which indicated that he was considerably intoxicated. They sat down together and he at once began to talk in a loud voice. His words were drivelling nonsense, without a tinge of humor. His mother, however, seemed strangely insensible to her son's disgrace. She laughed freely at the incoherent remarks and replied to them, though in so low a tone that her words were inaudible to the passengers.

"People exchanged surprised glances and began to talk of the unusual scene. Some thought the mother indifferent to her son's condition, and therefore little better than he herself. Others were more charitable and did not believe she realized his condition.

"As I listened, it seemed to me the woman's tones were not natural. There was something that sounded strained and affected in her laugh. Her old bonnet was drawn down so that her face was entirely hidden, and I observed that she kept it so, carefully. Then I began watching her closely, for I wanted to see her features. I felt that a glance at them would assure me whether her cheerfulness was real or feigned.

"The train hurried along, and I began to think my watchfulness was to go unrewarded. The young man rambled foolishly on with his talk, and his mother continued to laugh at his pointless wit. Then the engine whistled, and the couple prepared to get off. I leaned forward and saw the woman fumble about searching for a package. The hand she put out trembled like an aspen. As she rose from the seat she turned her head and I caught a glimpse of her face. Her eyes were dimmed with tears and her furrowed cheeks were wet. The expression of her countenance was so sad that it rises up before me day and night. The poor woman in her pride had preferred to appear unconscious of her son's disgrace, hoping the strangers who witnessed it might not comprehend."

On the Ragged Edge of Bliss.

"And you bought this for me, Mr. Harrison! And am I to wear it, really and truly from you?"

"Yes, sweet Arabella, that ring will seal our troth; and this will seal your lips," and he kissed her.

The coy, shy creature was indignantly surprised as she drew away from him, and said:

"Mr. Harrison, how dare you insult me? I have always regarded you as a brother; and now, I see, you are infatuated like all the rest, and our friendship must cease."

"But, Arabella, you encouraged me to hope—"

"I never encouraged you to hope for any thing but the affection of a sister. Besides, you have this evening done that which is unpardonable. Begone, sir!"

As he despondently started for the door she called him, with tears in her voice:

"Stay a moment. Let me think. I must not be too hasty. Came you honestly by this ring?"

"Most unkindest cut of all. Do you suspect my honesty?"

"No, Mr. Harrison; but whence comes this ring. What did it cost?"

"It came from Galt's, and cost $2,000. Every gem there is a precious stone. It is valuable, intrinsically; but it is useless now to me."

"Well, Mr. Harrison, what startled me was to think that you cared enough for me to purchase such a ring to seal our troth, and then to let me slip from your arms so easily."

He took fresh courage, took a better hold, held her in his manly arms—and they are sitting there yet, probably, on the ragged edge of bliss.

MISCELLANEOUS.

It Makes You Hungry

"I have used Paine's Celery Compound and it has had a salutary effect. It invigorated the system and I feel like a new man. It improves the appetite and facilitates digestion." J. T. COPELAND, Pickens, S. C.

Spring medicine means more now-a-days than it did ten years ago. The winter of 1887-88 has left the nerves all fagged out. The nerves must be strengthened, the blood purified, liver and bowels regulated. Paine's Celery Compound—the Spring medicine of to-day—does all this, as nothing else can. Prescribed by Physicians. Recommended by Druggists. Endorsed by Ministers. Guaranteed by the Manufacturers to be

The Best Spring Medicine.

"In the spring of 1887 I was all run down. I would get up in the morning with so tired a feeling, and was so weak that I could hardly get around. I bought a bottle of Paine's Celery Compound, and before I had taken it a week I felt very much better. I can cheerfully recommend it to all who need a building up and strengthening medicine." Mrs. B. A. Dow, Burlington, Vt.

Paine's Celery Compound

is a unique tonic and appetizer. Pleasant to the taste, quick in its action, and without any injurious effect, it gives that rugged health which makes everything taste good. It cures dyspepsia and kindred disorders. Physicians prescribe it. $1.00. Six for $5.00. Druggists.

IN CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY.

To Catharine M. Torrey and Samuel W. Torrey:

By virtue of an order of the Court of Chancery of New Jersey, made on the day of the date hereof, in a cause wherein The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States are complainant, and you and others are defendants, you are required to appear, plead, demur, or answer to the complainant's bill, on or before the Tenth day of July next, or the said bill will be taken as confessed against you.

The said bill is filed to foreclose a mortgage made by William S. Maddock to the complainant dated the twenty-eighth day of June eighteen hundred and eighty-seven, on lands in the city of Plainfield, Union county, New Jersey. And you Catharine M. Torrey are made party defendant because you claim to own said lands, and you Samuel W. Torrey because you are the husband of Catharine M. Torrey, and may claim some interest in said lands.

Take Notice.

Whereas Isaac Line, late of North Plainfield Township, Somerset county, New Jersey, deceased, in his lifetime, with Abram M. Vail, entered into certain written contracts for the sale of building lots situate in the city of Plainfield, county of Union and State of New Jersey, to wit: One contract dated June 8th, 1886, for the sale to John J. Bourke of a lot described as Lot No. 7 on the South side of Division avenue, fifty feet front and running from the sidewalk to the rear line of lots on Union Avenue; one contract dated November 13th, 1886 for the sale to Neil Scott of a lot described as Lot No. 8 on the South side of Division avenue, fifty feet front and running from sidewalk to the rear line of Union avenue lots; one contract dated October 18th, 1886, for the sale to John T. Stafford, of Plainfield, aforesaid, of a lot described as Lot No. 1 on the south side of Division avenue, fifty-six feet front and running from the sidewalk to the rear line of Union avenue lots.

Now, therefore, this is to give notice to all persons concerned that the subscriber, Executor of the said Isaac Line, deceased, will apply to the Orphans' Court of the County of Union, to be holden at Elizabeth, in and for said county, on Wednesday, the third day of July, next, to decree the fulfillment of the said contracts, respectively, so far as regards the estate of said deceased, according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

Dated April 24th, 1889.

THE GREAT RESERVATION
AND Milk River Valley
OF MONTANA

Have just been opened for settlement to the home-seeker. You have a right to a homestead under your government rights. Why not use it before it is too late? Land all free to settlers, and is the only part of the United States where free land suitable for stock and grain raising can be taken, at or near stations on the line of a railroad. You can take your choice from level vally lands or gently rolling bench lands. Soil very rich, and produces all grains and vegetables without irrigation. Climate delightful, being made very mild in Winter by warm Chinooks from the Pacific ocean. Timber, water and coal in abundance. Cheap land seekers' and settlers' tickets. Buy tickets to Glasgow, Chinook (Assinaboine), Benton, Great Falls, Helena and Butte. Plenty of government land near these points. For further information, the new pamphlet, "The Great Reservation", maps, etc., apply to F. I. Whitney, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, St. P., M. & M. R'y, St. Paul, Minn.

AN ANGEL UNAWARES.

OTTO RANSOM crouched low on the curbing and shivered.

What did it matter that the snow was falling fast and that the sharp winds came quickly around the corner! The fierce, impulsive pain at his heart that hurt him so made him forget his threadbare clothes and the February weather alike.

His mother had been dead for years, and to-day the clods had rattled down on the box hiding his unnatural, intemperate father from sight. And now he was a homeless, penniless orphan, starving in a city of plenty and prosperity.

"Move along here; don't sit mumping until you freeze to death." A rough hand shook him out of his reverie and he looked up. It was dark now, and the wind continued to whip around the corners.

Well, he would "move on." It didn't matter where he moved to so he kept moving.

Otto started, but his limbs ached so that he staggered rather than walked, and the emptiness of his stomach created a dizziness that added to the difficulty.

"A glass less, sir, and you'd walk better," said a finely-dressed fop passed him.

"I never drank a drop of liquor in my life, sir; I'm ill and—starving, if you must know," retorted the boy, with all the strength he could muster, stung by the reference to the hateful habit.

"Aw, yes," sneered the dude; "that's what they all twy to make out; vewy respectable, aa! and badly tweated."

Otto shut his lips tightly to check the murderous feeling within his heart, and kept "moving."

Ah! here was an unpretentious little grocery. May be he could step inside and get warm, at least; his foot was on the sill and his hand on the door-handle.

Some one inside, evidently in a hurry, opened the door with a jerk, sending Otto sprawling on the floor. His head struck a projecting showcase in the fall, and, stunned and senseless, he lay with the blood trickling from his temple.

"Gott in himmel!" exclaimed the proprietor, springing around the counter. "Why, Lennox, you've gone and murdered somepody!"

"Let 'em get out of my way, then," snorted the customer addressed, as he strode off, caring little for what he had done.

"I shudged Lennox to haf some heart," said the old German, lifting Otto and examining his head, "but I finds he haf none."

He carried the boy to a couch in the rear room and applied restoratives. Otto opened his eyes. Where was he? He was warm, at any rate; but his head—he put up his hand. O, yes; he remembered somebody pushed him over.

"Thank Gott you be's alive!" and a round, good-natured face bent over him. "Jenks, he says as how you vas trunk, but I knows better. I smell no visky an' I says no; but you be's sick, I reckon?"

"I'm starving," replied Otto, "and I wish I were dead."

"Sh—h: don't gif oop like dat. You vas goot as ten dead men already. Ond if you be's hungry, why, I'll gif you a right goot supper. It's awful to get so done ofer ven you vas young, my lad."

"I've no money to pay for the supper," said Otto, faintly, shutting his eyes with a sigh.

"Vell, vell; as I'm a Gristian, I don't ask pennies where none ish. You shall haf somedings to eat, all the same."

After Otto had eaten his bountiful lunch he felt his strength returning speedily. His head had been bound up and the pain at his heart was growing less. "I wish I could repay you," said he to the old German, who sat looking intently at him, evidently taking mental notes.

"He was buried to-day, sir," answered Otto, "and as mother died long ago, I've no home, nor friends—but you, sir."

"Vell, vell! hadn't your fader no property?"

"No, sir; he—drank." And Otto turned his head away to hide his tears.

"Ah! I see. I see! said the old man. "I see about how it ish. Moder died of neglect; fader died of visky, and te poy turned oud to die 'cause he haf no money to buy reuts. I see. I see! I haf lifed so long as you and a leetle longer, and I know the world pooty vell now, I tell ye. Now, vat you going to do mit yourself after to-night?"

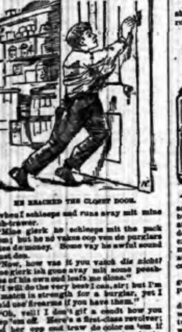
The old fellow drummed on the counter with his fingers a moment in silence. Then he said: "How vas it if you vatch mine shtore for purglars? Somepody preaks in vhen I schleeps and runs avay mit mine cash-trawer.



HE REACHED THE CLOSET DOOR.

"Mine glerk he schleeps mit the pack room; but he no vakes oop ven de purglars takes de money. Some vay he awful sound shust dos.

"Now, how vas it you vatch dis night? Mine glerk ish gone avay mit some peesiness of his own ond leafs me alone."

"I will do the very best I can, sir; but I'm no match in strength for a burglar, yet I could use firearms if you have them."

"Oh, vell! I don't gif a cendt how you keep 'em off. Here's a first-class revolver; load her opp ond traw de color on 'em if you wants to. Mine glerk, he nefer shoots, 'cause he no vakes; but he ish gone avay to see somepody vot don't know to see 'im, ond if you'll vatch, why! it's a bargain."

"All right," exclaimed Otto, "you may trust me to wake up."

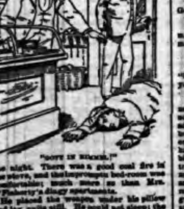
"Goot!" and forthwith the old fellow began showing him around his establishment. "Now, here," said he, pausing at a small door, "here ish mine safe. Since they runs away mit mine cash-drawer I puts every cendt in here at night ond locks it opp. The closet ish shust pig enough for the safe, cleverly, and I shuts the door and locks it, and nopody ish any viser."

"No, I suppose not," said Otto.

"Ond oop there ish a bolt vich nefer vastens the door before I locks it, but it's of no consequence now."

So Otto was left in charge of the grocery for the night armed with the revolver and an injunction to "shust pull the button mit the vall if any dings mysterious come 'round."

Otto lay down on the couch in the back room, after locking the outer door and noticing that every thing was in order for the night. There was a good coal fire in the stove, and the improvised bed-room was comfortable; much more so than Mrs. O'Flaherty's dingy apartments.



"GOTT IN HIMMEL!"

He placed the weapon under his pillow and lay quite still. He could not sleep; the [illegible] of the responsibility coming so suddenly as it did, together with an outlook for a friend, seemed such grand, good news that it drove repose far from him.

After some time had elapsed Otto thought he heard some one at the door. Presently it was unlocked and some person came in very quietly.

The boy slipped off the couch with the revolver in his hand, and crept to the middle door. The burglar was busy rummaging in the darkness at the counter. Presently he came down the room toward Otto. No; he was going to the closet. "He must know where the safe is," mused the boy, as he heard him turn the key in the lock.

Then the burglar struck a match, and Otto peeped around to see what he was doing. Why, he had gone into the closet and was already at the safe.

The boy's heart throbbed wildly. Would he kill him now? No, he would do better. He would slip up to the door, push it shut, shove the bolt above quickly, and have him. Otto could scarcely repress a shout of triumph at the prospect of corralling a real, live burglar.

Cautiously creeping along, guided by the light from the stove, he reached the closet door, threw himself against it, and shot the bolt above his head into place.

A muttered curse came from the inside, and the occupant of the closet tried the door, but the stout bolt held him fast.

"O, I've got you!" shouted Otto, in a frenzy of delight, as he put down the revolver and lighted the gas. Then he touched the button in the wall. In a few minutes the old German rushed in.

"Mein Gott! me poy; and now vhere ish he," and he swung around so fast Otto came nearly being knocked down again.

It was enough, however, to bring a trio of "blue-coats," and the old man pointed to the closet exclaiming: "De poy, he vatch for him, ond coop him oop mit de gloset. Bully for de poy."

One broad-shouldered policeman nodded his approval on Otto, as he leisurely pulled back the bolt and let the light into the closet.

Away back in the corner, squeezed in between the end of the safe and the wall, all shivering, sat the identical clerk who couldn't "vake oop vhen de purglars come."

"Ash I lif, it be's you, Hans. Vell, vell!" and the old Teuton, completely collapsed, sank back on the end of a store-box to recuperate.

"You thought when you vent away on peesiness the coast would be clear, ond you'd haf some goot times getting some more cash-trawers ond somedings. I see now vhy you couldn't vake oop!"

The policemen whisked of the guilty, quaking Hans in a trice, leaving the astonished grocery-keeper and Otto to speculate alone together.

"Vell, vell!" said the old man, after dwelling on the rascality of Hans for some time, "it seems I haf no glerk shust now. Now, mine poy, would you mind sthaying mit me for avile?"

"And clerk for you?" asked Otto, putting his hands together prayerfully.

"Can you cipher somedings if somepody pays, and don't get cheated?"

MODERN PROVERBS.

CONSCIENCE is a guide to wisdom, but a fool runs in his own way.

HUMILITY discovers the footprints of Christ.

A GOOD book is a strong foundation and a safe rock upon which to build a house.

IT is more blessed to give than to take, and I think this is the reason so many are wont to give advice.

REPUTATION is a garment, character wears it.

IF a man can not find any good in his fellow man let him pump out his own heart and see if his own thoughts don't need filtering.

THE audacity of man carries him high, still it is nothing but gas that carries a balloon to the clouds.

RICHNESS that a million dollars could not harm a hair of your head, but a slip of the tongue takes the scalp off.

WHEN the brains die, spirits haunt the mind; this is modern spiritualism, and they who become devoid of understanding increase in superstition and ignorance.

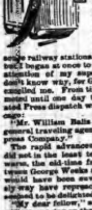
AN HONORABLE MAN.



AFTER many years of close application to the business of my employers (a great express company) I was promoted to the position of general traveling agent. George Weeks and I had started out together. We had been graduated from the same modest institution of learning, and had, at the same time, accepted rather humble positions as express agents at obscure railway stations. I don't know why, but I began at once to attract the favorable attention of my superiors. I say that I don't know why, for George in every way excelled me. From time to time I was promoted until one day the following Associated Press dispatch was sent out from Chicago:

The rapid advancement thus given me did not in the least tend to interrupt the warm, the old-time friendship existing between George Weeks and me. Many a man would have been envious, would in some sly way have reproached me, but George seemed to be delighted.

"My dear fellow," said he, when he had met me one day on the railway platform at a little town where he was stationed, "you don't know how thoroughly pleased I am to see you climbing up this way. Why, you'll be the president of the whole concern after awhile, and then you can appoint me as your private secretary, don't you see. Let us go into the office and sit down. I want to have a talk with you."

George had but little work to do—his station was far from being a busy one—and we sat down to the genuine enjoyment of cob pipes and natural-leaf tobacco.

"I suppose I am a sort of slow coach or, better, perhaps, it can be said, a balky horse; no, that won't do, for a balky horse won't pull, whereas I pull all I can. Guess I should be termed a weak horse. You may not know it, Bill, but I have done every thing I can to merit promotion, but to save my life I can not attract advantageous attention; but I am not complaining, for I have a deep-rooted belief that I may after awhile get the agency at a town of some size and at a salary of some consequence. I've got an idea. I thing of asking for a transfer to some station away out on some new railroad—out at some place which may now be in the woods, but which has the promise of becoming a city."

"I have a better plan for you than that, George."

"What is it?"

"Well, I am going to use every ounce of my influence in favor of your advancement."

"No, I won't have it that way."

"Why?"

"Why?" he repeated with emphasis. "Hang it! did you have anybody to shove you forward?"

"No, but—"

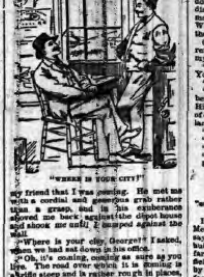
"But nothing!" he broke in. "There is no use in arguing with me, Bill, for I will not accept such a favor at your hands. I admit that the position I take is whimsical, but a whim is, nine times out of ten, stronger than a principle; for, like a firmly-fixed habit, a whim holds you with a sort of miserable clutch. See here now, old fellow, don't try to come any underhand business with me, for if you take pitying advantage of me and attempt to stand in the dark and assist me, I will resign my position under your grinding monopoly and become a howling anarchist."

"You will at least let me assist in getting you transferred to a post that has bright prospects?"

"Yes, I'll do that, but nothing more."

A few weeks from that time George was express agent at Balcath, a new station on a new road. His prospects, he wrote me, were good. "New houses," said he, "are springing up like May-apple stalks, and before long we shall have street railways and electric lights. Come out, when you feel that you are overworked, and see me."

I was overworked, or fancied that I was, and shortly after receiving George's letter I started for Balcath, having telegraphed my friend that I was coming. He met me with a cordial and generous grab rather than a grasp, and in his exuberance shoved me back against the depot house and shook me until I bumped against the wall.



"WHERE IS YOUR CITY?"

"Where is your city, George?" I asked, when we had sat down in his office.

"Oh, it's coming, coming as sure as you live. The road over which it is coming is a trifle steep and is rather rough in places, but the city will get here after awhile, wearing a silk dress and ear-bobs six inches long. Well, old fellow," he went on, giving me a hearty slap on the shoulder, "I am always glad to see you, but am particularly delighted this time."

"Why so?"

He leaned toward me. "Several days ago," said he, "I received twelve thousand dollars, sent to a large lumberman whose place of business is some ten miles from here. I sent word out to him, but he had gone away from home, and now, as there is no bank at this place—no vault or any thing—I am forced to keep the money here in the safe. Your coming has lifted a load off my mind, for I have many reasons for believing that it is pretty well known in this neighborhood that the money has been received, and I am afraid that an attempt may be made to rob the office."

"Have you seen any thing suspicious?" I asked.

"It may have been a fancy, aroused by overwrought alertness, but the actions of three rough-looking men who hung about here this morning were far from being agreeable. They poked about, and seemed to be examining the windows."

"I'll tell you what we'll do," I answered. "We'll take turn about keeping watch, and in the event an attempt is made to rob us we'll introduce into the programme an inspiriting feature."

The next night was wild with wind and terrific with thunder. I was to watch until twelve o'clock and then arouse George. The bed-room was very small, and between it and the office where the large safe was kept there was only a thin partition, through which a door had been cut. The hour was growing late. The wind had increased, and the thunder and lightning were playing a fearful game. I looked at my watch and was just on the point of calling George to take his post of duty, when there came a terrific report—a report that seemed to lift the house from its foundation. George sprang up.

"What was that?" he exclaimed.

"I don't know whether it was thunder or not," I replied.

"I don't think it was," he anxiously rejoined. "Let us look in the other room."

George preceded me with the lamp. "Great Cæsar!" he exclaimed, "the safe is blown all to pieces."

So it was. One side of the house had even been blown out. Fragments of the safe were scattered about, and on the floor we found fragments of money. The robbers, we soon discovered, had entered at a small window.

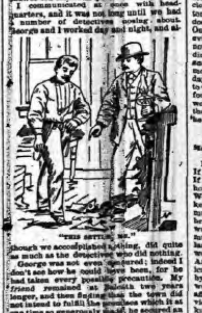
"I don't know why it should," I replied.

"No, I don't either, for that matter. Here come a lot of people. Now we'll have to answer ten thousand questions."

I communicated at once with headquarters, and it was not long until we had a number of detectives nosing about. George and I worked day and night, and although we accomplished nothing, did quite as much as the detectives who did nothing.



"THIS SETTLES ME."

George was not even censured; indeed I don't see how he could have been, for he had taken every possible precaution. My friend remained at Balcath two years longer, and then finding that the town did not intend to fulfill the promises which it at one time so generously made, he secured an appointment at a flourishing town in Kansas, but shortly afterwards he married the daughter of a wealthy saw-mill man and entered the real-estate business in Kansas City, having been assisted by the old gentleman.

We met frequently, and on no occasion did we ever fail to speak of that stormy night. It did not seem to me that he had ever recovered his old-time spirits, and many a time I heard him mutter against his stupidity.

"Stupidity?" I once asked.

"Yes, stupidity; I thought of the fact that the bed-room was too small to admit of the safe, but why didn't I think that the office was large enough to hold the bed?"

"Ah, well, I wouldn't worry over it. The company has never attached any blame to you and I don't see why you should blame yourself."

I went to Europe the next year, and after remaining abroad about eighteen months, returned home expecting to find George waiting for me at the pier, but he was not there. I went to my hotel and there found a letter from my friend.

"My Dear Bill," the letter ran, "you will be deeply shocked when you read this, not so much because it informs you that ere it reaches you I shall be dead, but an account of—well, I will tell you. After I had gone out to that town where the robbery occurred I became sick at heart.

"I had gone out there with the most honorable of intentions—in fact, my intentions remained honorable, with a momentary exception, until you came. Is this not an absurd statement? I will show you.

"Two days before you came I received the package of money. I was tempted. But how could I secure it? I could steal it, but that, I knew, would cause you pain, and the thought that you should ever regard me as a thief was maddening to me. Then I put aside all such thoughts and became my old honest self until you arrived. In a moment a devilish thought struck me. Under the very eye of the general traveling agent of the express company I would steal the money. But how? Ah! I settled that in a moment. With confederates? oh no, I must do it all myself. You know that I have studied many things and that odd experiments was a hobby of mine. Well, I would practice one of my odd experiments on that safe. I would blow it up with a slow match. I took the money out of the safe and hid it. I arranged my match. The first night every thing was too still. The next night was favorable. The thunder was fearful. I carefully removed the sash of a small window just before I went to bed.

"My match was arranged to go off at twelve o'clock, and I lighted it. I lay down about eight, you remember. Sleep? Not a wink. I lay there thinking, wondering if time had ceased to move onward. I counted the ticking of the clock in the office. How I wished it were a striker. The storm increased. Once I was about to spring up. There had come a loud crash. It was only the thunder. Could it be that the thing had gone out? I heard you moving around, and I fancied that I heard the snap of your watch as you closed it. Just then the explosion occurred. You know the rest.

"Bill, I have never seen a moment of peace since that time. My lungs were never strong. I am dying now. While you are far away believe me to be one of the most honorable of men. I am not quite so bad as I might be. I have placed twelve thousand dollars with interest in a package and have donated it to the express company. In a disguised hand I have made a false statement. But my name is not signed to it. What need they know so long as they get their money. Good-bye, old fellow."

George had died several weeks before my return. Shortly after I had gotten back to my business the president remarked:

"A very strange thing has happened. You remember the robbery out at Balcath?"

"Yes."

"Well, the man who committed the robbery has returned the money with interest. His name was John [illegible]cher, and we have, of course, made no effort to find him. Singular things happen in this world."

"Very."

"By the way, your old friend is dead."

"Yes."

"There was an honorable man."

I made no reply. OPIE P. READ.

A PHANTOM PLOWMAN.

Terrified Farmers Watched Him as He Turned Up the Soil Perfectly.

In the northwestern corner of Lower Merion township, Montgomery County, Pa., says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, a terrible hubbub has been raised by a phantom farmer, who is nightly seen plowing in a field. The apparition was first discovered by a farm hand who was returning late from courting a pretty maid. Emerging from a wooded path way that skirted an old forest for miles, this rustic was startled to hear a sepulchral voice commanding a team to halt. He looked in vain about the place for a moment or two and was about moving on again when the same sound fell on his ear. A shiver crept down his spinal column as he heard the creaking of an unseen harness, and this terror was far from being allayed by the whinny of a horse almost directly before him. At that moment the new moon stole over the neighboring tree tops, and in its misty light the rural swain plainly saw the phantom farmer. It was clearly outlined against the dark background, and its two hands held a steady grasp the projecting handles of a plow. Before it marched a pair of [illegible] horses, dimly outlined in a misty light, their heads erect and their eyes flashing fire as they moved hastily along. The young man waited another moment to reassure himself and was about to take to his heels, when plowman, horses and plow suddenly vanished. Then he, too, fled in wild alarm.

At Silas Brown's corner grocery on the night succeeding this, the young man, Albert Cooper by name, told this startling story. Brown, like many of the loungers in the store, smiled incredulously, and advised Cooper to "reform." A discussion arose, in which hot words were made that Cooper was drawing the long bow.

The upshot of the matter was that the crowd adjourned to the alleged scene of the ghost's operations to verify or disprove Cooper's tale.

They had not long to wait. Without the noises that had warned Cooper the night before, the phantom farmer appeared before the eyes of the seven men who sat upon the fence, or, to be more accurate, who almost fell from it in terror. His long white hair and beard streamed in the passing wind. No hat was on his head nor could any portion of his face be seen except the glistening eyes. These shot out from a height of more than seven feet from the ground, indicating that the spectral granger was taller than the average of human kind. About his body, which could not well be traced, there was a phosphorescent glow which dazzled the eyes of the terrified spectators and thrown far ahead of the steadily moving horses. The plow he leaned on seemed of skeleton frame, but it tossed off the soft, moist earth as easily as a steamer turns the river waves. On he came, the horses seeming to exhale fire, their heads erect and arching, and footfalls as firm and clear as any the watchers ever heard. At the corner of the field they turned obediently at a word from their spectral driver, and again passed before the affrighted spectators, who thereupon fled in haste.

On the following morning a crowd of rustics determined to go to the field to see whether any trace of the farmer could be found. As they came in sight of the inclosure one of the number exclaimed in astonishment: "I'll be durned if the thing doesn't plow, sure enough." He was right. One-half of the field had been gone over, evidently by no novice. The furrows were not quite so broad as those made by an ordinary plowman, but they were less ragged and more deep, and were as straight as the most experienced eye could make them. A day or two after the same group went out to view the field again, and this time they found that the phantom had finished his work. The owner of the field was one of the number, and he took a solemn oath that he had not turned a sod in the inclosure.

HOW TO BE HAPPY.

Many Reasons Why We Should Take Life Easy and Not Worry.

If you want a good appetite, don't worry. If you want a healthy body, don't worry. If you want things to go right in your house or your business, don't worry. Women find a sea of trouble in their housekeeping. Some one says they often put as much worry and anxiety into a loaf of bread, a pie or a cake, into the weekly washing and ironing, as should suffice for much weightier matters. This accounts largely for the angularity of American women. Nervousness, according to the American Artisan, is the bane of the American race. It is not confined to the women, by any means, but extends to the men as well. Even business men are sometimes afflicted, so we have heard, and so our advice not to yield to this habit will be most kindly received by all classes of readers. What good does fretting do!

It only increases with indulgence, like anger, or appetite, or love, or any other human impulse. It deranges one's temper, excites unpleasant feelings towards every body, and confuses the mind. It affects the whole person, unfits one for the proper completion of the work whose trifling interruption or disturbance started the fretful fit. Suppose these things go wrong to-day, the to-morrows are coming in which to try again, and the thing is not worth clouding your own spirit and those around you, injuring yourself and them physically—for the mind affects the body—and for such a trifle. Strive to cultivate a spirit of patience, both for your own good and the good of those about you. You will never regret the step, for it will not only add to your own happiness, but the example of your conduct will affect those with whom you associate and in whom you are interested. Suppose somebody makes a mistake, suppose you are crossed, or a trifling accident occurs; to fly into a fretful mood will not mend, but help to hinder the attainment of what you wish. Then, when a thing is beyond repair, waste no useless regrets over it, and do no idle fretting. Strive for that serenity of spirit that will enable you to make the best of all things. That means contentment in its best sense; and contentment is the only true happiness of life. A pleasant disposition and good work will make the whole surroundings ring with cheerfulness.

Equine Hospitality.

Billy, a horse attached to a police patrol station in Boston, has become known throughout the Hub by his liberality. A member of the mounted squad while answering roll call ties his horse to the post forming one corner of the head of Billy's stall, and as soon as the animal is fastened Billy picks up a mouthful of hay, forces it through the iron grating about his stall, and waits until his guest has eaten it. Then he repeats the operation and continues his hospitality until the officer returns for his horse. Billy began to do this early in the fall, without any suggestion from the men, and he does it twice a day, much to the satisfaction of his visitor.

It Didn't Matter Much.

Foreman (explaining the accident to the owner of the building)—Barney was workin' on the roof, sir, and he slipped and fell the whole four stories, bringing the cornice down with him, sir, and breaking both his legs and half his ribs.

Owner—Ah, well, never mind. I intended that cornice to come down anyway.—N. Y. Sun.

TO REMOVE WARTS.

Mark Twain Writes a Letter and Tells How It Is Done.

"I'd give one thousand dollars," said a well-to-do New-Yorker the other day, "to have this mark removed," and he held out a well-shaped and well-cared-for hand, on the back of which, between the thumb and first finger, was tattooed a big blue anchor. "When I was a little fool at school, with my head full of stories of adventure, my highest ambition was to go to sea. An old sailor who lived in the village tattooed about a dozen of us on the sly, and I remember the lies I told my mother, as I kept my hand done up in a rag, pretending I had cut it, till the sore healed. Then she gave me such a thrashing as broke up my plan, fortunately, to have a fine red and blue heart done on the back of the other. The disfigurement has caused me no end of annoyance since, and has cost me a considerable money for gloves, which I always wear, winter and summer, though I detest them in warm weather. But a man can't wear gloves at the table, and often at restaurants I catch people staring at my hand and I wonder if they think I have served my term in the fo'castle of some oyster scow or lumber schooner."

A tattooed mark is easily removed. Let me drop into personal history! When I was a small boy I had my share of warts. I tried in turn the 365 ways of removing them, but without results; indeed, I seemed to get wartier and wartier right along. But at last somebody revealed to me the 366th way, and I tried it. Thus: I drove a needle down into the basement of the wart; then held the other end of the needle in the flame of a candle some little time; the needle became red hot throughout its length, and proceeded to cook the wart. Presently I drew the needle out; if it had white atoms like nits sticking about its point, that wart was done; if the point was clear, I drove it in again and cooked it till I got those white things. They were the roots of the wart. Twenty-four hours later the wart would become soft and flabby, and I removed it with a single wipe of my hand. Where it had been was a smooth surface now, which quickly healed, and left no scar. Within two days I was wartless, and have so remained until this day.

Well, a long time afterward, when I was sixteen years old, a sailor tattooed an anchor and rope on the back of my left hand with India ink. The color was a deep, dark blue and extravagantly conspicuous. I was proud of it for awhile, but by the time I had worn it nine years I was tired of it and ashamed of it. I could find nobody who could tell me how to get rid of it; but at last my wart-experience of near half a generation before occurred to me, and I got my several needles and a candle straightway. I drove the needles along just under the surface of the skin and tolerably close together, and made them include the whole tattoo mark, then I fired upon them and cooked that device thoroughly. Next day I wiped the device off with my hand. The place quickly healed, and left no scar. A faint bluish tinge remained, and I was minded to begin again and cool that out; but as it was hardly detectable, and not noticeable, it did not seem worth the fuel, and so I left it there, and there it is yet, though I suppose I am the only member of my tribe that knows it.

I was in London a good many years ago, when the Tichborne claimants case was being tried, and a batch of learned experts testified that an India ink tattoo mark could not be removed; but I was not asked to testify, and so those people don't know any better to this day. Let the "well-to-do New Yorker" fetch me some needles and a candle, and name his bet. I will take his tip.

ROMANCE AND BLANKETS.

Dear Mr. B. Made a Pleasant Remark and He Meant It.

Even a dry-goods store may be selected by fate as a place for a romance, as the following story from the Brooklyn Eagle proves: In one of the big up-town dry-goods stores a spinster saleslady of twenty-five years was sighing her lonely life away in the ladies' and children's department on the third floor, while a widower salesgentleman, aged forty, was becoming gray and bald with the care of three children among the blankets down in the basement. Was it the subtle but strong power of affinity, or was it only family necessities that drew those lonely hearts together? Who can tell! Neither will ever forget that day, that hour, three weeks ago, when they first gazed into each other's eyes. He had come up-stairs to her counter.

"What can I show you?"

"Children's stockings, please."

"What numbers?"

"Four, five and a half and seven. Two pairs each, please."

"Walk this way. Now, how do you like these?"

"I always get that kind."

"But this kind wears much better. Lovely day, isn't it? Quite a family, eh? Yours? Why doesn't your wife do the buying? Oh! Cash! No, I won't forget the discount. What department are you in? Blankets ought to be soft. Oh, yes; I love children. What name, please?"

"You're a girl after my own heart," said the widower, as he walked away with the stockings.

"A girl after my own heart." These words rang in the lonely saleslady's ears. Like the parson who kissed the fiddler's wife, "she couldna sleep for thinkin' o't." The next day she sent a boy with a note to the blanket department in the basement. The note said:

DEAR MR. B.: Please tell me what you meant by saying I was a girl after your own heart. I have a particular reason for asking. LILLIAN M.

Mr. B. wrote back saying he meant nothing. Next Miss M. visited the blanket department. She wanted a "comforter." Of course Mr. B. waited on her.

"Where shall I send this, Miss M.? Yes! Is that your correct address?"

"You can easily find out if you call."

"May I call?"

"Certainly. What did you mean by what you said up in my department?"

"Nothing."

"You must have meant something."

"Well, maybe I did."

"I think you are just terrible. Such short acquaintance, too."

The first visit settled it. Cupid barged them both. They combined their respective gentility and were made one last Sunday. The widower's hair has become a rich, glossy brown again, and his two-dollar-and-a-half smile is the most bewitching to be found anywhere in his line of business. As to the "girl after my own heart," the sacred curtains of home now conceal her, but the sound of her chirping can be heard for half a mile.

A DRUMMER'S TALE.

How He Acquired the Euphonious Sobriquet of "Black Patch."

Nearly every drummer has a "trick of trade" that is so essential to success that he will not divulge it, writes A. J. Gray in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. For instance, I have one. It is of prime importance that his customers recognize a drummer so readily that no time will be lost. Now, if a drummer has brilliant hair, a novel tip or a peculiarity of physique or face that appeals in an instant to the eye of any man who has even seen him before, he has a great advantage over a fellow-craftsman who is so unfortunate as to be commonplace in features, form and manner. I was certainly commonplace looking, and, covering a large territory, it was impracticable to get around more than once a quarter, and I soon found that my constant partner, a whisky drummer, with the emblem of his line displayed in his face and nose—particularly the nose—had to introduce me to my customers each day. True, I was a handsome man, but not strikingly so. There were so many others handsome, of much the same pattern, that it grew monotonous, whereas, a decidedly homely man would be easily noted, because other homely men were homely in different ways. It chanced that a blessing came in disguise that helped me out. It came in the disguise of a brickbat that my left cheek intercepted one night while rambling with my whisky friend among a crowd of drunken loafers. It necessitated a big patch of black court plaster, which I found decidedly relieved my good looks. I had to explain its presence to each customer, and I could not dispense with it until I had commenced a second round. To my delight I found that each one remembered me the moment I saw the patch. That is the reason I wear it yet, and that explains how, both among the "profesh" and on the road, I gained the sobriquet of "Black Patch."

Four Generations of Scribners.

The Scribner family, of Waterborough, Me., is remarkable in that its four generations are unbroken by death. David Scribner and his wife, both about ninety years old, have been married for sixty-five years, and have three children, the oldest being over sixty. Their children have children and grandchildren, and no death has yet occurred in the line of descendants from Mr. and Mrs. Scribner to their great-grandchildren.

MEMORIAL.

On Decoration Day a little boy called at the residence of one of our fellow citizens, in whose garden Flora displayed some of her attractions, and asked for a few flowers to strew on his mother's grave.

The request readily met an affirmative answer.

It was a touching incident, creating a far deeper impression than the most eloquent tongue could impart.

The poor little fellow wanted to leave a fragrant remembrance [illegible] dear departed mother. Over her extended [illegible] he sought to lay a slight tribute of affection.

What a beautiful act!

Human life, rightly assessed and appreciated, is a series of instructive [illegible]. On every side can be gleaned lessons oft times more feelingly powerful than the spoken word.

The annual custom of decorating with flowers the graves of those who fell battling for the Union is a noble duty.

It is a grand mission.

Surviving comrades seek to keep perpetuate the memory of comrades who have long ceased to answer the roll-call of life.

It is an impressive and praiseworthy usage, and viewed aright, possesses much more than mere formality.

It is a living service.

It has a significant meaning.

It aims to commemorate not only the personality of the soldier dead, but the value of the victory they helped to achieve.

That victory is a priceless heritage, because it made indissoluble the matchless system of governmental unity under which we happily dwell.

Grateful soldier hearts prompt and willing soldier hands execute the patriotic deed of scattering emblems of peace and purity upon sod-covered mounds where repose the mouldering forms of heroes who, when country demanded aid, halted not to obey.

Let the observance of Decoration Day be continued with increasing zeal, and may each returning year strengthen the vow that our country, North, South, East and West, shall not only remain a firmly knit Union of States, but a national brotherhood, whose teeming millions shall make amity, friendship and mutual prosperity the goal of their earthly ambition.

None can do more to render bright and permanent such a glorious future than they who braved the perils of war in order that the Union, the Constitution and the Flag might live and flourish—all forever.

A Just and Proper Increase.

At the Board of Education meeting Monday evening all were present—Messrs Jacob Kirkner, Lewis F. Wadsworth, John W. Murray, George H. Babcock, J. L. Hurlbut and Miss Bulkley.

The Committee on Teachers—President Kirkner, Dr. Hurlbut and Mr. Babcock—recommended the reappointment for the coming year, of all the teachers, with an increase of salary for each ranging from $25 a year upwards. The total amount of the increase was about $1,000, and in making, the Committee stated, [illegible] they were informed that the law required them to devote the additional one dollar per scholar allowed by the State, to teachers' salaries.

Mr. Babcock said that he was creditably informed that there was no such requirement in any law, and the North Plainfield authorities did not increase the salaries of their public school teachers. He, however, thought that the teachers deserved every cent they could afford to give them.

In this the entire Board agreed, and the Committee's recommendation was unanimously adopted.

The Only Remedy.

[illegible]

Prohibition has utterly failed in every State in which it has been tried. [illegible] Dow says it has failed in Maine, there is more drunkenness there than was ever known before. It failed in Iowa, and the papers of that State comment on the increase of intemperance since the law was put in force.

No reader of THE PRESS will accuse us of upholding the liquor interest in any shape or form. We believe—and we have always said so—that the [illegible] all crime and poverty can be laid to drink. But legislation will not cure the evil. No man can legislate for another man's appetite. Man naturally rebels against such an impertinent infringement of his rights, and when he gets liquor—as he surely will—he will show his defiance of law by an over-indulgence. The only remedy is high license.

GENTLEMEN OF THE COUNCIL, GO SLOW!

The Council has no right to use the people's money to protect themselves from the possible and probable personal attacks of the Plainfield evening [illegible].

THE PRESS can mention a score of merchants in the city who unhesitatingly state that they have been forced to put an advertisement in the [illegible] to protect themselves from vilification and slander in its columns. They say they "would rather pay a few dollars a year than be a victim sooner or later of the paper's defamation."

But these merchant's pay this black-money from their own pockets, whereas the Council are custodians of the funds of the people, and have no right to vote it away in payment of a bill for unauthorized advertising claimed by the same.

And not only was the advertising unauthorized—and, in fact, published in the face of the [illegible] of the City Clerk—but it was not even published in compliance with the law. Whoever made the affidavit that it was properly published, perjured himself.

It is almost time the [illegible] was compelled to halt in its continued scheme of extorting money from the public. Some time ago through [illegible] Board [illegible] succeeded in getting a bill [illegible] paid with the people's money; and now again, although the City Clerk [illegible] refused to give the [illegible] the advertising and warned it that he would not approve any bill for the same, it hopes [illegible] on the personal fears of the Council [illegible] and expense again to force a payment.

CITY COUNCIL MEETING.

The City Council met in regular session at 8:30 o'clock Monday night, with President Dumont in the chair. The other members present were: Messrs. Dunham, Jenkins, Marsh, Moffett, Myers, Newhall—7. The minutes of the last regular meeting were read and approved, after slight alterations were made.

Petitions and communications were received as follows: From Chas. H. Hand, submitting plans for new building on West Second street, and agreeing to fit up Council chambers, furnish and heat the same with steam for $100 a month. Referred to Finance Committee.

For stone crosswalk at Ninth street and Broadway; also at Ninth street and Third place. Referred to Street Committee.

From property owners on Elm place, asking to have a top dressing of stone spread on that thoroughfare. To Street Committee.

From Messrs. E. Wellman and G. F. Fuller, asking for water works franchise. Referred to Water Committee.

From E. C. Mulford and others asking Council for improvements of a general character, such as water works, sewerage and street railway. Referred to Water Committee.

From Mr. Leo Daft, a communication explaining the delay in exhibiting his electric railway in this city, said delay being caused by the manufacturers of the car. Mr Daft promised to exhibit his system here, early in June. The matter was referred to the Street Committee.

Sundry applications, for hack, peddlers and cartmen's licenses, were received, referred and subsequently granted.

The following open communication was received from Mr. John W. Murray, which was referred to the Finance Committee:

NEW YORK, June 1 1889.

To the Honorable, the Common Council, Plainfield, New Jersey:

GENTS:—Our citizens have been for the past few days horrified by the reports that have reached us from an adjoining State of loss of life and property [illegible] of suffering by famine and want [illegible]. Their terrible disaster calls for prompt action and seems to be given us by the Almighty as a test of our charity. With the fullest enjoyment of all that makes life pleasant, no community ought to be more ready than the citizens of Plainfield to urge forward and extend a helping hand to the sufferers. I would suggest you appoint a committee to devise a [illegible] for subscriptions, or call a meeting of citizens at your early [illegible]. Meeting could be held in the rooms of the Y. M. C. A.

Respectfully,
JOHN W. MURRAY.

Claims were presented and referred as follows, including over $800 in poor bills: M. Powers, $28.84; Electric Light Co., $673.41; Geo. M. Angleman, $50 and $215.50; John H. Angleman, $17.25; M. Welsh, $35; Thos. Melville, $0.75; L. H. Bigelow & Co., $16.80; J. Hellerman, $12; Jas. Motley, $7.50; Jno. Kane, $39.50; Jno. Dunn, $30; Jno. Adams, $7; W. C. Smith, Treas. Winfield Scott Post, $50; John Johnson, $135; S. Edsall, $21.93; O. B. Leonard, $63.75.

Fire Dept.—T. O. Doane, $42.86; Wm. Gaffan, $5; Jos. Coony, $29.33; Gas Co., $8.15; Engine Co., No. 2, $25; Geo. Coddover, $41.00; Marsh & Ayers, $12.62; Wm. Hickey, $5; Jno. Albert, $5.

The Clerk reported on an old claim of T. W. Morrison for advertising which was ordered paid at the last meeting as soon as proof of publication was furnished. The Clerk stated that all but two of the advertisements had been inserted in the paper twice in one week, which is contrary to the law. The matter was referred to the Corporation Counsel, he to report whether or not the advertising was legal.

The monthly statements of the Treasurer and Collector were received, and referred to the Finance Committee. The Collector reported that $619.68 in taxes had been Collected during May.

The quarterly report of the Overseer of the Poor was submitted in detail; it showed a total of 48 families who are receiving aid from the city; $221.75 was expended for provisions during the quarter; the report urged the necessity of providing shelter for the poor. The document was filed.

Chief Doane, representing the Board of Fire Engineers, reported with approval a list of the newly elected Fire Department officers. They were confirmed. He also reported progress on the work in No. 2 Engine house, and recommended painting the [illegible] on the Truck at a cost not exceeding $25, and the floor in the Truck house, at a cost not to exceed $[illegible]. The department apparatus, wells, etc., he reported in good condition, and asked for instructions concerning protection from fire on the Fourth of July. At a later period in the proceedings, the Board of Engineers was authorized to make the same arrangements as last year.

The report of the Directors of the Public Library and Reading Room for the year ending June 1, 1889, was read and filed. It showed these figures: Balance to credit of general fund at last report, $[illegible]; received from taxes, $2,250.00; Total disbursements for year, including salaries of Librarian and Janitor, $2,318.45; balance on hand, $[illegible]; Special fund, total receipts, including a balance, receipts from lecture, fines, dues, etc., $1,176.34; disbursements, $319.27; balance on hand May 31, 1889, $[illegible]. The library contains 7,902 volumes of which 352 have been added by purchase and 273 by gift during the year. There are 1487 card holders, and the total number of visitors to the building during the year was 27,094.

Mayor Male nominated the following Library Directors to succeed themselves: For two years—Messrs. J. K. Tracy, M. W. Tyler and E. P. Talmage. For three years—Messrs. A. C. Baldwin, J. W. Yates and Wm. M. Stillman. The nominations were confirmed.

The Mayor also nominated Robert Walker and Vincent W. Nash as special policemen; also John R. Naylor as pound master, all of whom were confirmed. Hereafter the dog pound will be located at No. 15 Lake street.

City Judge Geo. P. Suydam sent in his resignation, to take effect immediately. His resignation was subsequently accepted and Mr. Wm. M. Stillman was elected in his place.

The Finance Committee reported on the claims of the Electric Light Co., and that of the Grand Army Post. They were sent to the Auditing Committee. Finance Committee was authorized to call a public meeting if in their judgment it was deemed advisable, in response to the above request of Mr. J. W. Murray.

The Fire and Building Committee, reported its disapproval of the claim of Mr. Johnson in part payment for the work now in progress in No. 2 Engine house. The report was received and filed.

Mr. Newhall, from the Water Committee, stated that said Committee deferred reporting on the matter of water works this evening, but hoped to be able to do so at the next regular or special meeting of the Council.

NEW BUSINESS.

Mr. Marsh introduced an ordinance amending the ordinance providing for the construction, maintenance and repair of sidewalks. It was adopted on the second reading, and ordered engrossed and advertised. The ordinance provides that all the sidewalks included in the territory bounded by Front street, Central avenue, Seventh street, and Broadway to Front street, shall be curbed with blue stone, four inches thick and 16 inches deep, at the expense of the land owners.

The same Councilman introduced another ordinance relating to the construction of vaults and cisterns in the streets of the city. Read twice, adopted, and ordered engrossed and advertised.

MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS.

Under this caption the ordinance dividing the Fourth ward into two polling districts, and the street sprinkling ordinance were called up and adopted on the third reading.

At the request of Mr. Marsh the vote by which the ordinance relating to the erection of buildings was defeated at the last meeting, was reconsidered, and the ordinance was laid on the table.

A motion by Mr. Marsh to appropriate $250 for street repairs, prevailed, and the Mayor and Treasurer were authorized to execute three-months notes as follows, in anticipation of taxes: One for $5,000 to be placed to the credit of the general fund, another for $500 for Fire Department purposes, and one for $500 to be placed to the credit of the poor fund.

Upon resolution adopted Justice V. W. Nash was authorized to receive and execute all warrants for the collection of delinquent taxes, his compensation to be as follows: For taxes previous to 1887, ten per cent., for 1887 taxes five per cent., and for 1888 taxes three per cent. He was required to file a bond in the sum of $1,000.

The rules were suspended so as to allow one member of Auditing Committee to report on the claims sent in during the evening. The report was adopted and warrants were ordered drawn for the payment of the bills.

Council adjourned to meet in regular session on Monday evening, the 10th inst.

The Ceiling Fell.

Just after Postmaster Force left the desk in his private office at noon Tuesday about six feet of the ceiling fell with a crash. The heavy chunks of mortar, nearly a foot square and fully an inch thick, fell directly on the desk and in the chair, which the Postmaster had vacated but a few minutes before.

One of the Suspected Burglars Released.

Government Inspector Hugh Gorman, of the Post Office service, was in this city Friday, and told a PRESS reporter that Smith, one of the suspects held in New York for the burglary of the Plainfield post office, had been released for want of evidence, but McDonald, his companion, is still held.

The probability of just such action by the authorities, was published exclusively in these columns of May 23.

Somerville Applauds the Crescent's Short Stop.

Short stop Dilts, of the Crescents, played short stop for the "West Ends," at Somerville, Thursday afternoon, and made two more base-hits off of the Rutgers College pitcher.

A Somerville paper, telling of the game, says:

"In the first inning Rutgers got a man as far as second base on a muffed fly that split Smith's finger. Smith was replaced by the Rev Asa Dilts, who was called down from the grand stand, and whose appearance was greeted with loud applause."

Save Your Money.

A Provident Savings Committee has recently been organized by the Plainfield Relief Association, the object of which is to urge those who have no bank account to lay aside such sums as may be spared from their weekly earnings which being placed in the hands of the treasurer will constitute a fund from which depositors may draw as necessity requires.

Collectors will call weekly for the money, receipts will be given and when the savings of each depositor amount to one dollar, interest will be paid at the rate of four per cent. per annum.

A similar organization is already in successful operation in Morristown, where the amount saved by small deposits reached during two years over two thousand three hundred dollars.

If there are any in Plainfield who desire to avail themselves of this opportunity to save money in small amounts, they are invited to leave their names at the Plainfield Relief Association rooms No. 45 West Second street, so that collectors may call upon them.

MRS. E. L. GODDARD, Chairman,
MRS. C. A. MARSH, Secretary,
MISS FLORENCE TWEEDY, Treasurer.

CLOSE OF ST. JOSEPH'S FAIR.

A List of the Prizes Awarded.

The bazaar and fair in aid of St. Joseph's church, in North Plainfield, which has been in progress in the new Gesang and Turner Hall, on Somerset street, for the past week, closed on Saturday evening. Considering the bad weather which prevailed during the week, the financial result of the undertaking was most flattering, and those who took part are to be congratulated upon their efficiency in conducting the affair. The total net receipts will reach about $1,200. The following contests were decided on Saturday evening: Lady's gold watch, Miss Lizzie Gavin, $401; Miss Bridget Connoly, $122 50. There were other in this contest, and they also did remarkably well.

The little girl's gold ring was won by Nellie Begley and the boy's silver watch was won by John Leahy. Other prizes were awarded to residents of this city and North Plainfield, as follows: Tea set, Annie Cooke; lounge, Mary O'Neill; silver cake basket, Mrs. Richard Boice; life of the Blessed Virgin, Jas. O'Reilly; ton of coal, David Barry; barrel of flour, Wm. Wesman; cord of wood, Mrs. Patterson; clock, Barbara O'Connoly; chamber set, Henry Haurand; lamp, Garret Powers; work basket, James Keegan; group of pictures on Home Rule, Father Freeman; toilet set, Lizzie Vosseiman; table, Patrick Nugent; barrel of crackers, John Kenney, foot ball, James Nolan.

SEVENTH DAY BAPTIST EASTERN ASSOCIATION.

The fifty-third annual session of the Seventh Day Baptist Eastern Association, which has been in progress in the Seventh Day Baptist church in this city, for four days, closed Sunday evening. The Association includes the churches of Rhode Island, Connecticut, Eastern New York and New Jersey, and delegates to the extent of 72 have been in attendance during the session. Delegates were also sent here from four sister Associations.

Mr. Edwin H. Lewis of this city presided as Moderator, and Rev. Mr. Livermore of New Market, and Mr J. D. Spicer of this city, were the secretaries. The first day's session included an introductory sermon by Rev. A. McLearn, the appointment of committees, communications from the various churches, reports of officers and delegates to sister associations. The second day's session was devoted principally to the transaction of business, with a prayer and conference meeting in the evening.

On Sabbath day the exercises were of a strictly religious nature, and included the regular Sabbath school session, conducted by Mr. D. E. Titsworth, Superintendent of the Plainfield school.

The exercises Sunday were according to the following programme:

MORNING SESSION.

12: Adjournment.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

2: Devotional service, conducted by G. D. [illegible]
2:30: [illegible] hour of the Woman's Executive Board, conducted by Mary F. Bailey, Corresponding Secretary.
3:30: [illegible] business.
4:30: Adjournment.

EVENING SESSION.

7:45: Praise service, led by J. G. Burdick.
8:15: Sermon by Geo. W. Burdick of Little Genesee, N. Y., a delegate from the Western Association. Adjournment.

Very Complimentary.

The Somerset Democrat thus presages last Saturday's game at Somerville: "The Plainfield Crescents were done up in fine style recently by the Newark Tenth Ward Athletic Club, the score being 11 to 2. They are growing accustomed to defeat and will not feel so bad when the West Ends wipe the diamond up with them."

New Market Notes.

Mr. A. S. Titsworth has made a division in his store fitting up the South side for the post office, in which he has placed a new cabinet and other conveniences for the public.

The Lehigh Valley R. R., have put on another local, leaving here for New York at 12:57 P. M., returning at 4:20 P. M. It is reported that still another train is to be added to leave here between 2 and 3 P. M., and arrive from New York about 9 P. M. With these extra facilities New Market ought to show signs of growth.

The Committees of Award.

The following are the Committees of Award appointed for the public school prizes that are distributed for each year and presented at the annual commencement exercises.

English Composition, offered by Mr. Geo. Babcock: the Rev. J. F. Taylor, Samuel D. Huntington and E. P. Talmage.

Returned for the Summer.

Mr. Edward W. Milligan and family of Brooklyn, N. Y., have returned to their Summer residence in Washington Valley for the season. Mr. Milligan, besides being one of the oldest contributors to the welfare of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST as a subscriber, is one of those enterprising men who is making Washington Valley a charming Summer place of residence by his generosity and enterprise. It gives us great pleasure to again see his genial countenance among us. Among the many stylish equipages to be seen on our streets is that of the Misses Milligan with their handsome calico pony and dog cart. His son "Jimmy" sometimes is allowed to handle the reins, when he chaperones the ladies, and then "Calico" has to make time. We hope Mr. Milligan may conclude in the near future to make our fair city his permanent home.

Borrowed News.

The Bound Brook Chronicle has the following to say of former Plainfielders:

"Mme. Alberti has in charge the Department of Elocution in the School of Music at Key East Beach Assembly the coming season (July 8 to August 18) and her husband, Mr. Wm. M. Alberti, who has for several years been confined to his bed by injuries received in a railroad mishap, is in pleasant anticipation of being at the seashore with her. They will probably leave town week after next.

"Mr. John H. Staats, proprietor of the County House in Somerville is a Leland in the hotel business, as he is also the proprietor of the City Hotel in Plainfield (managed by his son-in-law, Landlord Beerbower), the Sheridan House in Elizabeth (conducted by his son J. A. Staats) and the Fairview House at Chatham, of which Mr. Staats takes personal supervision during the Summer months."

The funeral of the late Erastus Miller, who died on 29th ult., took place from the house at two o'clock Saturday afternoon, and from the Baptist church a half hour later. Rev. J. K. Folwell, the pastor, officiated. Interment was made in Fairview cemetery.

Hill, the photographer, from Elizabeth, was in Westfield on Decoration Day, and succeeded in getting some excellent views of the procession, the monument and other points of interest.

Prof. Nelson's crack team of colored base ballists, was "knocked out" by a picked nine of white players on Thursday by a score of nine to four. "Pop" Nelson declares that "dey done gone an' beat de culled chil'n, by gosh!" The defeat however, will not interfere with playing the base drum, four years hence.

Contracts have been given out for the erection of two new frame dwelling houses on Kimball avenue. One of them will be occupied by Rev. C. H. Patton, pastor of the Congregational church, and the other by Mr. T. D. Bushnell and family.

The Marriage of Ko To and To Lung.

The Japanese wedding in high life, given by the Society of Christian Endeavor in the Presbyterian church, Dunellen, Thursday evening last, was well attended, and the Japanese ceremony was presented in a true Japanese style.

Miss Fanny Humpston made a charming bride for his Royal High Majesty, Mr. Tingley; and Miss May Harold deserves great credit for her acting of the part of "Go Between," in attending to the bridal party's wants, and their guests. Miss Imogene Smith played the wedding march.

The young friends of the bride and groom did themselves great praise in their Japanese song and chorus under the charge of Mrs. Carpenter, who presided at the piano and rendered Japanese music to the singing of Miss Edna Richter and Master Marlow, who were joined by the chorus. After the wedding the entire audience were invited down to the basement of the church, where ice cream and cake was served to all free of charge.

The decorations of the church and basement were exquisitely arranged, and presented a beautiful picture. Many requests were made to have the entertainment repeated. The costumes were gorgeously beautiful.

The Plainfield Bowlers Decide Not to Purchase the Property Proposed.

Twenty-one of the eighty-six members of the Plainfield Bowling Club, met in the parlor of Force's Hotel, Friday night, to receive the report of the committee appointed to select a site for a club building. President E. C. Kieb presided. The meeting was a special one, and the purpose was plainly designated. Consequently the small attendance was rather disheartening to those who favored the project. It looked as though three-quarters of the members only joined the club for an occasional bowl, and took no interest in, nor would give anything towards, a club house.

The Committee, through Dr. J. T. Fritts, reported that after a two-month's search for a site, and the consideration of different localities and properties, they would recommend the lot 51 feet front by 151 feet deep at No. 4 East 5th street, with the house on it recently occupied by the Tariff Reform Club. The property entire could be bought for $4,700.

A long discussion followed, from which it seemed that the opinion of the majority was that a vacant lot could be purchased and a brand new building erected thereon exactly to suit the members and the purposes of the club, for no more money than it would cost for the Fifth street site and to remodel and repair the old building. The recommendation of the Committee was therefore rejected by a vote of thirteen to seven, but the Committee was retained and requested to look further.

—Referring to the Memorial Day exercises at Westfield, the Standard of that place says: "Mr. N. P. Frick of Plainfield in the returning procession was backed into; his team was thrown to the ground and the pole of his coupe-rockaway was broken. So glad was he that his ladies were not injured that he said not a word."

Twenty Received in the First Baptist Church.

It was communion Sunday at the First Baptist church, Sunday. Eight new members joined—six by letter and two on confession of faith. It was announced that twenty deaths had occurred in the church during the past year.

An Every Saturday Night Scene.

There was an unusually large number of "gutter snipes" of all classes that filled the curbs in the business portions of the city, Saturday night, using indecent language and staring ladies out of countenance. It was next to impossible to cross a street without having to break through their line.

Gov. Beaver's Reply.

June 1, 1889.

To Samuel [illegible], Jr.,

In the name of our suffering and distressed people, I thank [illegible] for the very generous contributions from the citizens of Plainfield. It is gratefully appreciated and will be judiciously administered. Have today drawn as requested on J. K. Myers for $1,382, at sight, through J. C. Bomberger, Treasurer of our Relief Fund.

JAMES A. BEAVER, Governor.

Holy Cross Anniversaries.

Next Sunday will be the twentieth anniversary of the opening of Holy Cross church of North Plainfield, for divine service. It will also be the first anniversary of the Vested Choir. One year ago on Sunday next the choir sung in that church for the first time. The present services are largely attended, and increasing yearly. Those of the afternoon now being equal to the morning attendance of two years ago.

The Funeral of William Washington.

The funeral services over the remains of William Washington, the dead sexton of the M. E. church, were held there Sunday afternoon. The funeral cortege was escorted to the church and afterwards to the cemetery on Plainfield avenue, by Cypress Commandery, No. 6, Knights Templar, of which the dead man was a member. They were headed by a colored drum and fife corps with muffled beat and the air of familiar hymns.

In the church, the Rev. Mr. Newton, (colored) of New Brunswick, made the opening prayer, and the Rev. Dr. J. L. Hurlbut, and the Rev. Wm. Lee, pastor of Bethel Mission, spoke. At the grave, the Masonic burial rites were carried out by Sir Eminent Commander Israel Jones, Past Commander William Douglas, and other members of Cypress Commandery, All joined in singing, "Go Bury Thy Sorrow."

There were fully three hundred present at the grave, including many white people.

Is This W. Bradford Williams, Formerly of Plainfield?

There was a curious crowd Sunday morning at the Harlem Police Court to see William Bradford Williams, the elocutionist, arraigned for committing a murderous assault upon his wife, Bessie Williams Williams had a natural antipathy to children, and on the birth of each of the four his wife bore him he deliberately absented himself, frequently for months. April 30 the fourth child was born and Williams again disappeared, remaining away so long that Mrs. Williams was compelled to seek shelter with her parents.

Saturday afternoon the husband made his appearance at her parent's domicile, and, stating that he had "come to kill Bessie," stabbed her several times with a kitchen knife. Williams was committed by Justice Morgan to await the result of the injuries he inflicted. Dr. Smith at the hospital said that Mrs. Williams would probably be able to leave her bed in a few days.

HYMENEAL.

WINTER—BENSON.

At the residence of the bride's sister, No. 15 Fifth avenue, New York, Saturday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, took place the wedding of Adaline MacMartin Benson and Albert Winter formerly of this city.

As announced in THE PRESS, the wedding was private, about eighty of the most particular friends only, of the contracting couple, being present. The bride was attired in white, and most of the lady guests were also in full dress. The Rev. Dr. Houghton performed the ceremony.

Among those present from this city were, Mr. and Mrs. Stewart H. Whitney, Mrs. J. K. Myers, Dr. and Mrs. J. T. Fritts and Miss Lilian Fritts, and Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Waldron, The wife of Governor Robert Stockton Green, and Miss Green, were also present.

The groom was for many years a junior partner of the firm of Schepflin, Baldwin, Tweedy & Co., and retired from business a wealthy man upon the dissolution of the firm, that followed the death of Charles Tweedy. The bride is a niece of the late ex-Mayor Maxson of this city, and granddaughter of the late Rev. William B. Maxson, D. D.

Mr. and Mrs. Winter are now in Washington. They will sail for Europe in about two weeks and expect to remain abroad until October.

AN ORDINANCE.

Dividing the Fourth Ward of the City of Plainfield into two election districts.

WHEREAS, The Fourth Ward of the City of Plainfield, as manifested at the last general election held in said ward, contains more than 600 voters; now, therefore,

The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield by their Common Council do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. The Fourth Ward of the City of Plainfield is hereby divided into two election districts, to be known hereafter as the First Election District of the Fourth Ward, and the Second Election District of the Fourth Ward.

SEC. 2. The First Election District shall include all the territory and inhabitants thereof contained in that portion of the Fourth Ward situate on the northwest side of the centre line of the Central Railroad of New Jersey.

SEC. 3. The Second Election District shall include all the territory and inhabitants thereof contained in that portion of the Fourth Ward, situate on the southeast side of the centre line of the Central Railroad of New Jersey.

Approved by the Mayor June 4, 1889.
JOB MALE, Mayor.
Attest: O. B. LEONARD, City Clerk.

AN ORDINANCE

To provide for the licensing, regulating and restraining of persons and vehicles for the sprinkling of the streets of the city of Plainfield with pure water.

The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield, by their Common Council, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. That no person shall pursue or in any manner carry on as owner or as agent for another the business of sprinkling the streets of the city of Plainfield without being licensed so to do by the Common Council, under penalty of one hundred dollars fine for each and every offense.

SEC. 2. That persons of good moral character, and fire-engine, hose or hook and ladder companies may be licensed by the Common Council to engage in said business within prescribed portions of the city, to be designated in the license, and the fee for such license shall be the sum of ten ($10) dollars for each wagon or cart.

SEC. 3. That no person or persons or company shall sprinkle any portion of any street, lane or alley or public highway within said city by or with a watering cart without first having obtained a license under this ordinance, covering such portion of said street, lane, alley or highway. No person or persons or corporation shall sprinkle any portion of any street, lane, alley or highway with impure water. Any person or persons or company convicted of violating any of the provisions of this section shall on conviction be punished by a fine not exceeding twenty dollars.

SEC. 4. That all licenses granted under this ordinance shall expire on the first day of March next following the granting thereof, and shall be signed by the Mayor and attested by the City Clerk.

SEC. 5. That no person or persons licensed under this ordinance shall at any time sprinkle or water any of the streets, lanes, alleys or public highways of said city in such a manner as to make the same or any portion thereof muddy, or leave the same in a sloppy condition. Enough water shall be used at each sprinkling to lay the dust, and not more. Crosswalks of stone shall not be sprinkled or watered. Any person or persons violating any of the provisions of this section shall, on conviction, be fined not exceeding twenty dollars for each offense.

SEC. 6. That every person or company licensed under this ordinance shall, at the time of receiving such license, pay therefor to the City Clerk to be paid by him to the City Treasurer for the use of the city the sum of ten dollars for each wagon or cart, and in addition thereto fifty cents to the City Clerk as his fee for issuing said license.

Approved by the Mayor June 4, 1889.
JOB MALE, Mayor.
Attest: O. B. LEONARD, City Clerk.

Corporation Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the following ordinance has been introduced before the Common Council, read the second time, and ordered engrossed preparatory to its third reading, and that it is the intention of the Council to adopt the same.

Plainfield, N. J., June 3, 1889.

AN ORDINANCE

Relating to vaults and cisterns in the streets of Plainfield.

SEC. 1. That no person shall construct any vault or cistern in any street, except by and with the consent of the Common Council or the committee on streets thereof, and then only on the payment of such sum as shall be from time to time established by resolution of the said Common Council, and in all cases the same shall be completed and finished within the time prescribed by the said committee on streets under the penalty of twenty dollars.

SEC. 2. That all vaults shall be constructed of stone or brick, and the grating or opening into the street shall be within twelve inches of the coping of area in front of the house to which said vault shall belong or within twelve inches of the curbstone, under the penalty of twenty dollars to be paid by the owner or person making or causing the same to be made.

SEC. 3. [illegible]

SEC. 4. [illegible]

SEC. 5. That no person or persons shall suffer or permit the aperture or covering to any such vault in the streets or sidewalks of the city of Plainfield to remain open for any period between sunset and sunrise the next morning, under the penalty of ten dollars.

SEC. 6. That all grates to vaults shall be made of iron, [illegible]

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of every owner [illegible]

—The North Plainfield public school meeting has been postponed until the 11th instant.

—Some of the night police say that they would not object to doing day service, if the opportunity was afforded them.

—The grounds adjoining the Park House are in a deplorable condition. A herd of cattle could graze for a week on the lawn.

—The German nine of North Plainfield, Philip Koechli, Captain, defeated the Young Crescents of this city, by a score of 9 to 8.

—Assemblyman [illegible] Monday filed papers incorporating the Exempt Firemen's Association of this city, under the general law.

—The Chatham nine of North Plainfield defeated the Twilight Jr. Club of Scotch Plains at the latter place, on Decoration Day, by a score of 21 to [illegible].

—A horse belonging to Mr. Samuel Allen ran away on Grove street, during Friday night, and wrecked the wagon to which the animal was hitched.

—The Woman's Home Missionary Society will hold the quarterly meeting, Friday afternoon, at four o'clock, in the Crescent Avenue church parlors.

—Next Monday evening the members of Plainfield Council, Royal Arcanum, will meet to take some action in regard to their afflicted brothers of Council [illegible], at Johnstown.

—The employees of Mr. Aug. Van Treuren, at the Crescent Carpet Mills, this morning, contributed $20 to the Johnstown relief fund, which amount was sent to Mr. J. K. Myers.

—Music Hall has been engaged for the XIIIth annual Commencement exercises of the High School, Thursday evening, the 27th inst. Admission will be on the same plan as in the last few years.

—A subscription paper was started in the manufactory of C. [illegible] & Co., Wednesday, in aid of the Johnstown sufferers. The firm headed it with $25, and every employee added something.

—The Central Railroad company has issued a book of 109 pages containing the rules for the government of the transportation department. They appear to cover every contingency and are so plain as to be easily understood.

—The bass season is now open and those in need of tackle would do well to examine the stock of lines and rods at A. M. Vanderbeek & Co's. Also for ball goods, sporting goods, music and musical instruments go to 33 Park avenue.

—At the Scotch Plains school meeting, Monday, there were [illegible] votes cast, of which number 101 were in favor of an expenditure of $18,000 for a new school building. The discussion was long, animated and, at times, bitter.

—It is asserted by a scientific journal that nothing will improve a lady's complexion as surely as early rising. This may be scientifically proved, but for prompt results a powder [illegible] stands high in the estimation of every well informed woman.

—In this issue, Messrs. Morris & Cheesman, of Newark, advertise fences for all work, and all uses. The well established reputation of this firm for living up to their guarantee, honest dealing and fair prices, is known and appreciated all over the State.

—The entire top of the large elm tree standing in front of the City Hotel on Second street, fell down Friday afternoon during the gale, and another large tree at the corner of [illegible] avenue and Seventh street, was also blown down about the same time.

—The property on East Front street, for so many years the residence of the late John L. Moritt and family, was sold in New York at auction, a few days ago, to Mr. Judson B. Bennell, for $6,475. The lot was 105 feet front by [illegible] feet deep, with handsome house and stables.

—The tennis tournament already spoken of in these columns to be conducted by six young women on the grounds connected with the Union avenue residence of ex-Councilman Isaac W. Blackmore, Saturday afternoon, is for the benefit of the building fund of the Y. M. C. A. Admission will be 25 cents, [illegible] an exciting struggle is promised.

—The strong wind of Saturday blew over a show case full of summer hats that stood at the entrance of Mrs. Adams' millinery rooms, and the broken glass was strewn all over the sidewalk in front of Dr. Shaw's weather service bureau. The case was fastened to the flag stones, but one bolt was pulled out and another broken off by the strength of the wind.

—A comprehensive view of the location of Johnstown, Pa., may be had by placing this city in a similar position. For instance if a huge dam was built across the notch on Somerset street, even with the mountain top, and all of Washington Valley was one broad expanse of water. Johnstown was situated just in this way, and the bursting of the huge dam resulted in the loss of thousands of lives.

—The hearts of the pastor and people were made glad at the communion service at Trinity Reformed church Sunday morning when six persons crossed the line and said, "as for me, henceforth we will serve the Lord." Two persons also joined by letter from other churches, making eight in all, who joined Sunday. Again are the labors of Pastor Schenck blessed and the kingdom of God glorified.

The People That is [illegible] Never [illegible].

The news of Tuesday announced, with a [illegible] on it, that the North Plainfield voters would hold a meeting, that evening, to consider the matter of erecting a new school house.

THE PRESS of the day before announced that the meeting was postponed until Tuesday evening of next week.

Consequently but [illegible] turned out to the meeting announced [illegible]. Thus another straw that shows what paper the people read.

Pond Tool Company.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Pond Machine Tool Company, held in this city on Monday afternoon, the following Board of Directors were re-elected: Messrs. D. W. Pond, Albert C. Stoddard, J. [illegible] Maxwell, Henry B. Manning, Geo. A. Moore, Eugene L. Maxwell and Henry S. Graves. The stockholders also made an inspection of the Company's Works here.

Personals.

A daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Runkle, on Memorial Day.

Miss Handren of Brooklyn, N. Y., visited friends in Dunellen, during Decoration Day.

Mr. Frank E. Newman of West Fifth street, is at home from the Boston School of Technology.

Mr. M. A. Davis of Dunellen, is home again from an extended trip through New York State.

Mr. Frank Vosseller is carrying his arm in a sling because of a dislocated shoulder that resulted from a fall.

Miss Ida Lorton of West Fifth street, has returned home after a pleasant visit with relatives in Philadelphia.

Mrs. H. A. Ayres, of Broadway, will leave in a few days for a month's visit with her daughter in Westerly, R. I.

The Misses Lula and Kitty Tierney of Brooklyn, were recently the guests of Miss Angeline E. Feytel of North Plainfield.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. F. Demarest of East Fifth street, are spending a few weeks in Albany at the home of their son-in-law, Rev. C. E. Dunn of that city.

"Aunt Sally" Bunn, wife of Mr. Geo. Bunn, the faithful driver for No. Two Engine Company, is confined to her home on West Front street, by illness.

Mr. Wm. Marsh, one of Colorado's postmasters and progressive business men, is visiting at the home of his father, Mr. Seymour Marsh, of Putnam street.

The engagement is announced of a prominent contralto singer of the Crescent Avenue choir, a very beautiful young woman, and Mr. John Farce, a Boston journalist.

Mr. and Mrs. James W. Jackson, and Miss Jackson, are at The Netherwood for the Summer, during the making of extensive alterations to their Crescent avenue residence.

Mrs. Adelaide Rooms and daughter, Miss Emma Rooms of New York, and formerly of Washington Park, North Plainfield, are at the Hotel Netherwood for the season.

Mrs. Geo. W. P. Randolph left Monday for Freemont, Ohio, the home of her father, where she will join a family gathering in celebration of the 80th anniversary of the old gentleman's birth.

Gen'l James B. Megley, of Pittsburgh, a well known ex-Congressman and a very wealthy man, is negotiating for the purchase of the Rockhill-Force property at Union and Plainfield avenues.

Six young women have arranged a tennis tournament to be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac W. Blackmore, next Saturday afternoon. The proceeds will go towards a charitable purpose.

Joseph N. Jenkins of this city, father of Councilman O. L. Jenkins and Mr. J. Newton Jenkins, died Friday, A. M., at nine o'clock. He was 76 years of age. His funeral took place Monday afternoon.

On the terrace in front of Mr. Dan'l J. Marshall's home on Park avenue, stands a tall bush in bloom, on which the writer counted this morning over one hundred large "Jack" roses. Their fragrance fills the very street.

Miss May Humphreys of Mt. Sinai Training School, New York city, is spending a few days of her vacation, before she graduates in October, with her friend, Mrs. Arthur Stace of No 18 Kensington avenue, this city.

At the coming concert of the Bethel Mission congregation and Sunday school, Mr. Benjamin Sutton will sing "Old Dog Tray" as an encore. The affair will take place at the chapel, Thursday evening, the 13th instant.

Mr. Charles Wilkinson and family of Union avenue, will leave Plainfield about the first of July, and may remain away permanently. Miss Wilkinson will go to New London, Conn. Mr. Chas. Wilkinson, Jr., is at Tacoma.

At her home, No. 3 Plainfield avenue, Thursday morning, occurred the death of Mrs. John Howarth, aged 29 years. The deceased had been a sufferer from abscess in the side for the past ten months. She leaves a husband and two children.

Mrs. A. V. V. Raymond, of Albany, was in Plainfield, Sunday, the guest of the Rev. and Mrs. W. R. Richards. She attended the Trinity Reformed church, that evening, and occupied the pew she used to when her husband was pastor of the church.

Neighbors in the vicinity of the Washington school have offered to contribute towards a flag for that building, and the Rev. J. L. Hurlbut has been authorized by the Board of Education to add to such amount whatever he thinks right to complete the balance.

Mr. George Angleman, Jr., left Plainfield Friday for Rosedale, Kansas, where he has accepted a call to preach in the only protestant church in the place. Mr. Angleman is a young and earnest Christian worker who deserves great credit for his courageous undertaking.

Mr. Henry E. Hopkins, whose father was one of the last of the Park House managers, is now a partner in the law business of F. A. Campbell, New York. Young Hopkins has entirely lost the use of the arm that was the cause of so much suffering to him just before he left Plainfield.

Mr. A. W. Rand, Regent of the Plainfield Council, Royal Arcanum, writes to THE PRESS: "Is it not time to stir up the people of Plainfield to do something as a body for Johnstown?" The letter from Mr. John W. Murray, published in the Council proceedings elsewhere, has brought about such action.

A double wedding took place at the residence of Rev. Cornelius Schenck, on East Second street, Thursday evening, when Mr. Willis R. Moore and Miss Emma Watts, both of this city, and Mr. Wm. Lahde of Dunellen and Miss Sarah Newman of North Plainfield, were united in marriage, Rev. Mr. Schenck officiating.

In the extended account given in THE PRESS of Wednesday, of the sociable held in the First Baptist church, special mention was unintentionally omitted of Mr. Herbert Thatcher who added so greatly to the evening's entertainment in the way of humorous recitations. The encores he received were enthusiastic and well deserved.

William Washington, sexton for many years of the M. E. church, died about eight P. M., Thursday, of hasty consumption, the result of exposure at the Inaugural ceremonies in Washington. He was 45 years of age and leaves a wife and five children. The funeral services were held in Bethel Mission, Sunday afternoon, at three o'clock.

The new design of the diplomas for the graduates of the High School and the Training School departments, has been received and accepted. It is the work of Mr. W. M. Smith, a post-graduate whose talents in the way of designing and engrossing THE PRESS has already spoken of. Nothing more need be said in favor of [illegible] of the delicacy and dignity of it as a whole.

After weeks of indifferent success, Mr. E. W. Pike of this city, has proven the sanity of a young lady wrongfully confined upon the affidavit of two young physicians and her trustee, in the Stockton Insane Asylum, California. The latter, after squandering the ward's property in his hands, had left her to pine away her life amid the surroundings and companionship of maniacs. Thursday last Mr. Pike visited the unfortunate girl at Paterson, where she arrived the preceding day from California. The young lady is an orphan and the daughter of a late Assemblyman of New York State.

Dr. Edward Rushmore and family of Park avenue will Summer in Washington Valley.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer E. Runyon are in New York city for a few days. Calling relatives of Mrs. Runyon's.

Mrs. John C. Bliss who has been the guest of the Rev. and Mrs. W. R. Richards, will remain in Plainfield for a few days longer.

Mr. George W. Taylor, of West Second street, was expected to reach Johnstown, Pa., last Friday, and his family were much worried about his safety until they received a telegram saying that he had been delayed in his trip. Such delay probably saved his life.

The most finished writing, of the best style and finest English, that is being done in description of the disasters at Johnstown, is to be found in the New York Sun, and much of it is the work of Ernest O. Chamberlin. He left for the scene on Saturday, but was only able to reach there Monday afternoon. During his absence Mrs. Chamberlin is visiting his parents, on Madison avenue, this city.

Mr. Felix Helsey, representing one of the most reputable studios in New York, is in the city taking orders for crayon, pastelle and oil portraits. A picture he has just completed of Mr. A. L. Force, the junior proprietor of this paper and THE PRESS, is most satisfactory and the object of a great deal of praise as a likeness and a work of art. Mr. Helsey will remain until Saturday, and THE CONSTITUTIONALIST recommends him to all who want a large portrait at a very reasonable price.

Music Hall [illegible].

It may be readily imagined that the majority of the audience at Music Hall, Monday, was the very toughest class of citizens, as the advertisement of the affair was admitted exclusively to the columns of the News. Its readers were out in large numbers, filling the air with the aroma of stale tobacco and bad whiskey some of which was passed around the parquette and dress circle in commodious bottles.

The "entertainment" that occupied the boards the Y. M. C. A. lecturers were wont to tread, and which S. G. graduates will anon sweep with their trains of white illusion, consisted of fake sparring in which "de Shampion 15-years-old man, Happy Jack Flynn," and others took part and such athletic sports as a wrestling match between a young man and a cracked tenor voice.

It was a disgraceful affair for a city like Plainfield, and one that only the News would advertise. The Hall was rented under a misconception.

THE GROUND BROKEN.

Almost Half-a-Thousand People Gathered at the Ceremonies of Breaking the New Crescent Avenue Chapel.

The exercises and ceremonies Tuesday night of breaking ground preparatory to the erection of the new chapel and school rooms of the Crescent Avenue church, were a grand success officially, socially and artistically. It was all arranged by the choir of the church, and brought great credit and financial success. The members of the different committees are given below, and Mr. I. C. Pierson was the Commander-in-Chief of the entire force.

The receipts will reach $200, which after the payment of contingent expenses, will be devoted towards the choir's subscription to the fund for the proposed extensions and alterations. The pickaxe which the Rev. Mr. Richards, the pastor, wielded, and the spade and shovel that Mr. H. B. Newhall, Superintendent of the Sunday School, and Mr. J. W. Murray, President of the Board of Trustees, used in breaking ground at the point where the rear wall of the new chapel will stand, were afterwards sold at public vendue by Auctioneer Roger F. Murray, for $16.50—Mr. J. W. Murray gave $6.50 for the pickaxe, Mr. W. H. Hillman gave $5.50 for the spade and Mr. Leo Daft gave $4.50 for the shovel.

A large tent was erected back of the church, covering the ground of the new building and connecting with the church parlors. In this tent were seated 400 people when the exercises began. A long programme had been prepared, which was continued throughout the evening in both the tent and later in the parlors. The musical features were: a solo by Mrs. J. K. Myers, "The Daily Question;" a solo by Mr. Elmer Runyon, Strelezki's "Dreams;" a song by Miss Alice Holmes, "Thou Wondrous Youth," by Abt, with violin obligato by Mr. Alfred Holmes; "Skylark," a trio, by the ladies of the choir; and Pinsuti's "Parting Kiss," beautifully sung as a mixed quartette by the full chorus. Miss Vinnie French played a Nocturne by Liszt, "Will o' the Wisp" by Chopin, and "The Arkansas Traveler." Miss Jessie Utter and Miss Alice Holmes rendered as duetts, an Octette of Mendelssohn's, and an Overture by Kalliwoda.

Preceding the formalities of breaking the ground, addresses were made by the Rev. John C. Bliss, D. D., of the Washington Heights Presbyterian church, New York, formerly pastor of the Crescent Avenue church, and by the Rev. Dr. E. P. Ketcham and the Rev. W. R. Richards. Dr. Bliss' references to personal experiences in the church during years long past, and the work of the congregation and himself together, brought tears to the eyes of many of the old members. At the close of the exercises he was overwhelmed with attention, and pleasant words were showered on Mrs. Bliss, who with Mrs. Richards and other ladies of the church, subsequently held a reception in the parlors.

On the wall of one parlor was hung a set of Architect Teale's plans for the chapel and Sunday school extension, and alterations. They showed a building 68 feet broad, by 56 deep. The auditorium when all connecting doors are thrown open, will seat about 850. A gallery, also containing classes, will encircle the interior after the plan of Vincent chapel, which it will somewhat resemble.

The walls of the parlors were literally covered with rugs, tapestries, portierres and curtains, in rich plushes, soft chenilles, delicate laces and bamboo and beads. Such adornment for such purposes, has never been equalled in Plainfield. The decoration committee, who deserve great credit for it all, were Mrs. J. K. Myers, Miss J. L. Demarest, Miss Eleanor Demarest and Mr. George Schoonmaker.

The refreshments were also particularly good, under the direction of Mrs. E. R. Strothers, Miss C. O. Dunn, Miss Augusta Holmes, and Messrs Arthur C. Baynon and A. J. Gassett. Probably 250 people were served during the evening, at tables under the big tent.

The Japanese booth, from which over 200 fans were sold, was presided over by Miss J. L. Demarest, Miss Carrie Dewey and Miss Jean R. Murray.

The flower [illegible] was literally loaded with quantities of the most beautiful roses, big baskets of pansies and other flowers. The hot-house of Mr. John Taylor Johnston and other members of the congregation, were almost emptied to contribute to the collection. The ladies in charge were, Miss Sadie Hunter, Miss Carrie Milliken and Miss Katharine Yates.

Mrs. Arthur Baynon and Miss Gussie Murray, dispensed lemonade from a pretty booth of straw and daisies.

The music committee consisted of: Miss Alice Holmes, Miss Jessie Utter, Miss Carrie Dewey, Mr. Elmer Runyon and Mr. Alfred Holmes.

—The direct pouch for Newark now closes at the post office at 1:35 P. M., instead of two o'clock.

$1,000 FROM PLAINFIELD.

Mr. Samuel Milliken of Central avenue, who is a personal friend of Governor Beaver's, has wired the latter to draw at sight on Plainfield, for $1,000, in aid of the sufferers at Johnstown and its vicinity.

Mayor Male has contributed $200; Mr. Milliken gives $250 for himself and $50 for his wife; Mr. James T. Closson handed the Mayor this morning, $100; a paper that was was left lying on the piano in the tent at the Crescent Avenue church ground-breaking, soon had $24 subscribed on it, and other amounts are being rapidly received.

He Can Sell Iced Cream on Sunday.

The case on appeal of John H. Tier of this city, who was declared guilty by Judge Suydam of violating the city ordinance because he sold iced cream on Sunday, was finished in the Court at Elizabeth Wednesday. The jury immediately brought in a verdict of not guilty. Messrs. Jackson & Codington were counsel for Mr. Tier.

Counsel on both sides submitted the case to the jury without argument. Several exceptions to the rulings of the court were taken on behalf of the city, on which the case will be carried to the Supreme Court if the Common Council think proper to so order.

PLAINFIELD WINS BOTH.

The Putnams of Brooklyn, and the Alerts of Elizabeth, Fall Victims to the Crescents on Decoration Day.

In spite of the Heavens above and the Earth below, the Y. M. C. A., Crescents played the two games scheduled for Decoration Day, and won them, too. Cornwell was laid off with a broken nose, McCutcheon is not yet in shape, and Dilts was out of town, yet with the material at hand a couple of good games were put up, and the large attendance at both games expressed its appreciation and approbation in loud applause over special plays and general results.

In the morning it was the Putnams of Brooklyn that crossed bats with the home team. Gately was not on deck, so Condon, the other half of the battery, was taken from behind the bat and put in the pitcher's box, with Huntley to catch. Again Dave proved himself a gay deceiver. He had already a record for striking out three men in the Rutger's team and he wanted to beat it. He did. He struck out seven of the Brooklyn boys in the first three innings.

Huntley backed him up as well as a brand new glove would permit, but he was very weak at the bat and failed to hit the ball at all during the game. Another new man of the season was Harry Cadmus, who used to line 'em out last year, but could not find them this. He was also rocky in the field. But a prize was discovered in Darian on second base. He is another deaf mute but like smiling Patrick J. Gately, he was always there. For a man who had not played before in two years, his work was particularly praiseworthy.

The score in detail, was:

THE AFTERNOON GAME.

At 3:30 o'clock, a half-hour after the afternoon's game was to be called, it did not look as if there could possibly be any. The rain fell in torrents, and beat into the grand stand so fiercely that even the two hundred umbrellas raised were no protection. For over two hours a gang of men and boys with brooms and pails had labored hard to sweep and bale the water out of the infield. First base was afloat, the short stop's stand was a foot under water, and the paths between the bags were but traceries of slimy, slippery mud.

But the Alerts of Elizabeth were on hand in their white flannel suits, and patiently waited with the spectators for a let up of the showers. They were so confident of victory that they handicapped their luck by stuffing their mascot full of peanuts that made him as bilious as some of their own throwing. And it was wild throwing that beat them. Game was not called until 4:10, because of the non-arrival of the Alert's battery.

The Crescents nine was slightly changed from that of the morning. Murray and Huntley were off, and Gately and Towsley filled the team. Deceiving Dave went behind the bat to collar the Pleasing Patrick's delusive up shoots, and fallacious outer curves. Darian played second again with much credit; McLaughlin, Demarest and Towsley scooped everything in their reach; while Lee and McMurray kept their ends up besides excelling at the bat.

It was the most interesting contest on the grounds this season. There was plenty of batting, sharp fielding and base running. Then it was also a game that was not through until the last man of the Elizabeths was out. Plainfield led at the end of the second inning; Elizabeth led on the third; the score was a tie on the fourth, and Elizabeth led again on the fifth.

It was hard work for the pitchers. The ball was so soft and treacherous in the hand, it was almost impossible to grip it for a twist. But both Kennedy and Gately did nobly, though the former's errors in other ways were costly. A feature of the games lately has been Demarest's base running. He stole seven bases out of a total of sixteen during the day. In the afternoon the batting of McMurray, Condon and Lee was commendable, and the latter two were the only ones who made base hits in the morning. Mr. Thomas Keller was umpire again, and a first-class one, too.

An Artist's Picture in Words.

The leading story in St. Nicholas for June is, both in its letter press and illustrations, the composition of George Wharton Edwards.

We had been afforded frequent opportunity to enjoy the delightful charm of the pictures his brush and pencil have created, but not until our reading of the story referred to, "How I saw 'Old Colony,'" did we imagine the same lights and shadows, mezzo tints and color, could be blended with the same fascinating effect in a picture of words. Beside all that which betokens the artist, the story is full of a purity of sentiment and tender pathos that can only spring from a sincere affection for the young—an affection that man nor woman cannot be too proud of, and the betrayal of which appeals so winningly to us all.

East New Jersey Baptist Association.

The forty-eighth anniversary of the East New Jersey Baptist Association, opened in the Park Avenue Baptist church in this city, Tuesday, with several hundred delegates in attendance. Rev. G. W. Nicholson of Jersey City, is Moderator. Rev. A. E. Dilts, delivered the address of welcome, and Rev. H. F. Barnes of New Brunswick, preached the introductory sermon. During the noon intermission refreshments were served in the parlors of the Park Avenue church, assisted by the ladies from the First Baptist church. In the afternoon the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society met in the chapel at one o'clock. The remainder of the afternoon session was taken up with the report of the Committee on Application of churches, the reading of letters from the churches, and ten-minute addresses. In the evening Rev. William Rollins delivered an address.

Wednesday opened with a service of prayer, praise and conference, followed by the morning session of the Association. The programme was as follows:

Report of Committee on Church Letters.
Report of Committee on Minutes of Corresponding Bodies.
Report of Committee on Place of next Meeting.
Report of Committee on Introductory Sermon for 1890.
Report of Committee on Doctrinal Discourse for 1890.
Doctrinal Discourse. Rev. J. B. English, D. D.
Report of Committee on Obituaries.
Report of Committee on Resolutions.
Miscellaneous Business.

Following was the programme for the afternoon's session:

Election of two Trustees of Disabled Ministers' Fund.
Report of Standing Clerk.
Unfinished Business.
Farewell Hymn—"God be with you till we meet again."
Adjournment.

MUHLENBERG HOSPITAL.

The annual meeting of the Board of Governors of the Hospital, took place on Monday evening of last week.

From the various reports presented it appears that the number of patients treated during the year, has been 88. Of these, 54 have been discharged cured and 18 improved; 9 have died and 7 remain in the Hospital. In addition to these, more than 100 out-door or clinical patients have received advice and treatment at the Hospital.

These figures, however, give but a very imperfect idea of the good work done by the faithful matron, Mrs. Clarinda Walrod, and her assistants, or of the assiduous attention and services rendered by the medical staff. There have been many important surgical operations, nearly all of which have been successful.

During the year the Hospital has acquired a large piece of land adjoining on the Southwest of the old property, thus securing much needed additional space for light, air, quiet and future improvements. Of the price of this land $900 was kindly contributed by the Hon. Job Male, leaving $1,800, the residue, unpaid, secured by mortgage of the property bought. This year, also, $2,800 has been raised by subscriptions for the new building, described in THE PRESS, which is nearly completed, and which is much needed for special uses. It will add much to the efficiency and comfort of the Hospital.

The current expenses for the year have been about $2,900. Usually about one-half of the expenses are met by the amounts received from patients, and the remainder by donations received through various channels; but so many of the patients were unable to pay anything that the moneys received from patients were only $640 this year, whereas last year $1,630 was received from this source. As there was likewise a considerable falling off in receipts from other sources, the expenditures have exceeded the receipts by about $800.

President—Rufus K. Case.
Vice Presidents—Charles Schipper and Edw. B. Clark.
Secretary—William R. Cock.
Treasurer—Geo. H. Goddard.
Managing Committee—Edward B. Clark, E. Woltman, E. N. Erickson, Rev. C. L. Goodrich, W. R. Cock.
Finance Committee—J. Evarts Tracy, John M. Whiton, W. E. Lowe, Charles Schipper, Samuel Huntington.

THE RUN OF THE BI'S.

Although the weather looked very dubious, Thursday morning at 7 o'clock, the time that the Plainfield Bicycle Club run had been called to go to Princeton, Captain Frank L. C. Martin, E. L. Walz, Jr., Geo. C. Martin, Jr., E. S. Dorman, J. E. Erickson, Jos. W. Sandford, Jr., Jno. P. Munn and W. Lee Simmonds, were at the club house determined to "get there" if possible, as they had been looking forward to this run with a great deal of pleasure.

The start was made at 7:30. At Dunellen the party was joined by Wm. T. Milliken on his new safety, but owing to a previous engagement he could only accompany his companions about five miles beyond New Brunswick.

On reaching New Brunswick the bi's took a short rest on Rutgers College campus, while one of the new riders began to polish his wheel. A bystander was heard to remark, "I guess that fellow must be a beginner or he would not be so particular." Shortly before reaching New Brunswick the riders were overtaken by a shower, after which the clouds began to roll by, and when Franklin Park was reached the sun made its appearance and remained nearly all day.

By the time the riders arrived at Kingston it was very warm, and as they were delayed about fifteen minutes owing to the draw bridge over the canal being open, two of the party stole away on the quiet and were soon after discovered in a hotel eating iced cream.

On arrival at Princeton the silent steeds were brought to a halt at Nassau Hotel, where the party was met by the jovial proprietor, Mr. A. D. Cook, who tendered a warm welcome and a first class dinner which all did justice to. After a spin through the college grounds and about the town, two of the number, who were new riders and had never before taken a long run, decided to wheel to Hopewell and train it home having ridden about 40 miles. The rest rode home by the way of Blawenburgh, Plainville, Belle Mead and Somerville, arriving in Plainfield at 7:15 with 60 miles to their credit.

The bi's had clear weather all day with the exception of early in the morning and a shower while at dinner, and were surprised on reaching Somerville to learn by the condition of the roads that it had rained so much. All had had a splendid time and pitied the fellows who remained at home because the weather looked disagreeable.

—The public schools will close on Wednesday, June 26, and reopen Monday, Sept. [illegible].

Messrs J. Harvey Doane and Fred. S. Dunn Thursday afternoon took the picture of Gazelle engine and a few of the members with the engine in the house, and later the apparatus was taken from the house to the sidewalk and there with the horses attached and the members surrounding the engine another picture was taken. Mr. Doane will dispose of the pictures to anyone who may wish to have them at an exceedingly low price.

The Unitarian Society Elects a Treasurer.

At the close of a sermon by the Rev. James T. Bixby, Ph. D., in its meeting room at 17 East Front street, Sunday afternoon, the Unitarian Society held a business meeting.

Mr. Henry R. Wells presided, and explained to the congregation that as a slight expense was being incurred by the holding of the meetings each Sunday, it would be proper to choose a Treasurer to whom contributions for the support of the work could be sent. Mayor Male named Mr. George D. Patten, Jr., Mr. David W. Pond seconded the nomination, and Mr. Patten was unanimously elected.

How Marshal Conover Broke Up the Feast.

Wm. Urbahn, the blacksmith, of Somerset street, complained to the Borough authorities, Saturday night, that a disorderly lot of men were occupying his premises and he wanted them removed.

Special Marshal George Conover was detailed to clean out the gang which he found sheltered in a feed wagon along the tail board of which stood a row of bottles of beer. With his club the Marshal smashed the bottles, much to the disgust of those who had paid for the beer and had left a deposit on the bottles.

The Borough is having more than its hands full trying to keep in order the gangs of Plainfielders who steadily float over there empty and unsteadily roll back again loaded up with enough liquor to last until their return.

A Pleasing Musicale.

On Friday evening last, a very pleasant company assembled at the residence of Mrs. Dey 192 Broadway, to welcome Miss S. Louise Tooker, the celebrated Brooklyn soprano singer, and Prof. Walter A Dolane of the same city, who had made a flying visit to Plainfield. At present Miss Tooker is the soloist in the Church of the Sacred Heart, New York city. The selections rendered by this lady were very pleasing, especially the solo "It Was a Dream." Prof. Dolane is an accomplished musician, being the author of several compositions, the latest being his "Inaugural March," dedicated to President Harrison.

Miss Annie Hagen of this city, performed several difficult instrumental selections. She is a young Miss, and has a bright career before her as a pianist. About 11 o'clock, a collation was served, after which the guests dispersed, expressing themselves as having passed a delightful evening of song and music. Among those present were: Mrs. E. Dey, Mrs. N. Dey, Mr. and Mrs. Hagen, the Misses Hagen, Mr. J. Barton Kline and sister, Miss C. Dey, Mr. and Mrs. Lyons, and Mr. and Mrs. Samuel H. Andrews of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Positively Delicious.

So delightful to the taste are HAMBURG FIGS that they could be placed upon the table for dessert, and no one would suspect that they were more than very superior crystalized fruit. This property is what makes them so popular with ladies and children for the cure of indigestion and sick-headache. 25 cents. Dose, one fig. Mack Drug Co. J. G. Miller, Agent, Plainfield.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

May profit by his errors, and derive
Experience from his folly.—SHELLEY.

Three kinds of men start out to buy Clothing. The foolish man is hauled in by a bait and buys cheap shoddy clothing from the "hurrah" fake.

Then comes the thoughtless man who wends his way to the fashionable tailor, gets a good suit, but pays a very big price for the same.

The wise man deals with some reputable manufacturer of Clothing and secures garments fully equal to those made to order at about half custom prices. Thus the wise man gets his Clothing, with quality and workmanship thrown in, as cheap as the foolish man his miserable trash. An unusually large number of wise men are being attracted to our store this Spring. Whether it's a case of "once bitten twice shy" or not, we don't know, but certainly their patronage of us does credit to their good judgment, and we don't think, once having traded here, they'll be caught by clap-trap again. We know what we sell. We make it, and neither time, effort or money is spared to produce garments that will do us credit and still further establish our reputation. It's a selfish interest we take, we'll admit, but the effect is the same. It's there, and it pays both you and us.

FREEHOLDERS' PROCEEDINGS.

From committee on legal questions.

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union.

GENTLEMEN:—The committee on legal questions would respectfully submit the following report:

The cases of George M. Stiles and Thomas Forsyth, late sheriffs of the county of Union, have been settled and full releases obtained from them of the same.

The mandamus existing against the city of Rahway has been discontinued, that city having paid all the taxes due with interest in full, and there is no debt now owing to this county from that city.

There are no cases existing against the county at the present time and the only cases existing in their favor are the Fish and Gage lunacy cases, which are yet unsettled, but are being pressed to a settlement as rapidly as possible, with a prospect of being arranged in a short time.

Dated May 7, 1889.

Committee.

On motion of Freeholder Thompson received and ordered placed on file.

From committee on Publication.

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union:

GENTLEMEN:—Your committee on publication would respectfully report that there has been expended during the past year the sum of $1,402. This incl[illegible] the printing of the county Collector's report and the minutes of the board.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

From committee on discharge of prisoners.

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union.

GENTLEMEN:—Your committee on discharge of prisoners beg leave to report that they held the proper meetings during the year for the purpose of releasing prisoners from the jail whenever the same was necessary, and in each case where the warden has recommended an allowance for good behavior the same has been allowed. Discharged 276.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

GEORGE WHALEY,
GEORGE KYTE,
FRANK KLEINHANS,
Committee.

On motion of Freeholder Briant received and ordered placed on file.

From county physician:

To the honorable director and members of the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union:

GENTLEMEN:—I have the honor to respectfully submit my annual report as county physician for the year ending May 1, 1889.

Place where deaths occurred were: Cranford, 1; Clark, 1; Elizabeth, 60; Fanwood, 2; Linden, 4; New Providence, 2; Plainfield, 4; Rahway, 11; Summit, 1; Union, 2; Westfield, 3; Total, 93.

The causes of death were: Diseases, 23; railroad accident, 34; drowned, 14; premature birth, 4; accident, 12; suicide, 4; total, 93.

In the majority of instances the friends and relatives have buried their own dead, and in cases where corporations have lost workmen by accident they have been readily induced to bear the expense of burial. It will also be noticed that I have found it necessary to refer but two cases to the official supervision of a coroner. In order, however, to meet the demands of justice and clear a case of any semblance of suspicious circumstances without an inquest, I have found it necessary in some instances to spend much time and pursue the most rigid investigation. Two points, however, have been gained—the county has been saved the expense of a large number of inquests, and the friends have been spared the pain of an unnecessary exposure of their dead.

The public through the press have received information in every case, therefore a particular description is not considered necessary.

Very respectfully submitted,

FRANK W. WESCOTT,
County Physician.

On motion of Freeholder Vanderbeek received and ordered placed on file.

From committee on jail inspection.

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union:

GENTLEMEN:—In accordance with the rules governing the board of freeholders the committee on jail inspection herewith submit their annual report for the fiscal year ending May 1, 1889.

Accompanying this report is presented a carefully compiled statement by the warden, giving in detail the receipts, expenditures, number of commitments, cost per day of each prisoner, etc.

This report shows the disbursements for all purposes, including salaries, provisions, clothing, medical attendance, miscellaneous supplies, tools, etc., to have been $4,504.24.

The number of prisoners in confinement at the beginning of the year was 39; committed during the year, 738; discharged, 740; leaving in custody at present time, 37.

Your committee have pleasure in reporting that the daily cost of each prisoner has been reduced to 26 cents against 29 cents last year.

This is lower than any previous report in the record of the county.

During the year the prisoners have been required to clean and care for the county buildings and other incidental work that the committee and warden deemed necessary, fixing and attending steam heating boilers, cooking and preparing food for prisoners, receiving and storing away coal, etc. All this work carefully estimated would have cost the county at least $[illegible], and is properly an offset against the expenditures, reducing the cost per day to the very low sum of 15.2 cents against 18.5 cents last year.

The committee desire to call attention to the great increase of prisoners in custody during the year as in the warden's statistical report it shows an average each day of 51, which is considerably larger than any previous report, last year only averaging 41 prisoners per day.

Your committee have long felt that some action should be taken by this board to prevent in a measure at least the wholesale commitments which fill the jail to its utmost capacity and greatly increases the burden on the taxpayers.

Your committee would also report that at the last meeting they reappointed Dr. J. O. Pinneo jail physician for the ensuing year at the usual compensation.

To the warden, matron and assistant much credit is due for the very satisfactory condition of the jail and its surroundings. For cleanliness, neatness and discipline we believe your county jail will compare favorably with any similar institution in the country.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

Freeholder Vanderbeek offered the following resolution as amendment to section five of report of committee on county roads.

Resolved, That the road running from Springfield to Scotch Plains commencing at the Morris turnpike in the township of Springfield and ending at a road known as Park-ave in the village of Scotch Plains in the township of Fanwood, be adopted and made a county road under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to enable boards of chosen freeholders to acquire, improve and maintain public roads" and that the same be improved in the manner provided in said act.

Freeholder West moved the amendment be adopted.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

Freeholder Kyte moved the section amended as amended be inserted and adopted as section fifth of the report of committee on county roads. Carried.

Freeholder West moved that the report of committee on county roads as amended be adopted as a whole.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

Committee on county roads reported progress in relation to maps.

By Freeholder Doty:

Resolved, That the thanks of this board be hereby tendered unto J. Frank Hubbard, the director [illegible], for the impartial manner in which he has conducted the meetings of this board and the fairness shown its members in all his rulings during the past year.

On motion of Freeholder Howard adopted unanimously.

Freeholder West moved to adjourn sine die.

Which was carried.

The director declared the board adjourned sine die.

CORNELIUS VANDERBILT.

A Woman's Pen Picture of the Wealthiest of American Millionaires.

Here is a woman's idea of Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt: "He is," she declared to a New York reporter, "by far the best-looking and best-dressed of our millionaires. This young man is decidedly attractive to the eye. He is of excellent height and figure, and his clothes, while never foppish, are immaculate, and exhibit plainly the work of as good a tailor as can be found in New York. At the theater Mr. Vanderbilt is invariably in perfect evening dress, [illegible] I don't suppose there is a better groomed man in the city. His firm, solid chin and mouth always have the newly shaved look of a gentleman of leisure, his tiny whiskers just in front of his ears are trimmed with exquisite exactness, his linen is like snow, and his patent leather shoes look as though they had never been worn before. Mr. Vanderbilt has the face of a thoroughly trustworthy and shrewd man of business. [illegible] I never see Cornelius Vanderbilt but what I appreciate his capacity for being very rich. [illegible] this is Cornelius Vanderbilt, still young, but with a well-grown family and millions of dollars."

FAMILY PLEASURES.

How to Make Home Life Enjoyable to the Old and Young.

Recreations and Amusements for Leisure Hours—How Parents Can Create a Close Bond of Sympathy Between Themselves and Their Children.

Perhaps the greatest general need of the American people is a better provision for recreations, or amusements, in the home circle. We live too much in public, truthfully remarks the editress of the Ladies' Home Journal. Our men, absorbed in money-getting or politics, regard their domestic life as a secondary matter. Our women, if not domestic drudges, and these are comparatively rare, are devoted to the verge of dissipation to benevolent and religious work, or to the claims of society. Even children are led to regard every phase of life more important, and fuller of enjoyment, than any thing connected with the privacy of home.

American character is thus to a great extent developed in an atmosphere of excitement, and nourished with the artificiality pertaining to an existence carried on before the eyes of the world. It is to this many faults in American manners, and perhaps also in American morals, are no doubt due.

We need the peculiar refining influence to be obtained only from a simple, yet elevated and attractive, home life.

Enjoyment pure and simple or relaxation from serious occupations is an inherent demand of human nature. And it is needed by men and women, as well as by children. All work and no play makes John a dull man as inevitably as it makes Jack a dull boy. Most people realize this fact, only to look away and abroad for pleasures which are either impossible for them to obtain, or having been obtained, prove unsatisfactory. At the same time the best of all delights may lie unnoticed at their feet.

Again circumstances compel some families to live lives isolated from what is called "society." In their "isolation" they must do without the joys of companionship, or find them in their own home circles. Blessed is the family that is able to discover the pure happiness which even apparently narrow lives afford.

Home pleasures as a rule should be those in which every member of the family can partake. They should be emphatically simple pleasures, such as require loving care and thought for others, rather than the expenditure of wearisome labor or much money. They should be pleasures which keep the mind active, bringing healthy satisfaction without danger of dissipation or of enervating satiety. Finally they should be sufficiently varied to suit human nature's love of change.

A pleasure easily obtained, and almost universally agreeable, is to be found in reading aloud from an entertaining book of travels, an interesting story, or a book in which humor is largely intermingled. Nor is it strictly necessary that a book should be well read in order to give pleasure. Yet on the other hand a good reader can make a comparatively uninteresting book attractive. And there are probably few families containing no member sufficiently talented to become a good reader through practice. If parents would only encourage their children from earliest childhood to read aloud from books and papers they understand and find interesting, good readers would no longer be rare, and an unfailing source of pleasure would be provided for many homes. This pleasure is dwelt upon because it is so commonly overlooked and unappreciated. To read well will some day no doubt be considered as valuable an accomplishment as to sing, or to play upon some musical instrument well. And as much pains will be taken to develop a talent for reading—not elocution—as are now given to the cultivation of musical talent.

Music is somewhat universally recognized as an amusement, or more properly an enjoyment, suitable for the home circle. Yet as a rule, the piano or organ is opened, and the voice is used in singing many more times for the entertainment of guests than for the exclusive pleasure of a family. Story books often make it one of their heroine's special virtues, that she plays or sings some simple music occasionally to please an old father.

Every home ought to be furnished with a backgammon board, a set of checkers or chess-men, a box of dominoes, a game of authors or something similar. And these games should not be laid away on a shelf until company comes, but should be used principally as an innocent means of relaxation for the different members of the household. It should perhaps be said, for the sake of those conscientiously opposed to all games of chance, that they never do harm until united with a sordid spirit, which values only money or material rewards.

The cultivation of flowers, "gardening for pleasure," is usually an unending source of delight to the girls, and not unfrequently to the boys, of the household.

Out-of-door sports in which all of the family can engage should be encouraged. Croquet, tennis, archery, etc., where they are feasible, and the family circle large enough, can generally be entered into with as much zest by fathers, mothers, brothers and sisters, as by a large mixed company, and without the addition of the many social features too often supposed to be indispensable.

Family picnics, walks in the woods, fishing excursions, rides and drives, are pleasures especially enjoyed by the younger members of the family.

Besides bringing parents and children nearer together, home pleasures increase the affection of brothers and sisters toward each other. They have thus not only a commonality of interests in childhood and youth, but in after life a tie of pleasant memories connects them closely in each others thought. To be comrades and friends, as well as brothers and sisters, form a three-fold cord not easily broken.

Finally the tendency of these simple, easily obtained pleasures as a part of daily life, heartily enjoyed, is to encourage a noble simplicity of character. They give a dignity to little things, and add a fullness to life. They develop man's ability to obtain good wherever it may be found. They prevent, to a great extent, a craving for unhealthy excitements and less innocent pastimes. And by keeping the mind fresh, and the senses alert and active, they prepare the way for the higher enjoyments possible for people of education and culture.

Simple pleasures, perhaps, come the nearest of any thing to being the thornless roses in the pathway of our earthly pilgrimage, and their fragrance sweetens the atmosphere in which we move, keeping our natures wholesome, our dispositions cheerful, and our perceptions of the beauty and value of life keen.

Estate of John H. Evans, Deceased.

Pursuant to the order of George T. Parrot, Surrogate of the County of Union, this day made, on the application of the undersigned, administrators of said deceased, notice is hereby given to the creditors of said deceased to exhibit to the subscribers under oath or affirmation their claims and demands against the estate of said deceased within nine months from this date, or they will be forever barred from prosecuting or recovering the same against the subscribers.

DANIEL T. EVANS,
[illegible] EVANS,
Administrators.

LEGAL NOTICES.

Assignee's Notice to Creditors.

Notice is hereby given to the creditors of Augustus F. Warden and Benjamin J. Fowler, partners as Warden & Fowler, Confectioners, etc., of No. 30 Park avenue, in the city of Plainfield, Union county, New Jersey, that all claims against their estate must be exhibited to the subscriber at his office, 30 Park avenue, Plainfield, New Jersey, under oath or affirmation, on or before the fourteenth day of June next, or be forever barred from coming in for a dividend of the estate; and said creditors are further notified that a list of claims against the said Augustus F. Warden and Benjamin J. Fowler, partners as Warden & Fowler, will be filed with the Clerks of the Courts of Common Pleas of the county of Somerset and county of Middlesex, at the expiration of that time, when exceptions thereto may be filed by any person interested.

Dated April 12th, 1889.

VINCENT W. NASH, Assignee.

NOTICE. April 18th, 1889.

Estate of Isaac J. Moore, Deceased.

Pursuant to the order of George T. Parrot, Surrogate of the County of Union, this day made, on the application of the undersigned, Executrix of said deceased, notice is hereby given to the creditors of said deceased to exhibit to the subscriber under oath or affirmation their claims and demands against the estate of said deceased within nine months from this date, or they will be forever barred from prosecuting or recovering the same against the subscriber.

[illegible] MOORE, Executrix.

IN CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY.

To Catharine M. Torrey and Samuel W. Torrey:

By virtue of an order of the Court of Chancery of New Jersey, made on the day of the date hereof, in a cause wherein The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States are complainant, and you and others are defendants, you are required to appear, plead, demur, or answer to the complainant's bill, on or before the Tenth day of July next, or the said bill will be taken as confessed against you.

The said bill is filed to foreclose a mortgage made by [illegible] to the complainants dated the twenty-eighth day of June eighteen hundred and eighty-seven, on lands in the city of Plainfield, Union county, New Jersey. And you Catharine M. Torrey are made party defendant because you claim to own said lands, and you Samuel W. Torrey because you are the husband of Catharine M. Torrey, and may claim some interest in said lands.

Dated May 7th, 1889.

FREDERICK FRELINGHUYSEN,

Take Notice,

Whereas Isaac Line, late of North Plainfield Township, Somerset county, New Jersey, deceased, in his lifetime, with Abram M. Vail, entered into certain written contracts for the sale of building lots, situate in the city of Plainfield, county of Union and state of New Jersey, to wit: One contract dated June [illegible], 1886, for the sale to John J. Bourke of a lot described as Lot No. 7 on the South side of Division avenue, fifty feet front and running from the sidewalk to the rear line of lots on Union avenue; one contract dated November 18th, 1886 for the sale to Neil Scott of a lot described as Lot No. [illegible] the South side of Division avenue, fifty feet front and running from sidewalk to the rear line of Union avenue lots; one contract dated October 16th, 1886, for the sale to John T. Stafford, of Plainfield, aforesaid, of a lot described as Lot No. 1 on the south side of Division avenue, fifty-six feet front and running from the sidewalk to the rear line of Union avenue lots.

Now, therefore, this is to give notice to all persons concerned that the subscriber, Executor of the said Isaac Line, deceased, will apply to the Orphans' Court of the County of Union, to be holden at Elizabeth, in and for said county, on Wednesday, the third day of July, next, to decree the fulfillment of the said contracts, respectively, so far as regards the estate of said deceased, according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

Dated April 26th, 1889.

SAMUEL A. HILTS, Executor, &c.

THE GREAT RESERVATION

AND

Milk River Valley OF MONTANA

Have just been opened for settlement to the home-seeker. You have a right to a homestead under your government rights. Why not use it before it is too late? Land all free to settlers, and is the only part of the United States where free land suitable for stock and grain raising can be taken, at or near stations on the line of a railroad. You can take your choice from level vally lands or gently rolling benoh lands. Soil very rich, and produces all grains and vegetables without irrigation. Climate delightful, being made very mild in Winter by warm Chinooks from the Pacific ocean. Timber, water and coal in abundance. Cheap land seekers' and settlers' tickets. Buy tickets to Glasgow, Chinook (Dawes), Benton, Great Falls, Helena and Butte. Plenty of government land near these points. For further information, the new pamphlet, "The Great Reservation", maps, etc., apply to F. I. Whitney, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, St. P., M. & M. R'y, St. Paul, Minn.

FILIAL AFFECTION.

There's a girl who, I've a notion,
Would make any household glad,
For her beautiful devotion
To her old and homely "dad."
Her soft hand she kindly presses
To his forehead seamed by care,
And she daintily caresses
His remaining lock of hair.

When at eve from plodding daily
He returneth from the town,
She runs forth to meet him gayly,
And she brings his dressing-gown.
How she banishes his sadness
When to sadness he inclines,
With a smile of tender gladness
And his slippers—[illegible]

Who can say what is the reason
Of this fond and filial love?
Why at this especial season
Should she treat the old man thus?
Though so bald, he's very thrifty,
And I venture a shrewd guess
That she's working him for fifty Dollars for a new spring dress.

—Harry B. Smith, in America.

DOMINICK'S COURTSHIP.

It Suited Him, Though It Didn't Please Mrs. Dobson.

Dominick Partridge, riding barnward on his last load of hay, formed a resolution, and uttered it, although the words were rather a remark than a declaration, for what he said was:

"I hadn't ought to be single."

He had been making an estimate of his possessions—of his money in the bank, his acres, the corn and hay and apples and cider in the barn, the cattle and horses that were his own—and he had decided that he was too rich to be a bachelor.

He did not adore those beings of whom some people speak of as "the ladies," others as "lovely woman," and others still as "wimmen folks," but he knew that if there was a Mrs. Partridge he should be much more comfortable, should take a new position as a married man, and doubtless find himself at the end of his days with some one to inherit his property, a son to take the trouble off of his hands in his old age and to be a second Dominick Partridge. Therefore Mr. Partridge, sole of that name at the moment, remarked: "I hadn't ought to be single," and began to call up before his mind's eye a list of the marriageable ladies of [illegible]. There was the Widow Burroughs, too fat and very lazy; the Widow Green, the most suitable partner for a middle-aged man; but "Dunno as I could stand it," said Mr. Partridge. Miss Spicer was stern and man-hating; her sister, Miss Prudie, silly and an old coquette. The minister's sister was cast-iron dignity and French elegance combined, but she would stop his pipe, his holiday glass, his circus going, his wearing of old clothes, and doing as he pleased. Who was there besides?

A sudden thought came into his mind and he laughed.

"Why shouldn't I marry for love?" he said, under his breath.

Simon, who had managed his affairs for many a day, and, while supposed to be hired man, was actually master, sat in the hay beside Mr. Partridge, like an old jackdaw in an immense nest, and watched him. He saw his cheeks flush a soft, wintry apple-red, and heard him laugh a little foolish laugh to himself.

"I'll bet a cookey I know what you was a thinkin' of, Mr. Partridge," he said.

"I'll bet another you don't, Si," said his master.

"You was a thinkin' of gettin' married," said Si. "There, now!"

"I wasn't exactly," responded Mr. Partridge; "but I was thinkin' of thinkin' about it."

"Comes to the same thing, sir," said Si. "Comes to the same thing. I was turnin' it over in my mind. You'd orter hev a nice, pretty wife in your big house. And hev the parlor fixed up, and a melodeon and sofy, bottomed cheers, and a chany lamp, and lace curtings, like they do up to the squire's, and your portrait and hern to match, framed. She'd know. That's only a kind o' a outline. And I should sort o' take more pride when I drove ye to meetin'. It's all very well to be hearty, rampageous bachelors when you're young, but when you're settlin' down there's more required. You['re] fifty fourth of next November, and I was fourteen when you was born. We'd orter settle."

"Yes, Si," thoughtfully responded Mr. Partridge. "I was thinking this, Simon. 'Out of the fryin' pan into the fire.' Suppose I was to get a tartar. Middle-aged women get pretty cross sometimes. Peace is a comfort, anyhow. But to be ordered 'round, and flung at, and asked 'why you don't' and told 'she said so,' like my poor brother Ike was in his wife's lifetime, ain't pleasant."

"Don't take one of that kind," said Simon, with an air of great experience. "Where you'd orter go is up to the squire's."

"Think so?" asked Mr. Partridge, with the winter apple flush all over his face this time. "Think so, Si?"

"I do so," said Simon, looking at his master. "Rich folks like you can choose. You dress up and you look quite presentable yet. The Partridges ain't never been called homely. Why, your cousin Bee was called the handsomest gal in the county at seventeen."

"She was, too," interpolated Mr. Partridge.

"I used to see you sneakin' arter her up the lane, there," said Simon, "and thought you'd make a pretty pair. But she gave you the mitten."

"So she did, Simon," assented Mr. Partridge.

"And got nicely paid for it," said Simon, with a chuckle. "She's regretted it many a day. Her husband ran off, and she's housekeeper to the squire. Yes, she's sorry—she's sorry."

"Think so, Simon?" asked Mr. Partridge, turning red again.

"Of course," said Simon. "Now you got through hayin', leave things to me, and go up to the squire's to spend a week. You'll see 'em all. There's Bella, kinder slim and black-eyed; and Flossy, she's pink and white, and yellow-haired; and Myra, her eyes are gray, and her hair pale brown, and some call her queen-like. You've got a choice, and pretty as they are, they haven't got a beau amongst 'em. This is a poor place for young men, and everybody knows Mrs. Dobson wants to marry 'em off."

"Si!" cried Mr. Partridge, suddenly, in the voice he would have used to a cow who had broken into a cornfield; "hi! Si Millet; where you goin'?"

"Hi!" ejaculated Simon.

"Most suitable match I know for ye. Partridge family is a good one, and you're a rich man," said Si. "Sho! what's a year or two on a man's side when he's as forehanded as you! Go over to Dobson's, I say; but you can take your own course—you mostly do—and you mostly regret it."

With these words the old hired man slipped to the ground on one side, as his master vanished on the other, and the work of housing the hay commenced.

However, on the next Monday Mr. Partridge, dressed with scrupulous nicety, and looking extremely well, took the train for the next station, and appeared at Squire Dobson's with a neat portmanteau in his hand, and was received with open arms by host and hostess, to whom he had written to apprise them of his coming.

Out in the arbor under the big wistaria three young girls clung together, with little chirps and twitters, like so many frightened birds—Flossy with the golden hair, Myra with the brown, and brunette Bella.

"Can it be?" whispered Flossy.

"Say it isn't true," sobbed Myra.

"It's true, and an awful shame," sighed Bella. "That man, only five years younger than pa, has come here to court one of us, and ma wants him to. Ma says it would be a great thing for one of us, because he is rich. What good would it be to be rich? Oh! girls, if it should be me, will you save me?"

"We'll all drown ourselves together, like the seven sisters in the ballad, by what's his name," vaguely sobbed Myra.

"We'll run away and live on wild cherries," said Flossy, the youngest.

But Bella recovered herself first.

"Let us disgust him," she cries, bravely. "Let us frighten him away. Let us show him what it would be for an old man to marry a young girl who didn't care for him."

"My darlings, here is Mr. Partridge, come, I hope, to make us a delightfully long visit," said the mother to her daughters five minutes after, but the daughters shook hands with the Partridge in a limp and unenthusiastic fashion, and retreating to a sofa, began giggling together in a way that horrified their mother.

Generally they were so charming. Why, when a fortune might be lost by it, would they appear at their worst, now? The fact that Dominick Partridge intended to look for a wife in her home had been communicated to her by Simon Millet, who had managed to get himself sent over with a present of poultry.

"He's sort o' backward, on account of gettin' on in life," the old man had said; "but you kin encourage him; and I know how solid he is and what he's worth."

With which recommendation he departed. And now the middle-aged man sat looking at the giggling girls, who might have been his daughters; and their mother, in despair at their conduct, fanned herself on her sofa, and did her best to place them in a favorable light. But when she sent Bella to the piano, instead of playing "A Cascade of Pearls," or "The Rippling Waterfall," nicely, [she] pretended to forget her notes; and she dared not bid Flossy bring her portfolio of drawings, because the girl had been making caricatures of Mr. Partridge on his knees to babies in long frocks all day, and was capable of producing those. And Myra was dangerous when vexed; and she felt pleased when Mr. Partridge declared that he must see how the garden looked, and, rising, sauntered out into it. Then, indeed, she could scold her girls in whispers.

Dominick Partridge did not linger to listen, nor did he pause to look at the flowers as he passed as he skirted the house, and stopped at a low window beside which a woman sat peeling peaches. She was dressed in a black nun's veiling, and wore a white linen collar and a little, dark crimson bow at her throat. Over her dress was tied a black apron. She bore traces of great beauty in her face, but was fifty years old, and looked it.

"Cousin Bee," said Dominick Partridge, "how are you?"

She looked up and smiled at him.

"I'm very well," she said. "I'm never anything else; and I suppose you aren't sick, or you wouldn't be flyin' 'round after the girls. I hear you're goin' to marry?"

"I'm generally refused, you know," he answered; "so I shan't count my chickens before they're hatched, this time."

She blushed.

"Have a peach!" she asked. "They're good."

He took one.

"They don't hold a candle to some of mine," he said, as he ate it. "I've kept up my orchards. The place is a sight to behold for beauty, Bee. The house wants fixin'."

"For a bride?" added Bee.

"Yes," said Dominick, "for a bride. She should have her own way about things. I could afford it. How do you like being Mrs. Squire Dobson's housekeeper, Bee?"

"Like!" repeated Bee. "Oh, I don't expect to like nowadays; I just put up with things. I can do. I don't mind doin'. She likes that. She calls me housekeeper. I'm here because she does; but I do hard work for a very little pay. The other servant they put a cap on and call a 'maid.' Maid and housekeeper. Well, as I said, if I wasn't called housekeeper I couldn't stay, and I tried to sew at starvation prices after—"

"After your husband died," said Dominick.

"After he went off," said Bee, sternly. "But he has been dead three years."

"And I've had enough for two all this while," said Dominick Partridge, softly.

"Well, I've no doubt one of the Misses Dobson will share it," said Bee. "When Si Millet told Mrs. Dobson, she was set up, I can tell you. I'd have Bella if I were you. She's got the most sense. They haven't any of them got too much, but they're pretty—"

"Pshaw!" said Dominick Partridge. "Bee, did you believe Simon Millet when he said I was such an old fool as to want one of those little girls? I'm not an old man. I've got years before me. I feel strong and I feel prosperous, and I feel I hadn't ought to be alone, but I don't want a dressy baby to bring up. What I want, Bee, is you. You're a dear, darling little woman, and I've hankered after you all my life. When I heard for sure that your Count—"

"He was a Baron," said Bee.

"Well, that your Baron was dead, I made up my mind that I'd never left off loving you; and just four days ago I said to myself: 'I'll go over to Squire Dobson's and ask Bee again. P'raps she'll hev me this time.'"

"I don't know what you want of an old thing like me," said Bee; but she laughed, and he kissed her.

"Three young girls," peeping through the hedge hard by, saw him, and clapping their hands softly, ran away to tell their mother.

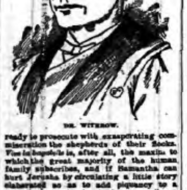
"And he is awfully nice, and she is awfully nice," they cried, in a musical chorus; "and it was all a mistake of that ridiculous Simon; and you ought to be glad, ma, that you didn't let him find out what you thought. One of us and Mr. Partridge! Absurd. But it's splendid for Bee, and romantic, for they were old lovers."—N. Y. Ledger.

MEN WORTH KNOWING.

Two Western Clergymen Who Enjoy a National Reputation—The Habits and Life-Work of Dr. Withrow and Bishop Cheney—The Largest Sunday-School in the World and Its Superintendent.

[Special Chicago Correspondence.]

As a usual thing I do not care to write about preachers. They are privileged characters; adored by the female members of their flocks, revered by two or three score masculine followers, and harshly criticised by that scornful multitude which takes no stock in organized church work. When I call preachers privileged characters I use the word "privileged" advisedly. They are privileged inasmuch as they are exempt from the jeers and gibes of their immediate followers, who, however, are ever ready to prosecute with exasperating commiseration the shepherds of their flocks. Vive la bagatelle is, after all, the maxim to which the great majority of the human family subscribes, and if Samantha can hurt Jerusha by circulating a little story elaborated so as to add piquancy to a commonplace tale she is happy, smiles a self-satisfied smile and is hailed by her intimates as a victor in the contest of trifles.



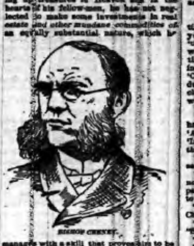
DR. WITHROW.

Spurred on to further efforts by her triumph over Jerusha, Samantha turns to Jane, from Jane to John, from John to George and finally singles out one of her ministerial acquaintances as the victim of victims. Verily, life is made up of little things, but no class has to endure so many pricks as the clerical profession. And that is the reason why I do not care to write about them—being of a humanitarian disposition and not inclined to add to the hardships of a deserving class by exposing their lives and, worst of all, their pictures to the gaze of an extensive newspaper constituency.

And yet, preachers being semi-public characters, every writer is at times compelled to write about them. This being the case, I have singled out for consideration in the following paragraphs two divines whose reputation is so well established that even the scornful multitude would find it difficult to assail their private or public acts and lives.

Rev. John Lindsay Withrow, D. D., pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church, Chicago, the largest congregation of that denomination in the West, has perhaps a larger number of admirers than any other orthodox minister outside of Brooklyn. Born in Philadelphia, in 1837, he was educated in Princeton College and seminary, where he imbibed enough Calvinistic doctrine to last him for the life-time of one of the Old Testament patriarchs.

He preached many years in Boston and other Eastern cities. His untiring zeal, displayed in the building up of weak churches, a few years ago attracted the attention of his present congregation, whose executive officers offered him a salary of nine thousand dollars per year, an assistant, and various other inducements calculated to make the call acceptable. He became the successor of the famous—some call him notorious—Dr. A. E. Kittredge, who at one time enjoyed a National reputation as the author of the most irresponsible statement ever made from an American pulpit. Dr. Withrow's success in the West, and the commanding position occupied by him in the councils of his denomination, which has made his name familiar in every Christian family in the land, is due to his earnestness and energy. A man of fine physique, a full, melodious voice and commanding presence, supplemented by a thorough education and religious fervor, he is one of the few whose very looks and action appeal to the crowd. As a pulpit orator he has few equals even in Chicago, and as an organizer he has none. While storing up treasures in Heaven and in the hearts of his fellow-men, he has not neglected to make some investments in real estate and other mundane commodities of an equally substantial nature, which he manages with a skill that proves him to be as much of a financier as a theologian. In personal appearance Dr. Withrow is a noble specimen of manhood. He is free from affectation and cant, and as earnest out of church as when occupying the pulpit. That a man of so many virtues should win the love of an immense congregation and the respect of an entire community will not surprise those who have had the pleasure of listening to one of his old-fashioned, but good-natured, sermons.

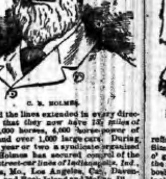


BISHOP CHENEY.

A man differing from Dr. Withrow both as regards personal appearance and pulpit manners, but just as earnest and successful as his Presbyterian brother, is the Right-Reverend Charles Edward Cheney, D. D., senior Bishop of the Reformed Episcopal Church, and rector of Christ Church, Chicago. Dr. Cheney is a native of Canandaigua, New York, where he was born on February 12, 1836. After graduating from Hobart College, Geneva, N. Y., he entered the Protestant Episcopal Seminary at Alexandria, Va., and was, in 1860, ordained presbyter by the Bishop of New York. A few weeks later he was called to Christ Church, Chicago, over which he still presides. On December 14, 1873, he was consecrated Bishop. Dr. Cheney always was what is called a low-church man, and as early as 1864 had trouble with Bishop Whitehouse, of Chicago, the most pronounced ritualist who ever presided over an American diocese. When, in 1873, the Reformed Episcopal Church was organized, Christ Church, under the leadership of Dr. Cheney, espoused the new cause; but not before the rector had been suspended by Bishop Whitehouse. A fierce legal war which lasted some years was waged between the ecclesiastical authorities of the old church against the seceders, which terminated in a complete victory for the Reformers. Dr. Cheney is a good man who believes in that kind of faith which lives by works and not by the observation of ritualistic regulations. He is adored by the members of his flock and by the thirty thousand communicants of his sect, but has never won the affections of the people at large.

Unlike Dr. Withrow, who has been called the most unaffected man in the pulpit, Dr. Cheney makes a painful impression on hearers not accustomed to his ways, by dealing in far-fetched metaphors and by drawing out his words to a seemingly endless length. His friends claim that the Bishop is free from affectation, that he acts and speaks in the pulpit just as he would in a parlor. If such is the case it would seem—to a man up in a tree, at least—that he would make a very tiresome and nerve-trying companion at a surprise party. Dr. Cheney's greatest virtue is charity, and hundreds of poor people have been saved by him from hunger, squalor and misery. In this labor of love the Bishop employs no agents, but takes it upon himself to comfort the homeless and the fatherless. He has always "done good by stealth, and now blushes to find it fame." That a man of such a disposition should gather around him a host of personal friends is natural, and that he has succeeded in making the Reformed Episcopal church respectable in point of numbers as well as principles, must be gratifying to all who love fair play and love to see devotion and enterprise rewarded.

Turning from the pulpit to the Sunday-school rooms, every man acquainted with Chicago affairs will think of Charles B. Holmes, the general manager of the greatest street railway syndicate ever organized, and the superintendent and teacher of the largest Sunday-school in the world. Mr. Holmes was born in Springfield, Vt., in 1840, but removed to Illinois with his parents in 1858. He received a thorough common-school and academic education. He earned his first money as a farm hand, in which capacity he worked for twelve dollars per month. Afterward he engaged in railroad surveying and farming in Northern Iowa. In 1868 Mr. Holmes removed to Chicago, where he became manager of the Union Line Transportation Company and later the superintendent of the Chicago City Railway Company, which owns all the surface street-car lines in the South division of Chicago. Under his management the magnificent cable system of roads was built and the lines extended in every direction, so that they now have 13½ miles of track, 2,000 horses, 4,000 horse-power of cables and over 1,000 large cars. During the past year or two a syndicate organized by Mr. Holmes has secured control of the leading street-car lines of Indianapolis, Ind., St. Louis, Mo., Los Angeles, Cal., Davenport, Ia., and Rock Island and Moline, Ill.



C. B. HOLMES.

That during these years of enterprise he has accumulated a snug fortune goes without saying; and as he has always tried to please the public which patronizes his street-car lines, he has perhaps fewer enemies than any man in public life. Mr. Holmes' hobby is, as has already been stated, a Sunday-school which he organized about eleven years ago in the North division of Chicago, a portion of the city inhabited chiefly by poor foreigners. The school at the present time has over three thousand pupils, who are divided into regiments and companies and are addressed by Mr. Holmes and others every Sunday afternoon. Connected with the school is a relief bureau which does much toward relieving the necessities of the pupils, hundreds of them being supplied with clothing by the patrons of the bureau, chief among whom is Mr. Holmes. It is always a pleasure to honor an honest, self-made man, but it is not often that one finds so ample ground for praise as in this instance.

G. W. WEIPPIERT.

NOT TO BE FOOLED.

How Honest Matthew Riley Protected His Mistress' Premises.

Mrs. Hallowell was a very pretty and amiable widow, but, says the Detroit Commercial Advertiser, she had a sorrow. She had arrived at a critical period when age shows its marks upon the face, and especially in the frost it sprinkles upon the hair. She resolved to dye the latter, and for that purpose made arrangements with a certain tonsorial artist, Mr. Donovan, who, at her request, was to meet her at ten o'clock at night, to avoid observation, and, in the privacy of her own boudoir, restore her hair to a jet-black hue.

She had agreed to attend a party that night, and, of course, was anxious to have her hair-dyer prompt. At ten o'clock she was awaiting him, eager for his appearance.

The bell rang, but the hair-dresser did not present himself before her. She sent down her maid to make inquiries of Matthew Riley, the Irish footman, who also officiated as attendant at the door.

"Who was it rang?" asked Chariton, the maid.

"A blackguard," replied Matthew Riley.

"Who?" said Chariton.

"An impudent blackguard," said the footman. "Bedad, if it wasn't for fear of the police, I'd teach him better."

"What did he want?" continued the maid.

"Want, is it? Want! Sure, I'll be after telling ye, as ye'er so curious, for it's meself asked him the question," replied Riley.

"Well," said Chariton, "go on."

"'Well,' says I, 'what do you want at this time o' night, my fine fellow?' 'I'll tell your missus,' said he. 'Divil a bit,' says I, 'till ye've told me first.' 'My business is with the lady,' says he. 'It will keep warm till to-morrow, then,' says I, 'for divil an inch you'll get in till I know what you want.' 'Can you keep a saycret?' says he. 'Can a duck swim?' says I. 'Then,' that he came close to me, and says he—But, arrah, you won't believe me."

"Indeed I will," said the maid.

"'Well, then,' says he, 'I come to die hare.' 'Die hare!' says I. 'Yes,' says he. 'And where would you wish to die?' says I. 'In your missus' room,' says he. So with that I kicked him down-stairs."

"Indeed, then you have done wrong!" said Chariton, ready to die with laughing.

"But, bedad, he came back again just now," resumed Riley, "and says again, as pert as may be: 'Tell your missus I'm come to die hare.'"

"Well, and what did you say?" asked Chariton.

"What did I say!" exclaimed Matthew. "Sure I said what every honest man would."

"And what was that?" she asked.

"'Be jabers,' said I, 'ye're nothin' but an idiot, and ye'll not die hare. Go somewhere else and die, you scamp of the world! Die hare, indeed!' So, for the second time, I knocked him down the stoop, and, bedad, I'm thinking he'll niver come here again to die."

The mistake was so ridiculous that even Mrs. Hallowell laughed at it, although to her it was a serious disappointment.

BARN-STORMING DAYS.

Once during the days of his early struggles, says the Baltimore American, Booth was "barn-storming" down in Virginia at a place called Lee's Landing. The improvised theater was a tobacco warehouse, and it was crowded by the planters from miles around. Booth and his companions had arranged to take the weekly steamer expected to call late at night, and between the acts were busy packing up. The play was "The Merchant of Venice," and they were just going on for the trial scene when they heard a whistle and the manager came running in to say the steamer had arrived and would leave again in ten minutes. As that was their only chance for a week of getting away, they were in a terrible quandary. The narrative proceeds:

"If we explain matters," said the manager, "they will think they are being cheated and we shall have a free fight. The only thing is for you fellows to get up some sort of a natural-like impromptu ending of the piece, and ring down the curtain. Go right ahead, ladies and gentlemen, and take your cue from Ned here," and he hurried away to get the luggage aboard. Ned, of course, was Bassanio, and he resolved to rely on the ignorance of the Virginians of those days to pull him through all right. So, when old George Ruggles, who was doing Shylock, began to sharpen his knife on his boot, Booth walked straight up to him and solemnly said: "You are bound to have your pound of flesh, are you?"

"You bet your life!" said Ruggles.

"Now, I'll make you one more offer," continued Booth. "In addition to this big bag of ducats, I'll throw in two kegs of nigger-head terback, a shot-gun and two of the best coon dogs in the State."

"I'm blarmed if I don't do it!" responded Shylock, much to the approbation of the audience, who were tobacco-raisers and coon-hunters to a man.

When they got on board of the steamer, the captain, who had witnessed the conclusion of the play, remarked:

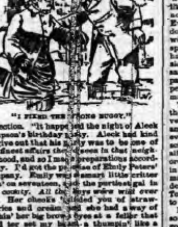
"I'd like to see the whole of that play some time, gentlemen. I'm blarmed if I thought that fellow Shakespeare had so much snap in him."

UNCLE JAKE'S JOKE.

"SPEAKIN' of jokes," said Uncle Jake, as he reluctantly pushed his empty glass away, "minds me that I used to be a powerful fond o' playin' pranks when I was a boy. When I was 'bout eighteen years old I used ter lay awake nights to study up some pro[illegible]' or nuther to git it on somebody. It done me more good to put a tack where it 'ud be set down on than it would to 've found half a dollar; and I'd go 'thout my dinner any day to get a chance to hide the hired man's hat. But I had an experience one night that changed my sentiments considerable. Allus after that whenever anybody said any thing about jokes it made me feel like I wanted to go out behind the barn and think." As a shade of melancholy flitted across the old man's face as he recalled the misfortune of that long-ago night.

"Tell us about it, Uncle Jake," urged Bronson.

"Well, it can't do no harm to tell it, as I know of," said the old man, after a moment's reflection. "It happened the night of Aleck Simpson's birthday party. Aleck had kind o' give out that his party was to be one of the finest affairs that's been in that neighborhood, and so I made preparations accordingly. I'd got the promise of Emily Peters' company. Emily was a smart little critter goin' on seventeen, and the purtiest gal in the county. All the boys were wild over her. Her cheeks 'minded you of strawberries and cream, and she had a way of flashin' her big brown eyes at a feller that used ter set my heart a thumpin' like a woodpecker hammerin' on a holler limb.



"I FIXED THE WRONG BUGGY."

"I hitched the sorrel colt up to pap's new top buggy, and I jist calculated me an' Emily 'd lay 'em all in the shade. I knowed the other fellers 'ud be jealous of me for a month to come. But we had a little spat on the way and by the time we got to the party I felt more like layin' down in the haymow than goin' in 'mongst the crowd. I could 'a stood it though if Emily hadn't got up a flirtation with Fred Gibbs, a spindle-shanked leatherhead that I despised [illegible] o' the earth, and give me to understand that she was goin' home with him.

"That jist made me red hot. I went out doors and set to work to think up some plan of revenge. By and by the thought struck me that I could get even with Fred and Emily and have a great joke on 'em at the same time by stealin' the burrs offen Fred's front buggy-wheels so's the buggy 'd tumble down with 'em on the road home, and I went right straight to tend to it. After I'd throwed the burrs over into the cow-lot I went off and laughed till I was sick, a' thinkin' how Fred and Emily 'd be piled out on the prairy and have to walk home.

"Soon as I could straighten my face up I went in and cut such a splurge among the girls that I reckon I must 'a made Emily jealous; anyway, she left Fred and kind o' made up to me. By the time we was ready to go home we was as sweet on one another as though nothin' had happened.

"The first half mile of our road was smooth as a floor, but I didn't hurry none. I told Emily the sorrel colt was young and it wouldn't do to drive him too fast, and she 'lowed I was right.

"We got along splendid till we come to a little creek we had to ford. As the wheels went down the bank there was a jolt and then a wobble, and out we went into the creek, ker-chunk. Jeminy! You could a' heard the screech Emily give as she soused into that icy water clean over into the next county. I felt like hollerin' myself, only my mouth was so full of mud and gravel I couldn't. Quick 's I could I helped Emily out. By that time we could hear the sorrel colt a-tearin' down the lane half a mile away, jist lickety-brindle; so there was nothin' left to do but walk back to Simpson's. It was along towards the latter eend of October, and our clothes froze stiff. Emily's mouth must 'a froze shet, too, I reckon, for she's never spoke to me to this day. Of course I felt awful, but for all that I couldn't help chucklin' every time I thought of the trouble that Fred and his girl had got."

"Did Fred's buggy wheels come off in the creek, too?" asked Bronson, after waiting in vain for the old man to finish his story.

"Nope. Didn't come off at all. Ye see, Fred's buggy stood right side o' mine that night; it was darker 'n a sack o' black cats, and I was in a dreadful hurry, and—well, the fact o' the matter is, I fixed the wrong buggy."

C. P. CARTER.

The Effects of Superstition.

There is a man in Washington City who says that he stood within two feet of Guiteau when he fired the fatal shots at Garfield in the Baltimore & Potomac depot. He says: "I was so startled, so fearful that my turn might accidentally come next, that I disappeared in a dazed manner and hurried home. I intended the next day to appear as one of the witnesses against him, but when I learned that the man acted irrationally and that his defense was insanity, and when I further heard that he claimed to have been providentially sent to do that terrible deed, I kept my story to myself. No witnesses were needed to prove the shooting, and I was superstitious enough to keep entirely out of the affair." Even now the gentleman mentions the matter only in confidence to a few friends.

SUCCESS IN MARRIAGE.

The Sensible Views of an Extremely Sensible Woman.

Something About the Secrets of a Perfect Home Life—The Science of Good House-Keeping—How to Bear the Unpleasant Things of Life.

On the much mooted question, "Is Marriage a Failure?" a lady writes to the Chicago Inter Ocean some remarks so sensible that we can not but quote them for the benefit of our readers:

A woman makes a failure of marriage unless she makes an effort to do a great deal more than is implied in her marriage contract. It is supposed that the husband supplies the material for the home, and they are very raw materials indeed unless the wife takes hold of those means with the hand of a creator, building up, out of them, helps and associations loved and needed by both. And a woman must put her soul into her house, or it is a hollow and sounding shell.

As high as we must rate the accomplishment of good housekeeping, it is not all in the making of a home. I know a lady who was a marked failure as a housekeeper who was the idol of her husband, and who graduated to the world a family of accomplished and honored children. And there are women who in pain and weakness are confined to their own rooms, yet who manage to hold the power in an orderly house and fill it full of love-light and happiness sufficient for the comfort of all who cross its threshold.

It is the quality of recognizing and filling need that is the essential quality of success in marriage. Practically, if a man comes home from business with a headache, hungry for a bit of sympathy and love, and a good deal of quiet, and finds his wife in a raging excitement over an elaborate dinner, and is ordered to keep out of the way and amuse the children till the great proceeding is culminated, he is about as unfortunate as the man who brings a college friend home to dinner and finds his wife in wrapper and slippers deep in a French novel. But the woman who spies the coming friend from the window slides out of her wrapper in a twinkle and appears upon the scene in due time with a soul-cheering cup of French coffee, is the woman who makes her husband envied among men.

Unfortunately women have hobbies, and ride and ride and never perceive that they are boring their companions to death. There are men who would go to war to be rid of paper flowers, hair flowers, rugs, tidies and what not; and there are men who think art and music are inventions of the evil one to make people miserable. Any one, anywhere, who cultivates a hobby at the expense of other people's comfort is making a failure of life; but true politeness of the heart between friend and friend, man and wife, will obviate the danger of overdone amusements.

It is easier to forgive virtuous excess of zeal and it is mostly excess of zeal for excellence of some kind that causes some women to be more exclusively housewives than wives of men. The greatest charity should be extended to a woman who makes her house so perfect in detail and polished in appearance that her friends go into it with fear and trembling, for she is afflicted with a virtuous zeal, and has only overdrawn a very good thing. Housekeeping has its fanatics and martyrs as well as any other good cause.

But housekeeping conducted as a means of happiness and comfort, either in a cabin or a palace, is a science that no wife can neglect if she wishes to sustain the law of mutual helpfulness in marriage.

A wife expects her husband upon marriage to begin a course of toiling for her support without remission or any suspension of responsibility, and why should he not expect her to aspire to the greatest excellence in home-making? Just here is where the wedge of dissolution frequently enters. A woman fails to give as much as she receives—that is, she works from compulsion more than from a desire to keep up her side of the partnership with dignity and grace.

But one says: "I work all the time; I work like a slave." Yes, my dear, you do work like a slave—just like a slave, and not like a responsible being seeking an end and not the means. You have braided little Eva's dress up and down and all over, which does not help little Eva, and your husband would have appreciated you more had you spent your evenings with folded hands and happy face in your rocking-chair by his side. You spend hours of time on unnecessary things and forget the essentials of your partnership, which is to evolve as much peace and comfort as possible out of your materials.

The science of good housekeeping, in these days, when we can buy so many conveniences, is not so much superiority in any one thing as a general excellence in every thing. We do not need cooking schools for girls so much as schools where all branches of home-making are taught, in order to preserve the balance of usefulness in the girl's mind. A man does not want to marry a chef de cuisine, and it is no wonder the papers make fun of cooking-schools. To learn one department of housekeeping to the neglect of every thing else is ruinous.

If a woman is to marry, there is nothing so much to be valued as good health and good sense and a very loving heart, and then it will follow that she will adapt herself to the calls upon her ability. When a woman marries for a life of ease and doesn't get it, there is certainly no remedy in her case so long as she forgets that life is a struggle anywhere, and feels that she should be excused from helping to carry the burdens of those by whom she may be surrounded.

The mutual bearance and forbearance of life is as greatly the secret of happiness in marriage as in any thing else. We have to tolerate unpleasant things in our companions in any relations of life, and why try to build up a law of marriage in any other way?

Wild Hogs in Florida.

Speaking of the wild hogs of Florida, a correspondent of the Providence Journal says: "The hogs are the fiercest creatures in the woods of Florida, and when assailed boldly attack any thing from a cougar to an alligator. They display none of the fear of the species which their domestic congeners do, and, though they avoid human presence as much as possible, yet they will not hesitate a moment to charge him on dry land, and the probability is that not a shred of him, except the hide and skull, is visible half an hour afterward. They are by far the most dangerous foe a hunter can encounter in the wilderness, because, if he takes to a tree, they are sure to range themselves around its base and remain there for hours, or until compelled by hunger to start in search of provision. Even then the old tuskers seem loath to leave, and grunt their rage and champ their foaming jaws at the fugitive, while their malicious little eyes fairly snap with expressions of ferocity."

SIRES AND SONS.

Some people are disposed to call in question the authenticity of the declaration that the public men of this country a century ago possessed and practised virtues superior to those of the present time.

The men of '76, like the men of this and every other age, no doubt had weak points and personal faults, but to even insinuate that they were unscrupulous political schemers, and not incorruptible patriots, is doing violence to the facts of history.

The founders of the Republic, known as the United States of America, were the honorable of earth, because honesty of action swayed their life-work, fidelity to right principles was their governing impulse, and the public good, not selfish self interest, the haven of their ambition.

Modern political profligacy was to them unknown.

Let us for example call by name a few of those illustrious national founders who were prominently instrumental in rearing our glorious temple of American Freedom—Washington, Hancock, Jefferson, Franklin, Hamilton, Morris, Roger Sherman, John Adams, Samuel Adams and Patrick Henry.

An immortal array of patriots, to which many other coadjutors might justly be added.

They were the builders of the Republic. No obstacles diverted them from the pathway of integrity, nothing in the World could induce them to exchange justice for expediency, or to barter principles for a miserable mess of political pottage.

Country first was their motto.

The entire gold of the British realm multiplied four-fold, could not have purchased the honor and honesty of a single one of them.

Would that their grand example were now the ruling power in American politics.

If so, political sentiment would be something weightier than empty profession, principles would be held as sacred as life and never for a moment be allowed to trail in the dust by any party for any purpose, and the corrupting use of money in elections and legislative halls would be properly denounced and punished as treason against free representative government, to establish which the American Revolution was waged and won and the American Constitution ordained.

The nineteenth century has witnessed divers changes, and doubtless, much advancement, but to our discredit as a people the standard of political morality does not stand erect as the men of '76 planted it.

Rescue and Rehabilitate?

A $8,000 School For Dunellen.

A large and harmonious meeting of the voters of that School District, was held in Dunellen, last evening. I. D. Titsworth was chosen chairman, and the Rev. L. E. Livermore, clerk.

After a short consideration of the subject, a resolution was adopted by a large majority to bond the District for $8,000 with which to build a new school house on the North side of the railroad, at Dunellen. There are now 200 scholars in the District, and only school accommodations for 120.

Prayer for the Amendment of Pennsylvania's Constitution.

To the Editor of The Press:—By request of our State President of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Mrs. E. J. C. Dymes, we will hold a prayer meeting, Thursday, June 13, at 4 P. M. in the W. C. T. U. rooms, praying earnestly that Pennsylvania may be successful in carrying the constitutional amendment the 18th of June. Every one is invited. Let all come filled with the Holy Spirit. Let the noon hour make this the subject of prayer.

A New Bridge For Grant Avenue and $500 For Macadamizing.

At the meeting of the Union County Board of Freeholders, Thursday afternoon, $500 was appropriated from this year's tax levy, to charity hospitals. This appropriation is under a new law, and the amount designated will be divided between the Elizabeth general hospital and the Muhlenberg hospital of this city.

Mr. Vanderbeek offered a resolution which was adopted, fixing the width of the pavement of roads designated as county roads, at sixteen feet wherever practicable.

The committee on the Grant avenue bridge, near Codman's mill, were authorized to have constructed an iron bridge not to exceed $1,000 to this county.

"We Told You So!"

(From the issue of Saturday.)

"We expect the hearty co-operation of all our people." "We propose that the concert take place next Tuesday evening." "We will endeavor to have the programme ready to publish Monday, if Messrs. McCutchen and Pierson can prepare it by that time."

(From The Press of Monday.)

"THE PRESS does not believe there will be any concert given in Music Hall, like is "proposed" by the news. The people are doing all they can in other ways for the Johnstown sufferers, and besides the source from which the scheme was started is solely for self glorification, nips it in the bud."

(From the issue of Monday.)

"It is thought best to hold in reserve for future developments the project for an entertainment to aid still further the Johnstown sufferers."

—The First Presbyterian church collection Sunday for the Johnstown sufferers amounted to $78.

CITY COUNCIL MEETING.

Considerable Discussion on the Water Works and Sewerage Subject, But no Definite Action Taken—Adjournment Until the 21st Instant.

An adjourned regular meeting of the City Council was held Monday, with all the members present but Mr. Watson. The main object of the meeting was to consider the Water Works and Sewerage question, but further action on the subject was deferred until Friday, June 21, to which time the meeting was adjourned.

The President called the members to order at 8:35 o'clock, and the reading of the minutes and the regular order of business was suspended, so as to allow the Committee on Water, Printing and Stationery an opportunity to report.

Mr. Newhall, as chairman of said committee stated that Engineer Rudolph Hering of New York had prepared forms for advertising for proposals, and also general specifications under which the Water Works firms could bid, both of which the Clerk read. The latter document was lengthy, and was about the same in substance as Engineer Bassett of Newark reported two years ago, and related in full in this paper at the time. Space will not permit us to enter into further detail.

The same Councilman introduced a set of resolutions, providing first: That the above document relating to general specifications, etc., be referred back to the committee for revision, after which one hundred copies of the same be printed for distribution among the corporations and firms who they want to bid; second, that proposals be advertised in two trades papers, said papers to be designated by the committee; third, that an extra amount not to exceed $300 be expended to carry out the provisions contained in the resolutions. No action was taken on the resolution, but it brought forth considerable discussion.

Mr. Marsh unhesitatingly stated that he was disappointed at the Engineer's report. He thought that inasmuch as the Council had expended $500 a couple of years ago to have Engineer Bassett of Newark make a report, and now that Engineer Herring had revised the report, in his opinion it should have been more in detail, before soliciting bids. He said the fact was a well-established fact that the Council cannot grant a sewerage franchise to a foreign corporation, and he thought it unfair to ask the several companies to bid for that work.

Mr. Marsh made a motion, which did not prevail, referring the Engineer's report back to the committee, and to have those portions of it relating to sewerage and obtaining a source of supply of water from the Passaic river, stricken out. He further recommended more details as to size of pipes to be used, and also as to what territory in the city the system would benefit.

Mr. Newhall stated that after the next session of the Legislature the city would probably have the power to grant a franchise for sewerage to an outside party; according to Engineer Herring's report he said the bidders could either bid for one or both of the franchises, as in their judgment they see fit. He thought that water pure and wholesome, could be drawn from the Passaic River, but the Committee did not recommend this source for supply.

Mr. Dunham said he was in favor of both Water Works and Sewerage, and wanted to be so recorded.

Mr. Squires took the chair and the President stated that he had always been under the impression that sewerage was first needed in Plainfield. Mr. Dumont said that he was also disappointed in Engineer Herring's report; he wanted an opportunity to examine it carefully, and expressed himself as not ready to vote on the question that night.

After some further discussion the matter was laid over until Friday of next week.

Council then adjourned.

THE HUNDRED MILE BICYCLE RUN.

The second annual great "Century Run" from Orange to Philadelphia, took place on Saturday last. The start was made at 4:20 A. M., under command of Capt. L. A. Clarke of Flushing, L. I., with 79 men and two ladies—one on a lady's safety bicycle, the other on a tandem tricycle, accompanied by her brother, Mr. Welsh, of Washington, Pa.

On arrival here the Plainfield Club could only furnish two cyclers to accompany the Century men on their trip—Capt. F. L. C. Martin and W. H. Millison—but contributed liberally of sandwiches and milk, which greatly refreshed the hungry cyclers. It seems a shame that a club the size of the Plainfield Bicycle Club could not furnish more men to take the run—only two out of sixty.

At 7:30 the cyclers started under command of Capt. F. L. C. Martin through Dunellen, New Market, and New Brunswick, where a short rest was taken. The lady on the "Safety" was there forced to discontinue her ride on account of a fall, which damaged the wheel. The next stop was made at Kingston, where the cyclers ate everything in the hotel from raw eggs to rice pudding, after which raids were made on the grocery stores and everything eatable was purchased and eaten. (Late despatches from scene of carnage state that a famine is imminent.)

From there to Princeton the roads were vile. At Princeton a stop was made to enable stragglers to catch up, and there several amateur photographers endeavored to "do" the cyclers, but without success. Trenton was reached at 2 P. M. where all did justice to a big dinner at the Trenton House, after which the cyclers adjourned to the State House porch and had their "phiz" taken after a great effort by two photographers. Several members of the Trenton Club accompanied the riders as far as Bristol, where Capt. Martin again took command, as the Captain of the Trenton Club was unable to go through to Philadelphia.

At Holmesburgh, which is eight miles from Philadelphia, about 75 wheelmen from various places met the cyclers and escorted them through Frankfort to Philadelphia, which was reached about 7:30 P. M. Out of 69 who started, 52 rode through all right, including Miss Welsh and the Philadelphia club representatives. On arrival at Philadelphia the wheels were stored in the Century Wheelmen's large club house. At 10 o'clock supper was eaten at the Continental Hotel and quite late all retired, well satisfied with their ride. In the morning a large party went out on the Pike, escorted by the Century club. In the afternoon the visitors were the guests of the Pennsylvania Club, who took them through the Park, visiting the Memorial and Horticultural Halls, after which dinner was eaten at the Belmont Mansion in the Park.

A finer class of men than the Pennsylvania Club is composed of, is not to be found in the country, as the cyclers well know, having been their guests before. At 3:30 P. M., Sunday, the larger part of the "Century" returned on a special train, but on account of numerous engagements some of them were unable to return until a later train, reaching home about eight o'clock.

Young Folks in a [illegible].

Mrs. Wm. de F. Curtis of Rock View avenue, entertained a number of the young friends of her daughter and son, Friday afternoon. Among the enjoyments was a pleasant [illegible] under the [illegible]. The young party consisted of Miss Frances and Neil Curtis, Miss Fanny and Louise [illegible], the Misses Dobbs, Gove and Boone, [illegible], Miss Marion Henderson, Miss Edith Clapp, Miss Dorothy Waite, and Miss [illegible] and Belle Milne.

Death of an Estimable Lady.

At her home on East Fifth street, about five o'clock Sunday morning, occurred the death of Sarah J., the estimable wife of Mr. Henry VanName, in the forty-sixth year of her age. The deceased was in town the night before, apparently enjoying good health. While on the street she was stricken speechless, but was able to walk home. At eleven o'clock she became unconscious, and died, as above stated, at five o'clock Sunday morning from paralysis. A husband and one son survive her.

Children's Day at Trinity Reformed Church.

There was no special programme arranged for the Children's Day exercises in Trinity Reformed church, Sunday, but a special choir, consisting of Miss Emma C. King, soprano; Miss Fanny Mattison, alto; Mr H. J. Martin, tenor, and Mr. Robert Gorton basso, rendered delightful music, accompanied by Mr. A. L. Titsworth on the organ. The floral decorations were arranged by a committee of young ladies from the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the church. The programme included prayer by the pastor, singing by the choir and school, a scripture lesson by the Superintendent, Mr. E. E. Anthony, a duett "Magdelene," by Miss King and Miss Mattison, reading of the Secretary's report by Mr. Elias Bird and addresses by pastor and Superintendent.

In the evening the pastor preached with reference to the Johnstown disaster, taking for his text Jeremiah 47:2. The preacher said that the words of Jeremiah found in the text were truthfully illustrated by the recent flood. He pointed out and clearly illustrated these lessons: First, the uncertainty of life; second, the uncertainty of earthly possessions; third, the weakness of man in the presence of the forces of water. Other lessons taught by the flood, he said, are: That a single human life is of more value than a thousand useless lakes, and that warnings unheeded become warnings unobeyed. The pastor's final reflection proved the universal brotherhood of mankind, showing that the American spirit is superior to disaster.

The evening collection, amounting to the handsome sum of $175.60, was contributed to the Johnstown sufferers.

The choir again favored the large congregation present with two very fine selections—"Great is the Lord," and "Saviour breathe an evening Blessing." Both were creditably rendered.

A WRANGLE AND THE RESULT.

Probably the largest and most exciting school meeting that has ever taken place within the precincts of North Plainfield, occurred Tuesday night, when fully five hundred men, mostly voters, assembled in the basement of the public school building on Somerset street, in response to a call by the trustees for a special meeting in School District No. 28, to decide upon an appropriation for erecting a new school building, $20,000 being the amount asked for in the call. Long before the hour announced for beginning the meeting, groups of men congregated in the basement of the school and in the yard adjoining, and discussed the situation. To the casual observer it was evident that there was more than one axe to grind; the wealthy and influential residents of Washington Park, jostled together with the strong and sturdy laborer, but all were good natured—at this time. Later developments, however, caused a "tempest in the tea pot," and on several occasions the chairman was obliged to throw oil on the troubled waters by rapping for order, or declaring some of those who took part in the discussion out of order. There were no ladies present.

It was whispered about that certain individuals had engaged Mr. Jesse Oakley to draw up plans for an addition to the present school building, at a cost of about $5,000, while it was understood that Architect Teale had drawn up another set of plans for the trustees for the erection of a new building on the Vine street front of the school premises, at an estimated cost of about $15,000. Hence the difficulty. Mr. H. K. Carroll called the meeting to order, and Hon. Chas. Place was elected chairman. Mr. Geo. F. Brown was elected secretary. The latter read the call.

Dr. Carroll, President of the Board of Trustees stated the reasons for calling the meeting. He also read from the school law, defining the power and duty of the trustees, and also the duty of the inhabitants. He said he thought the former vote was due to misapprehension. Dr. Carroll said certain criticisms had been made, among them that the taxes would be increased; also that pupils from Plainfield were crowding out the North Plainfield scholars, and that the tuition fees were being squandered. Again he said the trustees had been accused of engaging an architect. The trustees, Dr. Carroll said, favored the erection of a three story building on another lot, but it was evident that the people, or a majority of them, were not in favor of that. The actual accommodations in the school is for 536, but since the school opened in September 737 children have applied for admission. The Doctor maintained that there was no assembly room or hall in which the 25 pupils could be graduated next week, and that it was highly essential to have a new building. The average enrollment is 599. On the upper floor of the present school building there are desks for 248 scholars and the total number registered is 242. In the intermediate department the actual desk accommodation is 204, and the number of pupils registered is 447. In Miss Ginn's class there are 46 desks and 149 pupils, consequently one-half day sessions are held.

Dr. Carroll said further that on their own responsibility the trustees had engaged an architect to draw up plans for a new building, and all the builders in both Plainfield and North Plainfield had been asked to bid on the same. Sealed estimates were received and opened today, and it was found that the building could be erected, furnished and heated for about $15,000. He submitted a set of resolutions, which the Clerk read.

They provided for the expenditure of $15,000 for the purposes above named, and also for the issue of bonds, in denominations of $500 each and to bear interest not to exceed 4½ per cent., said bonds to be numbered from one to thirty respectively, with coupons payable yearly in sums ranging from $500 to $2,500; also that each year a tax be levied to pay the bonds maturing together with the interest.

Mr. E. St. John seconded the resolutions after an amendment to the effect that the sum not exceed $15,000.

A long and spirited discussion followed during which Mr. E. C. Morse and others insisted upon knowing the name of the architect. The chair decided that this was not necessary, whereupon Mr. Morse moved to indefinitely postpone action on the resolutions. He was declared out of order. "Is this gag law?" shouted a voice. The discussion continued, Mayor Cooley and Messrs Woolston, Buckle, Loomis, Munger and others speaking in support of the resolutions, while others expressed their disapproval. For an hour or so the wrangle continued, and finally Mr. John A. Thickstun made a motion to proceed and ballot on the first resolution, authorizing the expenditure of $15,000. The motion prevailed. The chair appointed Messrs. Munger, Loomis and Woolston as tellers and the balloting began. The vote resulted as follows:

Whole vote.......................294
For the appropriation..............[illegible]
Against the appropriation..........[illegible]

The chair announced the result, and the meeting broke up with great excitement.

THE REGULAR JUNE MEETING.

Willow Avenue Will Probably be Macadamized—Claims Ordered Paid—A Fire Company Organized With Four Members—Resolutions [illegible] Through, and Other Details.

The Borough Council met in regular session, last Friday, with all the members present but Mr. Bettman. As usual a large amount of business was transacted, which consisted principally of the introduction and adoption of resolutions.

Mayor Cooley called the meeting to order at 8:15 o'clock, and after the roll call the minutes were read and approved.

Councilman Bettman, through Clerk Arnold, asked for permission to withdraw the petition sent in by Willow avenue residents at the last meeting, and instead submitted another petition, bearing on the matter of macadamizing that thoroughfare from Washington avenue to a point known as the farm line between the property of Messrs White and Tappen. The request was allowed.

A petition was received, asking for a crosswalk at the intersection of Orchard place and Willow avenue. Granted by resolution later.

Mr. J. R. VanDeventer, in a communication, called attention to the wretched condition of a certain portion of Clinton avenue, known as the extension to Green Brook. Referred to the Street Committee.

Sundry applications for cartmen and peddlers' licenses, were presented, referred, and subsequently granted.

The monthly reports of the Treasurer and Clerk were received and filed. The former reported a total of $70.80 collected in taxes during the month. Clerk Arnold reported a collection of $64.50 for licenses, etc., during the month.

Claims were presented, referred for certification and ordered paid by warrant as follows: C. Mundy, $1.30; J. Hardy, $26.62; A. M. Griffin, $12.75; A. C. Johnson, $9.94; John Schenck, $66.20 and $7.45; H. C. Marshall, $272.25; N. Y. and N. J. Globe Gaslight Co., $267.88 and $267.88; Plainfield Steam Carpet Co., $7.72; J. J. Heideloff, $7.01; W. L. Force & Bro., $34.80 and $9; T. MacDonald, $38.75; N. B. Smalley, $9.73; Wm. Krewson, $2.25; W. A. Pangborn, $6.25.

Mr. McGee from the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee, made a fragmentary report. He said that $1,500 had been borrowed, in accordance with the Council's action at the last meeting, for street lighting purposes. The Committee also reported favorably upon the petition for an extra lamp on Duer street; Mr. McGee further submitted a communication from Chief Horace J. Martin, in which the latter reported the department apparatus in good working order. The engine, the Chief stated, had been repaired, and was now ready in case of emergency; a new shed has been built in the rear of the engine house, for the storage of hose, etc., and a new lock has been placed on the entrance door to the engine house. The Chief recommended the formation of a new fire company; also the building of a partition between the engine room and the stalls, and the appointment of a janitor. The report was received.

Mr. Emmons from the License and Marshal Committee reported that the Borough lockup was inadequate to meet the demand. He also stated that the Marshals had complained of the interference on the part of citizens in the discharge of official duties. Later in the evening, by resolutions adopted, the proper committees were authorized to have an extra cell built in the lockup, and also to procure twelve badges, twelve keys to lockup and twelve pairs of nippers for the special marshals—Mr. Smalley voting "no" on the resolutions.

The Street Committee reported that Grove street and Green Brook road had been turnpiked at a cost of about $65; about $100 more will be required on Green Brook road; the cost of macadamizing Westervelt avenue was $582.26, and the cost for similar work on Jackson avenue, the committee reported, would be about $900. The committee further reported the purchase of a roller; and stated that the cost of grading Willow avenue would be in the neighborhood of $200. The report was received.

Mr. Needham from the Supply Committee reported the purchase from Warren Engine Company of the furniture in the Council Chamber for $90. The total expense of fitting up the room, including papering the walls and kalsomining the ceiling, footed up to $127.72. Report received and filed.

RESOLUTIONS BY THE WHOLESALE.

Here's where the resolutions poured in by the wholesale, and except where otherwise mentioned they were adopted:

By Mr. McGee, authorizing the Mayor and Clerk to draw a warrant for $87.50 to meet interest about to fall due on fire department bonds.

By Mr. Emmons, appointing "Al." Smalley a special Marshal.

By Mr. McGee, requesting the Collector to give bonds in the sum of $10,000 for the faithful performance of his duties.

By Mr. Smalley, that the Street Committee negotiate a loan of $800 for use on the streets.

Mr. Smalley acknowledged the receipt of a $300 check from Jackson avenue residents in part payment for macadamizing that thoroughfare. It was ordered turned over to the Collector.

The Auditing Committee reported the claims correct, and they were ordered paid by warrant.

The Collector's bond was read. It contained the names of H. N. Spencer, I. Brokaw, W. C. Smith and C. C. Day, and was referred to the Committee on Laws and Ordinances.

MORE RESOLUTIONS.

By Mr. Smalley, ratifying the action of the Mayor and Clerk in drawing certain warrants for money spent on the roads. Adopted.

By Mr. Smalley, that the Mayor and Clerk draw the weekly pay rolls for street work, and report the same at each subsequent meeting. Adopted.

By Mr. Buckle, authorizing the Street Commissioner to lay a stone crosswalk at the intersection of Grove street and Park place. Adopted.

By Mr. McGee, appointing H. J. Martin, J. D. Anderson, Geo. H. Fairchild and H. J. Wilson, as members of the Borough Fire Department, and to take charge of the department apparatus. Adopted. Thus a nucleus has been formed toward the organization of a fire company.

Mr. Smalley made a report on the Willow avenue petition. He said that when the work is completed on Somerset street, about $6,500 will have been expended for street work, out of the total appropriation of $8,000. The committee did not recommend proceeding with the work. The committee reported that the cost of macadamizing certain streets in the Borough had exceeded their estimate.

Mr. McGee said the committee was prejudiced and would not go ahead with the work. What was needed, he said, was a financial exhibit of the money thus far expended and the Council could then act intelligently on the matter.

An ordinance introduced by the Mayor, amending the hawker and vender's ordinance was read twice and laid over. The remainder of the session consisted of the introduction of resolutions as follows:

By Mr. McGee, fixing the compensation of Chief Martin of the Fire Department at $100 for the year ending April 15, 1890. Adopted, Mr. Smalley voting "no."

By Mr. Emmons, that the Street Committee ascertain the amount of money left for work on the streets, and that if in their judgment there was enough to complete the work, then the Council shall authorize the committee to proceed with the work of macadamizing Willow avenue. Adopted.

By Mr. Smalley, that the Printing Committee have notices printed, to notify property owners to trim their trees. Adopted.

By the same Councilman, that the money in the hands of the Clerk be transferred to the Collector. Lost.

Council then adjourned.

Opened for the Season.

The Editor's fruit basket has been opened for the season, and its first contents were the present of a handsome box of "Compton's Favorite" strawberries from Mr. Halsey Compton of West Front street. About 25 of these large delicious berries filled a quart basket, and their flavor was most excellent. We are now waiting for somebody to beat this record.

HARKINS' OCCUPATION GONE.

The Plainfield Ponies [illegible] the Somerville [illegible].

Did you hear something drop in the direction of Somerville, Saturday afternoon? It was the bursted bubble of Harkins' reputation.

Did you see the homing pigeons circling through the air? They were the birds that carried the news to THE PRESS office where in bulletins it was announced to the cheering crowds.

Did you hear the drums and fifes that played a song of victory in the evening through the streets? They led the march of the rejoicing Y. M. C. A., nine and their score of admirers armed with brooms and canes, swelling with pride and exclaiming in shouts of glory.

The "Crescents" of Plainfield, had played its first game of the season with the "West Ends" of Somerville, and had defeated them with ease and something to spare. As the clock struck five-thirty, last Saturday, a cloud of dust rose up from the home plate on the Somerville ball grounds, out of which Demarest was seen to eventually emerge covered with dust and respiration, the winning run in his grip and victory written all over his dirty countenance.

A hurried but a mighty yell went out from the throats of the two hundred Plainfielders as they started for the last train that connects the jumping-off town with the World until they send the evening's milk to market. The inning was not finished. There was only one out—McLaughlin had reached third, Haydon was on second, and Lee and McMurray were coming along with liners to bring them in and to score themselves—but the game was won, and that was glory enough for one day.

Last year the Plainfield players were terrorized in the beginning of the season by Harkins, and never recovered. He made them believe that he would drive the ball through their ribs if they did not stand back from the plate, and every time he pitched a good ball he would shout "look out," and grin as the batter jumped a foot. McCutchen and most of the other players, could not be hired to stand near enough to reach the ball with a wagon-tongue.

Saturday, in the beginning, traces of this same ridiculous nervousness betrayed their existence. But they were not permanent, only shadows of the past, and before the game was over disappeared altogether never to return. In the last four innings the Plainfield ponies seemed to hit the big and rattled Harkins, as they pleased. This with their faultless fielding won them a deserved and creditable victory.

The 2:04 and the 2:30 trains from this city, carried between two and three hundred Plainfielders to Somerville, where they took possession of the grand stand. They stamped the floor out of it and raised its roof before they left. Even during the temporary lead that the West Ends were permitted to enjoy for a short hour, the confidence of the Plainfield contingent was not lessened nor their deafening cheers abated.

As the last half of the ninth inning opened with the Crescents four runs short of victory, the grand stand held its breath for the first time. But when McMurray stepped to the plate and soaked one of Steb Harkins favorite deceivers for a base, and Townley and Gately also reached first in safety, the Plainfielders knew that the Crescents were about to jump on the West Ends with both feet, and they jumped on the grand stand in accordance. The bases were filled, no one was out, and Demarest was at the bat. He had just run around as far as third for McMurray, and if he could get around again the game was won.

Bowman, Kelly, Conklin and Harkins himself, however, had all fallen victims to Demarest's long reach in centre field. Hits of theirs good for two bases apiece, he had pulled down out of the sky during the game and saved six possible runs for Somerville. So Harkins proposed to strike Demarest out, and drove some of his hottest teasers past the batter. But Harkins' occupation had gone. He stood in the box a busted bugaboo, so far as Plainfield was concerned, and when Demarest reached out and lined the ball down into the field for two bases, bringing in McMurray and Townley, the wind was driven entirely out of Steb's bubble reputation, and it collapsed beside the rattled pitcher. Demarest subsequently stole home, and the game was won.

The umpires were, W. Cadmus, on bases, and Bradley, on strikes and balls. The former is engaged by the West Ends as their umpire, for the season, and the latter is a great friend of Bowman's. Mack was on hand, but courteously withdrew when he understood the Crescents would not play under his decisions. Bradley was but little improvement, however. He was either intentionally partial to the West Ends, or afraid of them. He called strikes on Lee, Condon and others, that were way above their chins. But his worst decision was when Harkins fouled out to Haydon, and he declared the ball touched the back-stop. This so pleased the big pitcher that he knocked the ball over left field fence for three bases, and the West Ends made four runs in the inning. Cadmus was strictly fair, as he always is, and refused to budge although the Somervilles kicked and threatened, and stopped playing a half-dozen times when they found they were gone.

Every man of the Crescents played his very best. Haydon, the cute catcher, was nervous in the beginning from an over anxious desire to please, but he proved a fine catcher and will be among the leaders at the bat. Gately did better than most amateur pitchers could have done against such heavy weight professionals as Kelly, Harkins and Bowman, and some of the others. His support in the field was faultless, twelve fly catches being credited to the Crescents—Demarest 4, Lee 2, Gately 2, Townley, McMurray, Dilts and Condon one each.

Dilts at short had four chances and took advantage of three; but the fourth bounded over his head, letting Harkins and Bergen in, while Conklin made two bases and subsequently scored. But at the bat Dilts' carelessness might have lost the game. Twice when he struck out and the catcher had dropped the ball, he made no effort to go to first. Whereas if he had run at one time it would have let Haydon in from third, and at another time he would have made his first as Conklin muffed the thrown ball.

Lee had not much to do in the field, but he did it well, while McMurray and Condon played together and individually, as fine as silk. They missed no chances. Twice when McMurray had to leave first base to chase a batted ball, Condon covered the bag in time to put the batter out. Once when a high foul spinning in the air twisted itself out of McMurray's hand, he caught and held it in his arms while the 2nd grand stand almost fell apart under the applause.

A handsome boquet was presented during the game by Mr. Peter Winn, who looks after the Crescents' grounds and paraphernalia, to Pitcher Gately for making the first run of the game.

The following was the score:

Charity Never Ceaseth.

THE PRESS handed one hundred dollars more Tuesday to Councilman J. K. Myers, to add to the fund for the relief of the sufferers in Johnstown and its vicinity. This amount was the single subscription of Mrs. Matilda Duryea of this city.

Saved on a Raft.

E. C. Baynon, brother of C. Arthur Baynon of LaGrande avenue, returned from Johnstown, last Friday, where he has been in search of a missing brother who was in business in that ill fated city.

He did not find his brother, but learned of his safety through a woman who escaped with him on a raft made after the water had reached the top of the house where they were living. The entire family of the house where Mr. Baynon was, were saved on the one raft.

Six Speakers at Reform Hall.

The midweek meetings held in Reform Hall under the auspices of the Reform Club, are very interesting occasions and growing in favor. That of last Thursday was especially so, appropriate remarks being made by Mrs. Angleman, Mr. Vroom of Somerville, and Messrs Markley, Angleman, Neise and Opdyke. Vice President Harper presided, and Mrs. King led the singing. The regular monthly business of the Club was postponed until Thursday evening of next week.

A Victim of Many Fires.

The barn of John Wendell, near Mount Bethel, was struck by lightning, Wednesday, June 5, and burned to the ground. The building was a total loss together with its contents, farming implements, etc., all of which were covered by insurance in Mr. Wm. Woodruff's agency in this city, for $1,000.

A short time ago Mr. Wendell's house was struck by lightning and almost consumed. Wednesday morning he was awakened by the storm and got out in time to save his horses that were in the barn. It is only a few months since his wagonhouse caught fire and was burned down.

She Was Alive.

A good story is told concerning one of Plainfield's gallant fire laddies. It appears that the gentleman in question went to New York recently, and by appointment visited the Eden Museo, where he met a friend from this city. The two entered the building together. The policeman at the door was passed without comment, although the admission ticket was tendered to him, but in the passageway leading to the "Chamber of Horrors" stood a beautiful woman, motionless. The fireman stood for a moment admiring the female and then remarked to his friend: "If I didn't know that was wax, I'd swear she was living." The woman turned and smiled pleasantly. Exit fireman and his friend.

A Thrilling Experience.

Two Newark peddlers had a thrilling experience in North Plainfield on Tuesday of last week. They were about town all day peddling strawberries, and at night they had three crates left. The men drove into North Plainfield on the outskirts of Washington Park, where they laid down and went to sleep, allowing the horse to graze by the roadside.

During the night a thunder shower came up, and during its progress a lightning bolt struck a telegraph pole but a few feet from them. The horse was knocked down and the men were prostrated. When they recovered from the shock the horse was driven under the shed in the rear of the Farmers' Hotel on Somerset street, where the men related their experience to Officer Grant and others.

SATURDAY'S TROTTING.

Decoration Day was the time set for formally inaugurating the trotting season on the track of the Gentlemen's Driving Park Association in this city, but on account of the rain the formal opening was put off until Saturday afternoon last. This year's trotting contests, it is expected, will be the most exciting that have ever taken place on the track. The Association includes many new members, and new horses will be put on the turf. The track, too, is in an excellent condition, since Mr. C. C. Brown, an experienced trainer, has been placed in charge of it.

The judges on Saturday were: Messrs N. Robbins, Wm. Van Syckle and M. Quinn. In the first race, between John Hayes' "Andy" and John Osborn's black colt, the former won two straight heats in 2.58 and 2.55 respectively.

In the second race between Nate Robbins' black horse and Geo. B. Tuscomb's "Harry," the former won the first heat in 2:57 and the latter the second heat in 2.56. The concluding heat in this race will be trotted on Saturday next.

Mr. O. T. Waring speeded his horse "Copeland" to road wagon at the rate of a quarter in 38 seconds, and Wm. Van Syckle's "Sag Wah" trotted an exhibition half-mile in 1.22. Mr. A. C. Vail was also on the track with "Betsy Bobbit," but did not take part in the races.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE OF MAILS.

NEW YORK MAILS.

[illegible]

W. L. FORCE, Postmaster.

—At the morning service in Trinity Reformed church, Sunday, two infants were baptized.

—Unity Lodge, K. of P., of this city, has contributed twenty-five dollars to the Johnstown sufferers.

—There were no street lamps burning in North Plainfield, Friday evening, and travelling on foot was extremely difficult.

—Dr. Kimball, the chiropodist, is still receiving patients at the City Hotel, where he will remove corns, bunions, etc., without pain.

—The Seventh Day Baptist church sent $100 worth of clothing, Friday—three boxes to Johnstown and one box to Williamsport.

—The contributions of Plainfield's people to the sufferers of the late Pennsylvania flood, has exceeded two thousand in cash and still increasing.

—The Crescents will play the Montclairs, Saturday. The battery of the home team will probably be Condon pitcher and George Calhoun, catcher.

—Mr. J. K. Myers, Treasurer of the Plainfield Relief Fund, Tuesday forwarded three barrels of clothing to Clara Barton, "Red Cross," Johnstown, Pa.

—Packages or bundles sent to Relief Association rooms, Second street and Madison avenue, will be forwarded to the Johnstown sufferers. [illegible], Secretary.

—The annual strawberry festival of the Holy Cross church will be held in the school building, next Thursday afternoon and evening. The proceeds will be devoted to the school library.

—A man named [illegible], laid down to repose on the railroad track near the Park avenue bridge on Sunday evening, and Officer Glenn roused him before he was decapitated. Yesterday the man was fined five dollars.

—The service in the Park avenue Baptist church, Sunday morning, was more than usually interesting. The Sunday school joined with the church in rendering a special service arranged by the Baptist Publication Society.

—Messrs. Church, Demarest, Berry and Bennett of Craig place, have started a movement which we trust the Borough Council will compel other property owners to follow, and that is the work of trimming the trees.

—Judge Magie has granted an order for the presentation of a petition from citizens of North Plainfield, asking for an increase of the liquor license fee in that township to $700, and named Monday, June 17, as the time to hear the petition.

—While Mr. Harry Campbell was driving along Park avenue in the vicinity of the Park Avenue Baptist church, about six o'clock on Saturday evening, his horse became frightened and ran away. Mr. Campbell was thrown out and injured about the head and body. Dr. J. T. Pettit dressed the wounds.

—The bill of general specification for water-works and sewerage system, which was read to the Common Council Monday evening, is printing and will be furnished to members of the Common Council. Copies also will be furnished to any citizen of Plainfield making application to the Chairman of the Committee on water, printing and stationery.

Scotch Plains Needs Another Example.

Probably nothing but a dose of county jail will serve to teach a lesson to the young men who have recently been making themselves such a nuisance to the residents of Scotch Plains. A few nights ago their actions were particularly obnoxious and a complaint was sworn against them before Justice Kyte. It is not long since a term in prison was given two of the same kind for like behavior.

The Y Reception.

The reception held by the Y's in the school building at Lagrande avenue and Washington street, last evening, was well attended, and very enjoyable. Each member was privileged to invite as many of her friends as pleased her, and the company was a good one.

The Committee on Entertainment were: Miss Florence Potter, Miss Adelaide McGee. The programme included a vocal solo by Mrs. D. E. Titsworth; a violin solo by Mr. Clifford McGee, with piano accompaniment by Miss McGee; recitations by Miss Lulu Lewis, and instrumental solos by Miss Edith Fish, of New York.

She Walked From Newark.

A well-dressed woman, walked into Councilman Dunham's office Tuesday and told a pitiful story. She said that she walked from Newark Monday in the broiling sun, having been deserted there by her husband. She was penniless, and was on her way to Philadelphia where her parents reside. The woman said she slept under a tree that night. Chief Carey, Officer Lynch and Councilman Dunham listened attentively to her story, and promptly made up a purse for the unfortunate woman. She was provided with breakfast, and her passage was paid to Philadelphia, for all of which she seemed very grateful.

The Young People's League of the First Baptist church have undertaken the commendable work of securing funds for the purchase of a new church organ, at a cost not to exceed [illegible]. This was decided upon at a meeting of the League, held in the church Monday, at which Mrs. S. Joseph presided. The League resolved itself into a committee of the whole with Mr. L. [illegible] Bigelow, Jr., as chairman, and thoroughly discussed the subject. The League will probably arrange a concert or some other entertainment for the benefit of the organ fund. The new instrument will be in position on or before October 1, [illegible].

Good Work by the Royal Arcanum.

Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum, held a regular meeting Monday, and installed [illegible] J. Leonard as treasurer. A communication was read from the Grand [illegible] of the Order, stating that two lodges [illegible] near Johnstown, Pa., consisting of about [illegible] suffered from the recent flood there. Already the bodies of [illegible] of the members have been recovered and fully identified. Probably [illegible] of the whole number perished. A committee was appointed to ascertain the exact facts as regards the number lost and the needs of assistance. A subscription paper was also started and a very liberal response was made. The amount subscribed was [illegible] Tuesday. Other contributions will follow.

Personals.

Miss Jennie Spaulding of Harlem, spent Sunday with her aunt, Mrs. Sparling of Arlington avenue.

Miss Pollion, daughter of Mr. Richard Pollion of Brooklyn, is visiting her sister, Mrs. E. C. Pease of Washington Park.

Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Newman of West 8th street, have returned from Pine Bush, where they have been stopping for a short time.

Borough Counsel Chas. A. Reed scored 219 points at the Olympic alley, Friday. Mr. Reed's record is now next to the highest.

Among the many handsome private buggies that are admired on Plainfield's thoroughfares, none can excel Mr. Bloodgood's new [illegible].

The Misses May and Carrie Kirkner will sail for Europe in a few weeks, for a Summer tour on the Continent. They will be chaperoned by Miss Bulkley.

Mrs. B. Arrowsmith Hageman, Jr., and family, with Mrs. Chas. A. Reed, left on Tuesday for Mount Pocono, Pa., where they will spend the Summer.

Mr. A. P. Boome of New York, has rented a furnished house on Willow avenue, in Washington Park, and will occupy it with his family, June 22.

Inspector Rogers of the Free Delivery service was in the city Saturday, in consultation with Postmaster Force, with reference to extending the service here.

Mr. Charles Thompson, formerly of this city, is the engineer on the Central Railroad ferry-boat, "Plainfield," which runs between Jersey City and New York.

Mr. James McGee of Willow avenue, Washington Park, has been confined to the house for two weeks with sickness, but is now convalescent and able to be out.

For the information of those who do not know, it may be stated that Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis and wife arrived safely in Europe, and are enjoying their trip abroad.

Under the direction of Mrs. George Wharton Edwards, amateur theatricals will be given in Seminary Hall, Thursday evening of this week, in aid of the Johnstown sufferers.

Mrs. Anna Davis Footman, wife of Robert H. Footman, died at Savannah, Ga., June 4. She was a former resident of Westfield, and cousin of Postmaster Addison Clark.

Mrs. Prescott Vail, of Elizabeth, formerly Miss Maggie Reed, of this city, is visiting relatives here prior to her usual Summer in Canada. Mr. Vail is a tutor in Dr. Pingry's college.

At the residence of Architect Wm. H. Clum on New street, evening June 5, took place the marriage of Mary A. Wilson and Lodier VanRensselaer Clum, both of this city. The Rev. Cornelius Schenck officiated.

The Misses Adelaide and Emma McGee, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. James McGee, of Washington Park, North Plainfield, left this city on Wednesday with a party of friends for California, to be absent for four months.

Mr. Otis [illegible] was Monday elected a trustee for five years of the Gratuity Fund of the New York Consolidated Exchange. The net surplus of the fund is almost half a million dollars. There are 2,307 members of the Exchange.

Cards are out announcing the marriage of Miss Kathleen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Newell, to Mr. Geo. Moss Kirkner, both of this city. The ceremony will take place at Grace church, on Tuesday, June 25, at 5:30 P. M.

Mrs. Lily Miller, wife of Dr. Miller of Philadelphia, and daughter of the late Mrs. Sarah Cornell of this city, returned home Friday, from a visit to relatives in Elizabeth. With her mother, she removed to Illinois several years ago.

At the residence of the bride on Manning avenue, North Plainfield, at 6:30 o'clock Wednesday evening, occurred the marriage of Miss Flora Case and Mr. William B. Mosher, of this city. Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes was the officiating clergyman.

Presiding Elder Price of the Elizabeth District, occupied the pulpit in the M. E. church, Sunday morning, and preached and eloquent and forcible sermon, at the close of which a collection was taken up for the benefit of the Johnstown sufferers, the amount of which was $190.

A London Sunday newspaper of May 9, asks for information of George William Vicary Comer, last heard of in Plainfield, N. J. Can it be our old friend "John Reginald Talbot?" Information is desired by Mrs. Harry Osborn, George street, Weston-Super-Mare, Somerset, England.

President Jacob Kirkner, of the Board of Education, points with pride to the fact that the cost per scholar in the public schools of this city, is no greater than in Elizabeth, yet everybody knows, and the State report shows, how much higher a standard of education the Plainfield pupil reaches.

The grounds around the old Boome homestead on Washington avenue, are being prepared for the removal of the house to a new position nearer the street. It will be remodeled and put in excellent condition both inside and out, and will add to the attractions of that handsome thoroughfare.

The Plainfield Browning Club met at the Chautauqua Rooms, last Tuesday evening, and the following members took part in a profitable consideration of "The Statue and the Bust," Miss Stout, Miss Sutphen, Mrs. Scribner, Miss French, Mrs. Goddard, Miss Bulkley, Mr. Goodrich, Mr. Joy and Mr. Larrabee.

Mr. and Mrs. George T. Rogers of Rockview avenue, Washington Park, will join a pleasure party of New York, Brooklyn and other friends, on June 18. They will visit Saratoga, White Mountains, Quebec, Montreal, Niagara Falls, Thousand Islands, Adirondacks, Lake George and Lake Champlain. The trip will occupy about three weeks.

Miss Minnie Wood, of Franklin place, won the tennis tournament on the courts at the Rushmore residence, last Saturday. The players were: Miss Minnie Wood, Julia Ketcham, Flora Petrie, Kate Kimball, Lilian Newman and Mamie French. The Rev. C. L. Goodrich umpired the contest. Twenty-five dollars was realized towards the Y. M. C. A. building fund.

The handsome residence of Mr. W. R. Pottle at the corner of Seventh street and Plainfield avenue, recently purchased by Gen. Negley, is being remodeled. Mr. W. H. Clum is the architect in charge. Manning & Son have the contract for the carpenter work; A. M. Griffen for the plumbing, Peter V. Weaver the painting, and Edward Lowe the paper hanging and interior decorations. The latter work is in charge of Mr. Lowe's foreman, Mr. D. R. Weaver.

The marriage of Miss Josephine [illegible], formerly of this city, and Mr. Theodore Wood, of [illegible], took place afternoon of June 1, at one o'clock, at the home of the bride's cousin, Mrs. [illegible], [illegible] Remsen street, Brooklyn Heights. The ceremony was performed by the bride's uncle, and among the guests was a lady [illegible] years old who had also been present at the marriage of the bride's mother. After a wedding breakfast, Mr. and Mrs. Wood left for parts unknown.

Capt. Henry Walker of the ocean steamship "Servia," was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Griffen of North Plainfield.

The New York Sun of Wednesday acknowledges the receipt of $5.75 raised by Minnie Oakley, of North Plainfield, for the Johnstown sufferers.

Archdeacon Rodman having resigned his place at the head of the Archdeaconry, the office has been filled by Bishop Scarborough in the appointment of Rev. Mr. Cullen of Freehold.

On Friday evening the W. C. T. U., of Elizabeth, will tender a reception to Mrs. Dr. Tomlinson, the President of the County Union. The reception will be held in Temperance Hall of that city, and the public is cordially invited.

Messrs William Latourette and George A. Cole of Princeton, spent a few days with friends in this city, returning Monday evening. They were the guests during their stay here of the Misses Martin of Chatham street, North Plainfield.

Plainfielders Off For Johnstown.

Henry Hans, who formerly worked for P. M. French, George Leland, Jr., tinner, and Michael Daly, plumber, have started for Johnstown with a squad from Jersey City. Mechanics of all trades are being sent for to assist in the rebuilding of the ruined city.

Mr. Daft's Lecture.

By invitation of Mr. Leo Daft, the class in Physics, connected with Rodman Seminary, accompanied by the Principal Mrs. R. C. Dingee, visited the laboratory of that gentleman on Putnam ave., Wednesday, June 5, and were treated to one of the most instructive as well as interesting lectures on electricity, they have ever had the pleasure of hearing.

A number of experiments was an interesting feature during the lecture. Mr. Daft very clearly explained the nature of the various batteries now in use, referring to their adaptability for certain purposes. His large gas engine was put in operation and the dynamos started by which a powerful current of electric fluid served for many experiments of a higher order, much to the delight of all.

Magnetism was also fully explained with demonstrations. The lecture occupied over two hours, and all expressed themselves as having thoroughly enjoyed the evenings entertainment. On departing for home Mr. Daft received the many thanks of his audience, for his kindness in making such extensive preparation and for his instructive talk.

Mizpah Lodge Entertainment.

An entertainment of a miscellaneous nature was given in Warren Mission chapel, under the auspices of Mizpah Lodge No. 1, United Order of Independent Odd Ladies. The entertainment was a pronounced success in every particular, and reflected great credit upon those who took part. The exercises opened with an overture by the orchestra, followed by a recitation by Mr. Davis, and a violin solo by Prof. Conde. Then came a humorous recitation by Master Voehl, and a cornet solo by Mr. W. Bartow of Bound Brook. "The Gypsy Pudding," a farce in one act, was commendably rendered, and the singing by Mr. Haskard was warmly applauded. Mr. J. H. Carney also contributed some humorous recitations. The entertainment closed with a burlesque on a Woman's Rights Convention," the delegates being attired in antique costumes. "Belva Lockwood," of Kalamazoo, addressed the Convention.

At the close of the entertainment the members of the lodge, together with their families and those who took part in the exercises, met at the residence of Mr. Drake on East Front street, and enjoyed an hour or so of general sociability.

THE NEW PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The new church that is just being completed for Dr. Ketcham and his people—and which is probably one of the handsomest in the State, in its interior—is to be formally dedicated on Tuesday evening, the 25th inst.

During the evening of the next day, Wednesday, there will be another special service under the auspices of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, in their own behalf and in behalf of the Sunday school. There will be addresses by prominent Christian workers.

Friday evening, June 28, will be held a fraternal service presided over by the Rev. W. R. Richards of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, in which pastors of the different churches of the city will take part and also a layman representative of the churches and one for the Young Men's Christian Association.

The arrangements and date for the inauguration of the very fine Midmer organ that has been built for the church have not yet been finally settled.

A Plainfield Class in Music.

A piano recital by the pupils of Mr. A. Venino was given at the home of Mrs. J. B. Dumont, Seventh street and Crescent avenue, Friday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. The music room and parlors were filled with invited guests.

The programme was as follows:

Duet ... G. Bohm
Miss M. Tracy and N. Whiton.
Andantino—from Op. [illegible] ... Schumann
Miss E. [illegible].
Impromptu—Op. 142, No. 2 ... Schubert
Miss M. Van Boskerck.
Valse ... Raff
Miss M. Mason.
Kammenoi Ostrow, No. 22 ... Rubinstein
Miss E. Gardiner.
a.) Consolation ... Liszt
b.) Valse—Op. 64, No. 1 ... Chopin
Miss A. Holmes.
Carnival ... Schumann
Miss E. Sandford.

The performance of the entire class convinced everyone present that the instruction and training they had received was most thorough and efficient. All played with a clearness and conception that was highly commendable, and it is improbable that the pupils of any other instructor could show such universal excellence and complete knowledge of what they were about.

Miss Holmes rendition of the Chopin valse was perfection, and displayed a very decided improvement in her playing. Miss Sandford's selection bristled with technical difficulties, and was remarkably well played. Miss Mason's, Miss Van Boskerck and Miss Gardiner, were also deserving of particular praise.

Mr. Venino's class in harmony has been such a success that it will continue the studies during another season, beside which a new class will be started. Some of the pupils can already compose and harmonize a theme.

Kitchen Garden Entertainment.

The closing exercises of the W. C. T. U. Kitchen Garden school took place Wednesday evening in the rooms of the W.C.T.U., on West Front St. The attendance was not as large as it should have been, but the enjoyment was nevertheless great. The entertainment was a temperance cantata entitled "One hour with Mother Goose." Those taking part did well, and the 40 or 50 little ones showed careful and patient training, under Miss Alice Smith, who is at the head of this excellent school.

After the Cantata, the Superintendent gave certificates to the following girls, these certificates admitting the pupils to the Cooking School: Nellie Soper, Emma Angleman, Olive Wyckoff, Laura Wyckoff, Clara Armstrong, Mabel Conover. Mrs. Tomlinson, President of the W. C. T. U., who was to have been present to present the certificates, was prevented from coming. About two months ago the children were given barrels, to fill with money with which to help defray expenses of the school, and as a reward for this labor Mrs. J. W. Yates offered a prize. After counting the money, it was found that Miss Lizzie Dunham had won it. The prize consisted of a very beautiful book. Following are the receipts:

Money received—Barrels	$19.33
Money received from Cantata	20.00

The First of the Commencements.

The closing exercises of Dunellen Public School, was held in the Seventh Day Baptist church, Wednesday, commencing at eight o'clock. The following programme was carried out, under the direction of Principal C. W. Oley:

Presentation of Presents and Diplomas.
Chorus—Gently Sighs the Breeze ... School.

The Seminary's Closing Exercises.

The closing exercises at Miss Kenyon's Seminary, Wednesday, were attended, as usual, by a large gathering of Plainfield's better people, almost exclusively of the gentler sex.

The programme was a most entertaining one, and full of features original, artistic and calculated to show the advancement of the scholars and their faultless training and finish. The opening number was the customary French play, this time varied by Chinese costumes and a Japanese score. Those who understood the libretto, and those who assumed to, betrayed exuberant enjoyment.

The calisthenic drill was given in Spanish frocks, with peasant waists, each girl holding a tambourine. It was a novel picture. A violin solo by Miss Nellie Whiton, accompanied by Miss Margaret Tracy, a piano duett by the same, and the solo performance by Miss Mabel Potter, of a "Chinese Serenade," were interspersed through the programme, which closed with Franz Abt's Fairy Cantata.

In this the entire school of about seventy had been trained, and were led by Miss Alice Holmes. It was a pretty piece of harmony throughout, in which Miss Anna Titsworth's accompaniment was not a small part. Great credit was due that so much had been made of a chorus containing so many young voices whose possessors had hardly been a song book before.

The work of the classes in drawing, botany and other branches, was exhibited in the rooms above, and received sincere praise from the many appreciative ones who examined it.

THE FESTIVAL IN VINCENT CHAPEL.

When the doors of Vincent chapel were thrown open last Thursday, a very pleasing sight greeted those who were present. The ladies of this church had planned for some time to hold a strawberry and iced cream festival, and that night their hopes were realized when the arrangements had been completed and the very large crowd filled the chapel to show their appreciation of the labor expended by those energetic ladies.

The chapel looked very pretty with the different stands, which were decorated in a way to attract one's eye. The flower booth was probably the most conspicuous. It was in the shape of a Summer house, and the decorations of leaves and ferns made it a very handsome booth. The variety of flowers displayed here was something remarkable and showed great taste in the selection.

Next came the fruit and candy booth. Everything to suit the taste was sold here and a great number surrounded the booth and kept those in attendance very busy. Then there was the booth of aprons and fancy articles, where one could buy anything they wanted in that line and of course at a reasonable price.

The pride of the ladies, and particularly the young ladies, was the gypsy encampment, which occupied the whole room in the back part of the chapel. The young ladies worked hard to make this a success and they deserve credit for what they did. There were two tents pitched, straw laid loosely around the floor, and everything went to make up a real "gypsy camp." Then there were nice young ladies dressed in gypsy costumes, who would tell your fortune for a small price—and who would not have their fortune told by such attractive young ladies? There was also lemonade sold at this camp.

All these booths were presided over by young ladies principally, with some young men helping. Below will be found a full and complete list of those who are assisting in the affair:

Fruit and Candy—Mrs. S. I. Mitchell, Mrs. S. G. Baker, Miss Laura Baker, Miss Belle Langer, Miss Lillie Chandler.

Apron and Fancy booth—Mrs. J. N. McNaughton, Mrs. C. VanVliet, Mrs. J. W. Jackson, Mrs. P. M. Smith, Mrs. C. C. Cokefair.

Committee on Refreshments—Mrs. G. H. Burgess, Mrs. E. R. Fairchild, Mrs. O. L. Jenkins, Miss Baker, Mrs. John Chandler, Mrs. D. S. Roberts, Mrs. S. Jackson, Mrs. Spicer, Mrs. Mahaffie, Mrs. D. Davis, Mrs. Vaillant, Mrs. Edward Winter.

—The police went on duty, Saturday night, with their new suits and helmets, furnished by the city. Some of the officers, however, have Grand Army buttons on the sleeves of their new coat, and it is presumed that the maker "ran out" of police buttons.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE CHILDREN'S HOME.

Trinity Reformed church was well filled last Thursday, upon the occasion of the anniversary of the Children's Home. The Rev. Dr. Ketcham, and the Revs. Cornelius Schenck and C. L. Goodrich, occupied the platform with Col. Elliott F. Shepard, son-in-law of the late Wm. H. Vanderbilt, and editor of the New York Mail and Express.

The evening's programme was as follows:

Organ Prelude—"Charity" ... Rossini
Scripture and prayer ... Rev. Cornelius Schenck
Duett—Tuscan Folk Songs ... Luigi Caracciolo
A. Streamlet Full of Flowers.
B. Nearest and Dearest.
Mrs. Geo. A. Chapman and Miss Chapman.
Treasurer's Report.
President's Report.
Solo—"An Old Garden" ... Hope Temple
Mrs. Geo. A. Chapman.
Address ... Col. Elliott F. Shepard
Offertory in "D flat" ... Geo. L. Brace Old Hundred.
Benediction.
Organ Postlude ... Eugene Thayer

Before the doxology a collection was taken up which netted the sum of $83.87, besides a check for $25 which the managers of the Home had tendered Col. Shepard for his address, and which he endorsed back to them and laid in the plate as his contribution.

The Rev. Dr. Ketcham acted as master of the ceremonies, and announced each part of the programme. Each side of him were stands on which stood big bunches of roses, and behind him Mr. Arthur Titsworth officiated in a very pleasing way on the organ.

The exercises were opened by Dr. Ketcham's request: "Let us have the thoughtful attention of you all from the outset, to the reports and address of the evening, that an earnest purpose may arise in your hearts that during the next year the society shall have more of your offerings to assist them in its glorious work." The Rev. Mr. Schenck then read a lesson from the scripture, and offered prayer.

After the duetts of Mrs. George A. Chapman and Miss Chapman, the Rev. Mr. Richards read the reports of receipts and disbursements by the late Mrs. Serrell and her daughter.

CHARLES PLACE, LEMUEL W. SERRELL, } Auditing Com.

The Rev. C. L. Goodrich read the report of the President, Mrs. Horace Kimball. It covered a period of eighteen months, and was listened to with great interest throughout. It was beautifully written. A steady increase in growth, and zeal, and usefulness, was reported. "No one who is not interested and associated with us," Mrs. Kimball continued, "has any conception of the many pitiful cases brought to our attention. Full well we realize how it may be true that has been said of New Jersey: 'One in every thirty families has a member in the alms house, in the asylum, or in the cell.' About forty different children have been cared for by us since the last report, and homes have been found for many of them. But there are still a large number about the streets who should be lifted up and saved. Our work is never finished but grows in its demands on us every year."

The report spoke also of many cases of children suffering from neglect or cruel treatment by their parents, and the managers of the Home were called upon to protect the little ones or interfere in their behalf. "There is no limit to our work, but we have an abiding faith that the friends who have sustained us in the past will continue to make it possible for us to heed the cry of the little ones." Appreciation was expressed for the efforts in behalf of the Home by the West End Literary Circle and the King's Daughters, and for the gratuitous medical attendance in the Home by Dr. Edward Rushmore, and for cases outside by Drs. W. H. Murray and M. R. Long; also to Dr. D. H. Thistleton for dental services, to Mr. H. P. Reynolds and Messrs. Field & Randolph, to Mr. W. H. Guion for coal, to Mr. J. H. Pollion for flowers from Netherwood chapel, and to the editors of the city papers. The report closed with a touching tribute to the nobility and faithful service of the late Mrs. L. W. Serrell, for eight years the Treasurer of the Home. She left it the sum of $1,000 in her will, which has been invested as a permanent endowment fund. Reference was also made to the $2,000 left the Home by Mrs. Sarah G. Lattimer, whose will, however, is yet in litigation.

Before introducing the speaker of the evening, Dr. Ketcham begged permission to use him for a text. "The last I saw of Col. Shepard," he said, "he was taking care of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church—giving them a sail down the bay in a big iron steamer, and talking to them in the Metropolitan Opera House. Now you will agree that the gathering of the General Presbyterian Assembly is a very large affair—500 or 600 ministers and divines and leading laymen all together. The next time I see Col. Shepard is at a much smaller affair, you'll probably say. But no! I think this is the greater occasion; for Heaven is more interested in the little ones than in the bishops and ministers and church leaders. You will be the most sure of enlisting the sympathy of the angels and the approval of Heaven, by the lifting up and the helping of the children. It is not, whosoever did it make a bishop or a moderator—but 'unto one of the least of these, my children.'"

At the close of Col. Shepard's talk, which was of some length, Dr. Ketcham spoke of the orphans in Johnstown and stated that the Children's Home of Plainfield intended to adopt two of them. "There is some legal barrier," said the Doctor, "to the Home's acceptance of any children except from Union and Somerset counties. But where there's a will there's a way—and where there's a woman there's a will."

To Hon. James A. Beaver, Harrisburg, Pa.

The Children's Home Association of Plainfield, N. J., will, if necessary, receive at once, two orphan children from Johnstown.

MRS. HORACE KIMBALL, Pres.
Plainfield, N. J., June 7, 1889.

Two Johnstown Orphans for Plainfield.

Mrs. H. E. Kimball, President of the Children's Home, says: "As the work of caring for the suffering and orphan children of Johnstown progresses, the Relief Committee find themselves glad to receive aid outside of the State. The Mail and Express of New York has sent a lady to Johnstown to bring ten children to that city. Two of them will come to our Home."

F. G. Smith Wins the Club Championship.

The City Offered Council Rooms and Offices in the New Opera House Building.

The building already described in THE PRESS, to be erected by Mr. Charles H. Hand on Second street, just East of Park avenue, will be of pressed brick with terra cotta trimmings.

The Opera House in the rear will be capable of accommodating an audience of 700 people. It will also make a ball room with a dancing surface of about 64 by 98 feet. In the basement, under the large stores each side of the entrance, will be billiard rooms and bowling alleys.

Two lodge rooms will be fitted up in the third stories of the building. The second stories, however, if the city will rent, will be thrown into one arranged with a large Council chamber and eight offices for the Mayor, Assessor, Collector, Treasurer, Corporation Counsel, Chief of Police, Fire Department, Street Commissioner, and all other officers of the municipality. All this the owner offers to rent for $100 a month, and heat with steam. The proposition is now in the hands of the Finance Committee.

W. H. Clum is the architect of the building. Work on the excavation is almost completed, and it is expected that the building will be ready for occupancy by October.

One or two HAMBURG FIGS will put the bowels in healthy condition, and will prevent the development of serious trouble. 25 cents. Dose, one fig. J. G. Miller, Agent, Plainfield.

IS YOUR BAKING POWDER PURE?

Do its Manufacturers Publish all the Ingredients Used?

IS IT FREE FROM AMMONIA?

As is well known, ammonia is unhealthful in food, and dries up the bread material.

Protection to consumers of food compounds lies in their ability to choose those made from healthful substances. Unless manufacturers publish just what their baking powder is made of, do not use their goods, but buy instead

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER.

This powder is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, and strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, with a little wheat flour to preserve it. This is attested by the official analyses of Government and State chemists, and physicians, and chemists of Boards of Health throughout the country.

THREE KINDS!

I know
The past, and thence I will essay to glean
A warning for the future, so that man
May profit by his errors, and derive
Experience from his folly.—SHELLEY.

Three kinds of men start out to buy Clothing. The foolish man is hauled in by a bait and buys cheap, shoddy clothing from the "hurrah" fake.

Then comes the thoughtless man who wends his way to the fashionable tailor, gets a good suit, but pays a very big price for the same.

The wise man deals with some reputable manufacturer of Clothing and secures garments fully equal to those made to order at about half custom prices. Thus the wise man gets his Clothing, with quality and workmanship thrown in, as cheap as the foolish man his miserable trash. An unusually large number of wise men are being attracted to our store this Spring. Whether it's a case of "once bitten twice shy" or not, we don't know, but certainly their patronage of us does credit to their good judgment, and we don't think, once having traded here they'll be caught by clap-trap again. We know what we sell. We make it, and neither time, effort or money is spared to produce garments that will do us credit and still further establish our reputation. It's a selfish interest we take, we'll admit, but the effect is the same. It's there, and it pays both you and us.

WOMAN IN FRANCE.

A Glance at a Parisian Family and French Methods, Together with a Comparison with American Usages—Man and Wife in Business.

"The woman in France she carry the purse. This make her economical. The husband he give his whole time to manage the business, and he not have to worry about the little things. The wife, she know that all the success depend on saving the little things, so she keep close watch on every thing in the store, the work room, the kitchen. She do not work with her own hands, she hire, but she see that the work is done without waste. She not get tired with work, so she able to think all the time. Her and the competition of business, so she know how hard it is to make money, and she very careful how she spend it.

"The American woman she know nothing of the trouble of business; the man, he carry all the load. She ask for money, she not like it if she not have it, and he give it her, and he go up. Then they all come down together—father, mother, children. He not ask them to help, he go to work again. Yes, the American woman not knowing trouble of making money, she shovel it out." The gesture here was inimitable, says the New York World reporter who conducted the interview. Forming a scoop or shovel with her hands, she went through the motion of shoveling with a graceful swaying of the body from side to side.

"No, the French way best way for all—man, wife and children.

"The French children expect to help the father. They sent to best school, what give solid learning, that the father can pay for. At fifteen they must graduate. The French child not graduate at fifteen, no good for school any more; must do something else. The father, the mother sorry, but they can not help it. School cost money and can not be wasted. The child go work for the father, boy or girl, no matter. There they treated like stranger. Have wages just the same, and must do the work as well. No favors. Keep same hours. If they not do work as well as stranger, then they must do work lower down, they must learn of stranger how to do that work. They feel ashamed not able to do better for own father and mother as a stranger do. They soon learn, or another place found for them. No wasted time; they must earn money and be ready to care for themselves.

FREEHOLDERS PROCEEDINGS.

OFFICIAL.

ELIZABETH, N. J., May 16, 1889.

Pursuant to adjournment the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union met on Thursday, May 16, 1889, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

Present—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Briant, Doty, Houston, Jones, Kyte, Kleinhans, Pierson, Roll, Thompson, Wright, Whaley—12.

Absent—Freeholders Donahue, Howard, Vanderbeek, Van Saun, West—5.

The minutes of last meeting were read and on motion approved as read.

Freeholder Roll moved to take a recess of thirty minutes. Carried.

On roll call after recess all the members of the board were present.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From W. L. Mershon:

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union:

GENTLEMEN—Inasmuch as it is necessary for me to lay a drain from my land to the Rahway river at its intersection of Grand-st, I hereby petition your honorable body to allow me the privilege to cut through the wall of the bridge over Grand-st in order that my drain can be properly laid to said river.

Very respectfully,
W. L. MERSHON.

Dated May 16, 1889.

On motion of Freeholder Howard received and placed on file.

COMMITTEE ON REPORTS.

From committee on collector's bond:

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union:

GENTLEMEN—Your committee on the collector's bond beg leave to report that we herewith submit the collector's bond, which we have approved after satisfying ourselves of the sufficiency of the same.

CHAS. D. WHALEY,
ROBERT G. HOUSTON,
P. D. VAN SAUN,
Committee.

On motion of Freeholder Doty the report was received and the bond ordered filed in the county clerk's office.

The committee on county roads reported that map was completed and in possession of the committee.

On motion of Freeholder West the report was received and committee continued to examine map and compare with the record, also to cause an accurate description of each road adopted as a county road to be recorded in a book to be kept in county clerk's office as required by the act and report at next meeting of the board.

The committee to procure an engineer reported they had been unable to decide the matter and fix the compensation and requested it be laid over until next meeting.

On motion of Freeholder Doty report was received and committee continued.

RESOLUTION.

By Freeholder Thompson:

Resolved, That the director be and is hereby constituted a member of all committees of this board.

On motion of Freeholder Howard adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Thompson:

Resolved, That the county collector be authorized to advance two thousand dollars to the sheriff on account of May term of court.

Freeholder Kleinhans moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Pierson:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to report upon the advisability and probable cost of building a bridge in Westfield township near the Clark township line and residence of Theodore Folsom, and report at the next regular meeting of the board.

On motion of Freeholder Thompson adopted unanimously.

The director named the following committee:

Freeholders Pierson, Thompson, Howard, Van Saun, Jones.

By Freeholder Vanderbeek:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to confer with a like committee from Somerset county upon the advisability of building an iron bridge crossing Greenbrook between the counties of Union and Somerset near Cadmus mill, Plainfield, N. J., the bridge to be about sixteen feet wide by fifty feet span, to ascertain the probable cost and report the same to this board.

On motion of Freeholder Howard adopted unanimously.

The director named the following committee:

Freeholders Vanderbeek, Kyte, Pierson, Doty, Kleinhans.

By Freeholder Wright:

Resolved, That the privilege be granted W. L. Mershon to drain, as in his petition asked for, so long as no injury is caused to said bridge and that the same be done under the supervision of Wm. Howard and George Wright the freeholders from Rahway.

Freeholder Kyte moved its adoption.

By Freeholder Howard:

Resolved, That the attorney of this board is hereby directed to make application to the circuit court and take such proceedings as are necessary in order to obtain the certificate of said court of the assessed valuation of the real estate and the total amount of indebtedness of the county, as provided and directed in the act entitled "An act to enable boards of chosen freeholders to acquire, improve and maintain public roads," and that he also allege in such application that this board proposes at this time to issue county road bonds to the amount of $150,000 for the purposes of improving and maintaining certain roads as provided in aforesaid act.

Freeholder Thompson moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted as follows: Ayes 16. Nay 1—Freeholder Donahue.

By Freeholder Doty:

Resolved, That when this board adjourns it be to meet on Thursday, May 23, 1889, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

On motion of Freeholder Briant adopted unanimously.

The following bill, properly approved, was read and ordered paid unanimously.

Sunday Leader, publication, $25.

Freeholder Kyte moved to adjourn.

Which was carried.

The director declared the board adjourned to Thursday, May 23, 1889, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

CHAS. E. REED, Clerk.

THE GREAT RESERVATION

AND

Milk River Valley OF MONTANA

Have just been opened for settlement to the home-seeker. You have a right to a homestead under your government rights. Why not use it before it is too late? Land all free to settlers, and is the only part of the United States where free land suitable for stock and grain raising can be taken, at or near stations on the line of a railroad. You can take your choice from level valley lands or gently rolling bench lands. Soil very rich, and produces all grains and vegetables without irrigation. Climate delightful, being made very mild in Winter by warm Chinooks from the Pacific ocean. Timber, water and coal in abundance. Cheap land seekers' and settlers' tickets. Buy tickets to Glasgow, Chinook (Fawes), Benton, Great Falls, Helena and Butte. Plenty of government land near these points. For further information, the new pamphlet, "The Great Reservation", maps, etc., apply to F. I. Whitney, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, St. P., M. & M. R'y, St. Paul, Minn.

OUR FISHING TRIP.

What happy hours were those when Tom
And I, some monstrous whale to win,
Went fishing in the rocking-chair
On the piazza with a pin!

Our sails were spread, our anchors weighed,
We were the captain and the crew,
Far out from land on shining waves,
Before the gale we tacked and flew.

New schools of mackerel passed us by,
New dolphins came in rainbow [illegible],
New[illegible] on a distant wave,
A strange mermaiden combed her locks.

Cape Finisterre, and Baffin's bay,
And Crusoe's isle, and Red Sea shores
We left behind, and saw ahead
Van Diemen's Land and the Azores.

We [illegible] in Behring Strait,
And then, for the sweet sake [illegible]
Of Moses and the bulrushes,
We caught our dinner in the Nile.

But for some reasons that we had,
Some memories of delightful scenes,
At [illegible] we a harbor made
Always within the Philippines!

We turned the compass as we pleased;
The winds from every side were blown,
Geography, and time, and space,
In that fine voyage were all our own.

Sometimes the storm about us [illegible],
And we went slipping round the deck;
Sometimes we rocked so near the edge
We narrowly escaped a wreck.

For oft we saw the huge whale spout
Just over the horizon's rim,
But though we sailed, and sailed, and sailed
We never quite caught up with him.

And never shall we steal from time
Days half so glad as those wherein
We fished in the old rocking-chair
On the piazza with a pin!

THE TALE OF A CRIME.

Ghastly Revelation of a Photographer's Experiment.

M. Theodore, chef de surete, sat in his cabinet deeply perplexed. His two elbows on his desk, his head on his hands, he was musing.

"And was it going to last, this, which had been going on for so long awhile? And these assassins, were they going to end by beating him? Were they going to compel him by adverse public opinion to send in his resignation!

"Parbleu! it looked so, and as if they did it on purpose, passing the word from one to another to force him to get out of their way! Eight assassinations, one after another! Crimes of the worst caliber, with startling details, which peopled alike with horrifying visions the sleep of the bureaucrat and the concierge! And not an assassin, for all their skillful work, had they been able to lay their hands upon! They had fled, every man of them; they had disappeared, vanished—piff, like a puff of air. Celerity, dispatch, their motto, and to go without leaving an address behind them! Frankly, it had begun to pass the bounds of all reason.

"And now, to top off these eight other crimes, there was still another one, a ninth one, a murder, like the others, accomplished the evening before, under similar conditions, a femme-galante with her throat cut, five thousand francs' worth of jewels gone, and—not a trace of the assassins!"

Despite his robust philosophy, that had long been the admiration and emulation of his century, M. Theodore felt himself drifting into melancholy and reflection, not unmixed with anger.

"Nine murders, one after the other: nine crimes without an author; nonsense! Impossible!" The chef de surete pulled himself together, threw back his head like a war horse sniffing battle, and—the door opened.

It was his secretary who presented himself, bearing a card in his fingers.

"A gentleman, monsieur, who insists upon seeing you. He declares" and the secretary smiled a little at the absurdity of the claim—"he declares himself in a position to furnish you with definite particulars regarding the crime of yesterday."

"Ah, the crime of yesterday!" The chief turned quickly. "Then bid him enter," said he, and while the secretary regained the ante-room to do his bidding M. Theodore cast his eye upon the card before him.

"Frederick Bouscal!" he read in a half voice. "Bouscal, Bouscal; it seems to me that I know that name—that I've heard it somewhere."

He scrawled a line upon a scrap of paper and handed it to the secretary who returned at the moment ushering in the visitor who had asked to see him, dismissed him with a word and was ready for the matter in hand.

M. Theodore raised his eyes. Before him was a man simply, but neatly, clothed, and with a frank and honest countenance, though veiled, as by a cloud, with sadness. The eyes were clear and open, the mustache and goatee gray and pointed; in short, there was something in his manner, something in his whole appearance of a militaire in "retreat."

"You have particulars to give me, have you not, monsieur?" questioned the chef de surete; "particulars, I believe of the crime of yesterday."

"I hope so, monsieur," simply responded the visitor.

"Ah, hope so! You are not sure, then?"

"It rests with you, M. le Chef, whether I am sure or not. All depends, in fact, upon an operation the means of which you alone are able to furnish me."

"Explain, if you please!"

"Certainly, and at once, though doubtless you have heard it spoken of, M. le Chef, a certain scientific procedure which permits under certain conditions, better even than description can do it, a reconstitution of the portrait of an assassin. Briefly, behold my meaning. You know, of course," he continued, "that in the phenomenon called vision the object which we see throws or forms upon a screen in the eyeball itself—in plain words, upon the retina of the eye—an image which remains there until displaced by another. It has been proved also that this image persists even after death. You recognize, therefore, that if a person murdered has been struck from the front, and in a light sufficiently distinct for him to see, the last thing upon which his eyes would be fixed would in all probability be the face or form of the murderer. Naturally, the image of that face or figure would be thrown upon the retina of the eye where—and this is what I came to say—it is not only possible to refind it, but also possible to reproduce it. Ah, well, monsieur, in the case which occupies us—"

The door of the cabinet opened anew, and the secretary of M. Theodore re-entered, holding in his hand a roll of papers that he laid before his chief, then turned and was gone again as quickly as he had come. M. Theodore lifted it and ran his eye over the contents.

"You are named Frederick Bouscal, are you not, monsieur?" he demanded, presently, addressing his visitor.

"Yes, M. le Chef, Frederick Bouscal."

"—your age?"

"Fifty-eight years, M. le Chef."

"H'm-m-m." M. Theodore rapidly twirled the sheets beside him; "twenty-seven years!" he murmured, as if thinking aloud. "Was it not you then who was imprisoned two years ago, and condemned for [illegible] and the theft of a thousand florins?"

"No, monsieur," he responded, with effort in a dull voice; "no, it was not I—it was—my son."

"An employe of the Credit Agricole, was he not? And—you are ignorant of what has become of him?"

"Absolutely. It is fifteen months that his mother and I have been without news of him. That child, M. le Chef, that child has been our sorrow and our shame. He has broken our hearts, dishonored our name—"

His voice was choked. He was silent, unable, evidently, to go on.

"Pardon me, monsieur," said the chef de surete, "I have reopened a painful wound, but—I listen to you—you were saying?"

The man passed his hand across his brow and eyes to clear his vision, then resumed:

"I was saying, M. le Chef, that in the case which occupies us now the reconstitution of the assassin's portrait should be entirely possible. The victim was struck in the face, the direction of the blow and the form of the wound indicates it plainly. More than this, it must have been light enough to see the murderer, and with sufficient clearness to have stamped his likeness upon the retinal screen, for the papers assert that even in death her eyes were fixed in a 'wide and frightened stare.' Then, monsieur, we find ourselves in the presence of a half-certainty; it is probable, if we were, that the eye of the corpse lying now upon the slab of the morgue contains the exact reproduction of the features of the one you seek. With your permission I will draw it from there."

"Draw it, but how?"

"By photography—it is my business, M. le Chef. And this matter, this subject I speak of, I have studied it long and almost with passion, for I hold it to be, in case of success, one of the most useful and beautiful applications of modern science. I know it can be done. I have myself experimented, and in one instance have reproduced the lineaments of the physician who had leaned above the bed of the dying."

The man spoke with animation, and while speaking his voice vibrated, his eyes burned, his whole countenance was illuminated, irradiated with the light of a legitimate pride. M. Theodore regarded him, visibly moved himself by this ardent conviction.

"And you conclude?" he questioned, after a moment's thought.

"I conclude—but authorize me to attempt the experiment on the woman assassinated yesterday and I will tell you what I conclude. If I succeed it will be for us—my wife and me—a little glory, and also a little money—a ray of hope in our misery; if I fail—well, no matter—we are used to misfortune. A deception, more or less, need not be counted. In any event, M. le Chef, you lose nothing in the adventure but the chance of an unhoped for success."

"Then, so be it, monsieur," agreed the chef de surete. "Take your instruments to the morgue to-morrow morning at ten o'clock. I will see that the clerk is instructed. Later on I shall myself be there. I have the honor, monsieur, to wish you good-morning."

In the obscure nook at the morgue where he had inclosed himself in accordance with the arrangement made at the office of the surete Frederick Bouscal, his body bent, his face drawn, watched anxiously the result of his last washing. The plate was there before him in its bath of quicksilver, into which he had dropped it awhile ago with such fear and infinite precaution.

Sensitivised! Vitalized? At least it should be, and if the conditions of the crime were such as he supposed them, and the victim before dying had really seen her murderer's face, the portrait of the assassin would be there under that bed of gelatine on traine to melt away.

His throat closed as by a grip of iron, the operator held himself immovable, hearing only with painful distinctness the gurgle of the water as it dripped upon the faces of the dead in the adjoining chamber; the plunge of his blood as it throbbed and hammered through the arteries of his heart.

And at last the moment came—the moment that was to reveal to him all or nothing. He rose, that poor, trembling photographer, rose, I say, took it carefully by its dripping edges, that plate upon which his fate was hanging, half closed his eyes, held it to the single ray of light that filtered through the yellowed pane—to stagger back with a groan of anguish, to let it crash into a thousand pieces!

"His son! Great God! The face of the murderer, the face of the son!"

Five minutes later, when Frederick Bouscal, the photographer, came from his nook, and the chef de surete, awaiting him with impatience, hurried to meet him, he saw immediately by the pallor of his face, by his somber eyes, that he had nothing good to announce to him.

"Well," said he, "nothing?"

"No," responded Bouscal, "nothing."

"Impossible! the transparency of the cornea is destroyed. I wished to wash it, and I burned it through mistake in the vials. I salute you, M. le Chef!" And Frederick Bouscal turned away.

The next morning the commissioner of the quarter of Ternes, forwarding to the prefecture his regular report, headed it with the following item:

"To-day at ten o'clock a summons to 109 Rue Langlois. A call from the concierge, suspicious of charcoal fumes from the room of the Bouscals, man and wife, his locataires. The door, by my order, was forced. Too late—they were dead, both of them, side by side upon the bed, a brazier of lighted charcoal plainly indicating the manner of their death. A double suicide—poverty the cause.

"From —— Commissaire, quarter of Ternes, third month, 18th day, 188—."

"Bah, these inventors!" murmured M. Theodore, as his secretary concluded the reading, "they are all alike, stupid and rash! though I, too, on this occasion, have naught to boast of. But how the deuce," he added, as the memory of that pale, sad face rose up before him, "how the deuce could I think of suicide for a cause as trifling as this?"

"A cause as trifling as this?"

Ah, my worthy chef de surete, it is not every thing that is known in that prefecture of thine!—Translated from the French by E. C. Waggener.

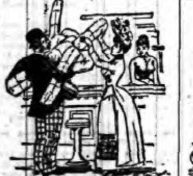
A Cottage For the Summer.

Howard Fielding Hires One At Applejackhurst-by-the-Sea.

He Afterwards Burglarizes It by Mistake and Meets "Steady, the Kid"—Points on Economical Shopping.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

A certain man owned a piece of land in New Jersey which was entirely unfit for any human being to live on. So he determined to make a summer resort of it. He laid out several streets and hired a man to go around every morning and bail them out for the place had formerly been a swamp. He also laid out some drains to remedy this defect, but he subsequently lost them, because it was impossible to distinguish them from the street when the weather was at all damp. It is upon this that I base the suspicion that the house I hired in Applejackhurst-by-the-Sea was built by mistake on the drain instead of the sea. It was one of a line of cottages that all looked alike, and were in the Queen Anne style or some other fashion coming down from an uncomfortable time, when people knew next to nothing about building houses.



A MUCH ABUSED HUSBAND.

When the man who owned Applejackhurst-by-the-sea had got the place fairly started, so that he had to stay down there several days in succession to look after things and enjoy the fine scenery, he died of malaria, and his heirs formed a company to boom the locality on account of the salubriousness of the climate. My wife and I were victims of the boom. Three weeks ago yesterday, I stood in front of one of the cottages—I couldn't say which one, because one was as badly out of shape as another—and concluded the contract with the agent.

"You swear upon your sacred honor that there is no malaria here?" said I.

"I do," he replied.

"Then it's a bargain," said I. "Shake."

"Confound your skin, what made you remind me of it?" he gasped. Then he leaned up against the gate post and shook.

"I got this ague down in Texas," he explained when he revived. "But it's rapidly yielding to the beautiful climate of Applejackhurst-by-the-Sea."

I told him that I thought he would shake it off if he kept on just as he was going, and he smiled gaily at the prospect.

When I opened my eyes upon the dismal realities of life, after the first night I spent in Applejackhurst-by-the-sea, I heard my wife calling: "Come, Howdy, we must have an early breakfast. I'm going into town shopping." I asked Maude in that pleasant tone of voice which I usually employ in discussions of this sort, before I have waked up sufficiently to get a grip on my temper, why the dickens she hadn't done her shopping the day before, when she was in New York.

"That's got nothing to do with it," said Maude. "You know we came out here because the round trip tickets are twenty cents cheaper when you want to go to New York than they would have been if we had gone to Rahway, as we thought of doing, so that every time I go in shopping from here I save twenty cents, and every day I don't go, I lose twenty cents, and we're not rich enough to afford to waste money."

I have been my wife's husband long enough not to attempt to argue with her when she gets into the higher mathematics of domestic economy. But I did venture to ask her if there was anything she wanted to buy in New York.

"Why of course there is," said Maude. "I want to buy some napkins. We need half a dozen and I saw them advertised in a new York paper for a dollar and a half. At the store down here, the same goods will cost $1.60, and I don't propose to let anybody cheat me. It's too much to pay for napkins anyway."

"Now, Maudie," said I, coaxingly. "You're not going way into New York to save five cents on a half dozen napkins!" I said no more, because I saw that peculiar gleam in Maude's eye which told me that she would soon either cry or begin to break the furniture. We went into New York shopping.

Maude took me to one of those big stores where they sell everything from a toothpick to a Saratoga trunk. She appeared to want them all. She looked at a few napkins, but near them there happened to be a counter covered with dress goods. It was a "bargain counter," too. Maude couldn't stand the mental pressure. She pawed over all the dress goods, and finally bought a big roll of something she didn't want, because it was cheap. I had to pay for it, and I also had to carry it, because Applejack-hurst-by-the-Sea was outside delivery limits. Then we moved on to another counter and bought something else. I don't know what it was, but I paid for it. We went clear around the store in that way. My load grew heavier every minute. I had to hold it with both arms, and it had gradually crept up over my vest till the pile of bundles began to obscure my vision.

The last thing I remember to have seen was a blonde young saleslady who piled a big package on my arms that reached a couple of inches above the top of my head.

"Maude," said I, "let us go. Do you intend to start a store in Applejackhurst-by-the-Sea?"

But she had found something else to buy. It was a smoking jacket for her pug dog. He was supposed to wear it during the time when the head of the family smoked his after dinner cigar. It was the latest thing in society, and New York dogs of good family were getting measured for them every day.

"Oh, Howdy, we must have one of these for Claude," said Maude. "How much money have you got left?"

"Maude," said I, "if suits of clothes were ten cents apiece, I couldn't buy the arm hole of a second-hand vest. Let's go back to Applejackhurst-by-the-Sea."

She led me to the ferry and I arrived just in time to get my legs on different sides of the chain at the stern as the genial and intelligent deck-hand strung it up tight. Of course I couldn't see it over the armful of bundles, and so I fell over it, and buried a bootblack six feet deep. I tumbled over two dogs, a Jersey City man and several others of the lower animals on the other side of the river, so that we missed our train and waited two hours for another.

By the time we reached Applejackhurst-by-the-Sea it was dark. The station agent was just putting out the lights at the depot and when he had done so the whole town was buried in a gloom as deep as the mud in its thoroughfares. We plodded up one of them, but by the time we had gone a hundred yards, I began to have serious doubts whether it was the right one. Maude was sure that it wasn't. She was never mistaken about localities. When I got where I thought our house ought to be I stopped before a front gate and took an observation. The house inside was dark. It looked just like any other house in sight because they'd all been built by contract from a single model. We expected to find our house dark, anyway, because we had let the servant go until to-morrow and there was nobody in.

"Anyway," said I, "we can tell by the key. If that fits we are all right."

Maude felt in her pocket, first confidently, then anxiously and then hysterically.

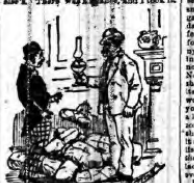
"Maude," said I, endeavoring not to swear, "if this was Chicago I'd apply for a divorce and get it, too."

She began to cry.

"You ugly, horrid thing; she said, "I wish it was Chicago!"

Then a bright thought struck her. I might climb in one of the back windows and see if I could find the key. If I found it, the house was ours; if I got filled with rock salt and duck shot it was somebody else's. There was a chance, and I took it.



AN UNPLEASANT MISTAKE.

I went around through the grass plot and tried open the basement window. Then I got inside and Maude passed me the bundles, because it had begun to rain and she didn't want them to get wet. The inside of the house was just like ours, but I knew it would be, especially in the dark. I stumbled upstairs with the bundles in my arms. Then my confidence weakened. There was an odor of clay pipe in the air. I never smoke a pipe. I began to feel quite sure that I should get the duck shot. Footsteps approached stealthily through the hall. Then a big tough appeared in the doorway with a lamp in one hand and a club in the other.

I fell on my knees, and the bundles covered the floor.

"My dear, kind sir," said I, "this is the most accidental thing that ever happened to me since I was born. I—I never intended to break into your house."

"Break into my house!"

"Yes; and I'll go right away this minute, and call off my wife; you ought to spare my life for that, and I'll—"

"Well, I dunno about yer," said he. "Me opinion is that you be. Yer just go into this closet, do ye mind, till I call the perlice."

I went into the closet very gladly, because I knew that there was another door on the other side of it. I went through this door without losing any time and jumped out of the window. I lit very near Maude, but she escaped.

"Run, run," I whispered, "it's the wrong house."

We fell over a lawn mower and three croquet hoops, but eventually made our escape. We wandered the streets till morning and Maude knew every minute that we should be arrested. At 6 a. m. we were in front of one of the cottages as the milkman was making his rounds. He rang the bell several times but nobody answered. Then I heard him say: "I wonder where them new people the Fieldings is that they don't wake up."

"Maude," I cried, "we're saved. This is our house."

And it was. We walked up the steps and Maude pulled out the key and unlocked the door. She'd had the thing in her pocket all along.

Several days passed, but, to our surprise, we heard nothing of the burglary that I had unintentionally committed. I came to the conclusion that the man in whose house I had dropped the bundles had decided that it was a good chance to get some napkins and dress goods for nothing, and was keeping his mouth shut. I was willing to do it if he would. I accepted that explanation till I got the following note:

MR. FIELDING:

Dear Sir: We have met before. You are the man that I caught burglarising, but it's all right. Don't say anything more about it. You would never do well in my line of business. You get scared too quick. I'm obliged for the swag, but I send this piece of red silk back, because my girls got hair that isn't exactly that shade, though it's too near to look right. If you'll get it exchanged no questions will be asked, and I give you a pointer for nothing. When you burglarise your own house again, don't be stuffed out too easy by another grub what's there on the same errand. I am yours to command,

STEADY THE KID.

So I had been in my own house after all. I did not tell this to Maude. It would have made me a hopeless minority in the family.

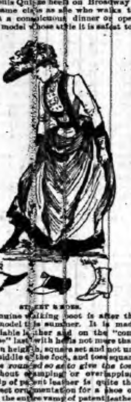
FAIRY FEMININE FEET.

What Dame Fashion Provides for Her Followers.

Dainty Styles of Footgear That Are Being Worn This Summer—New Things in Tennis Shoes—Evening Shoes Must Match One's Gloves and Gowns.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

It is with joy and gladness that the Spring beauty takes her walks abroad, for high heels are abolished for the promenade and the boot with a pointed toe is not put on for a shopping expedition. The fashion—terrible and magnificent word—decrees that the dressing of the feet must be differentiated this Summer according to the hour of the day and the style of the gown. To wear diamonds at breakfast is not worse form than to keep one's "dress" boots continually on parade. Proper footwear has always been considered more absolutely essential to being well dressed than the wearing of fine gowns, and proper footwear means this season shoes of one kind for walking and of quite different varieties for the carriage, the house and the evening. It is coming to be generally acknowledged that the woman who would sport Louis Quinze heels on Broadway is of the same class as she who walks the street in a conspicuous dinner or opera toilet, a model whose style it is safest to avoid.



STREET SHOES.

The genuine walking boot is after the English model this summer. It is made of soft pliable leather and on the "common sense" last with heels not more than an inch in height, square set and not under the middle of the foot, and toes square or a little rounded so as to give the toes room without cramping or overlapping. A pointed tip of patent leather is quite the most correct ornamentation for a shoe of this kind, the entire vamp of patent leather though showy at the outset, being liable to creasing and stretching and being too sensitive to heat to make a comfortable walking boot for summer. The walking shoe may button or lace, according to the taste of the wearer, though the laced boot is decidedly in the ascendant with fashionables, since the invention of lace hooks that will not catch the gown, as being far more trig and trim to walk in. A laced boot will always keep its shape, where a buttoned boot grows loose and unsightly, though its convenience recommends the button to all women not young, and to stout women. The side laced boot has no advantages and only misses ugliness when worn on a foot that is very slender.

For material, we are returning this Summer to cloth tops on many of the new boots for walking. Plain black cloth is the standby for the dark hued and sober tailor gowns, but for the lighter and airier butterfly toilets every shade of dress material is reproduced to match the gloves and the gown, since ooze leather as well as cloth can be dyed any color.

If one wants a walking boot of strictly correct pattern one sends for one of the newly imported English bootmakers, who waits upon my lady in her boudoir and measures her feet after the most approved British fashion. The pieces of footgear sent home by this functionary are not small, no more is the bill. Notions regarding the feet have altered since the days when Suckling likened his lady's feet to mince, peeping in and out from the folds of her petticoat, and even since Tennyson compared Maud's feet to gems set in the green of the English turf. Ideals nowadays are on a less babyish scale. Not a tiny foot, but one which is finely shaped and symmetrical, which will carry its owner well and strongly through the world, is desired. Women, especially young ones, have been slow to learn that a long slim effect is far more graceful and comfortable as well as smaller than a short bunchy one, but they have learned it at last and hence the success of the English bootmaker. Most of his wares, when they do not lace up the front, have an inside lace, to fit the boot snugly over the ankle, over which the buttoned flap lies.

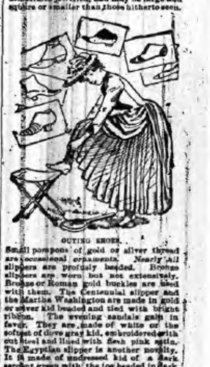
If a woman likes her walking boots somewhat ornamental she may choose a pair in the Waukenphast style, with the straight toe cap stitched across in the manner of a man's boot, or she may yield to the craze for novelty and go in for colors and color combinations. Green is very popular, and so are bright and dull reds in ooze leather. Russet, mouse, coffee, tan and bronze are color staples and are accounted modest in the presence of the more striking shades. A not extreme example of the possibilities of ooze leather is giving in a walking boot calculated to give the foot an appearance of extreme slimness and length, and made with lace vamps of ooze calf in color lettuce green and stitched partly with its own color and partly black; the quarters is of mouse color and the tops and lace pieces are bound with a piping of tan ooze. The toe caps are of patent leather, stitched with black and green. A walking book with the upper made of different colored, narrow strips of ooze leather woven together in a gay basket work; a walking boot with vamp, quarter, toe cap and heels all of different colors and not too sober ones ought to suit the taste of the most extreme, but whatever the vagaries the low heel, the broad toe and the comfortable shape remained the same.

Last year and the year before that we had a tennis shoe; this year we have a yachting shoe, a tourist shoe, in addition to the humble general utility tennis shoe. Even this latter has changed somewhat, for while most of the tennis shoes in former seasons have differed from ordinary shoes only by the addition of a rubber sole, the real tennis shoes are now made of strong linen, faced with leather and are regularly soled with India rubber or with felt more often. The new tennis shoe is cut high or low, and is made up in black canvas stitched with gold very frequently. The yachting shoes are of two varieties, for gala day trips over smooth water and for real service "where the salt winds blow and the waves dash high." The one style is shown in maroon leather with white heels and white ribbon lacings, in navy blue and white, and in gray kid with black ribbons and heels. The other species is a much less "smart" rubber-soled ankle shoe. The riding boot is now made with a tan or maroon leg of Morocco leather and French kid or patent leather foxings. The Oxford tie holds its own in spite of the doctors, who are proclaiming loudly that weak ankles are the direct result of much walking in low shoes. Ooze calf, kid and dongola are the favored materials, and medium heels and toes, not quite so low nor so broad as for the walking shoe, are oftenest seen. On the street the tie is worn with over-gaiters to match the dress; when meant for indoor wear coquettish lacings of ribbon or cord and a great variety of colors appear. A pretty Oxford tie, for house use only, is made from silvery blue ooze, piped around the top and the lace front with white ooze. Rose-colored ooze piped with green, scarlet piped with black, green and purple, orange or poppy red and black are other novelties. Russet, tan, coffee or mouse and the pale gray undressed kid, with patent leather vamps are less far-fetched, and these are often beaded with different colors, steel and garnet being a well-liked combination. A bit of narrow silk braid is often used for the lacing and this may tie in a simple bow or be fastened with a tiny jewelled clasp, the stones employed being chosen to harmonize in color with the vamp and beading. All sorts of pretty ideas are carried out in the arrangement of these ties. The ribbons give the ankle a gay finish when crossed and recrossed before threading the eyelets. Or the shoe may first be laced and the cords or ribbons then brought around the ankle and tied in front. The bright tints and dainty fancies of the low shoes will add much to the picturesqueness of the Summer toilet.

For negligee wear the varieties are increasing. The absurd little "mule" slipper consisting of nothing but a sole and a toe is idiotic outside the boudoir. The slipper of Turkish red leather is still allowed with the tea gown. All women with sensitive feet will be grateful for a novelty in foot wear which has seamless front, high back piece and no quarter, being entirely open on the sides.

Slippers are more worn than boots for evening, though women to whom slippers are not becoming wear boots of kid or satin to match the gown. The evening boot is made high of heel and pointed of toe curved in the high arched instep. It may be of the material of the dress when that is some rich heavy fabric like brocade. In every case it must follow the leading color of the gown. A novel evening shoe is of a pale blue corded silk with rows of narrow black velvet ribbon stretched across the vamp leaving spaces between of the same width as the velvet which are feather stitched in delicate pinks and greens. The heels are high and white and highly polished, and the shoes were made to order to wear with a blue brocade figured with pink flowers, and draped with blue gauze. Black velvet ribbons were worn at the throat and about the wrists in lieu of jewels. Other evening boots are of white silk ornamented in the same way with black velvet or gold braid.

There is little change in the form of the slipper for evening. Suede gloves and Suede slippers are usual accompaniments for the evening dress, but the newer mode is to wear slippers, of satin if necessary, to match the gown. The slipper has the pointed toe and high heel and is not very low in front. Silk bows or rosettes are used in ornamentation, but they must be small ones. The buckle is silver or gilt, sometimes jewelled, and may be large and square or smaller than those hitherto seen.



OUTING SHOES.

Small pompons of gold or silver thread are occasional ornaments. Nearly all slippers are profusely beaded. Bronze slippers are worn but not extensively. Bronze or Roman gold buckles are used with them. The Centennial slipper and the Martha Washington are made in gold or silver kid beaded and tied with bright ribbon. The evening sandals gain in favor. They are made of white or the softest of dove gray kid, embroidered with cut steel and lined with flesh pink satin. The Egyptian slipper is another novelty. It is made of undressed kid of a dark serpent green with the toe beaded in dark olive green beads.

A strenuous effort is being made to bring back the white stocking for street wear, but it will not succeed. ELLEN OSBORN.

MRS. ASTOR AT HOME.

The Small but Sumptuous Apartment in Which She Receives Her Friends.

Mrs. William B. Astor's reception-room is a snug, small, sumptuous apartment that looks out on Fifth avenue through a single window, cased in ebony wood and smothered in hangings of turquoise blue silk and indigo-tinted lace. The walls, says Clara Belle, in the Philadelphia Press, are hung in turquoise silk, with a decorative dado and a canvas-painted ceiling, and the ebony finish of the wood-work is as beautifully polished as a piece of onyx. In the center of the parquetry floor is an odd design of small Persian rugs, inlaid as it were in a field of garnet terry. Precious rugs drape the small divans, and superb specimens of needle paintings are shown in the chair coverings. The most attractive article of furniture is a small upright piano of light mahogany, beautifully embellished with panels of carved silver, symbolic of music and song.

Figures of cupids and busts of children fill the corners of the room with beauty, and as the visitor enters she passes under the glossy green branches of a small palm tree that stands on a pedestal of polished green marble. All the ornaments are of Dresden china, and the fantastic beauty and grace of the figures, the variety of design and brilliancy of color produce an effect both novel and agreeable. On the walls hang brackets, baskets and pockets of flowery porcelain, and about the metal cabinet, along the edges of small stands and fairly crowding the piano shelf are shepherds and shepherdesses, troubadours, peasant girls and court figures, no two alike, and each outrivaling the other in gayety and color. Another feature of this room is the splendid array of artificial flowers, a variety of decoration, by the way, that Mrs. Astor is very fond of.

Violets, lilies, lilacs, feverfews, hyacinths, buttercups and a little wilderness of field flowers are knotted together in clustering bouquets and freight the wheelbarrows, vases and jardinieres of Dresden china, while in the slender forms of crystal and jewelled ware are roses, asters, japonicas and magnolias of such a remarkable composition as to challenge detection in a flower show without the assistance of touch or smell. The rose blossoms were brought from France last summer, and the sum paid for them would have procured a very nice supply of cut flowers for an entire season. All the hangings about the room are made of rich, blue silk canvas, handsomely worked in silver threads. The family crest, done on a field of scarlet and white in silk, silver and gold, and mounted in banner form, is the glory of an east corner.

Mrs. W. W. Astor's callers are directed to a little Pompeiian room, finished in black wood and richly hung with crimson, the silk twill covering not only the walls and windows, but paneling the doors and draping furniture, table and mantel-shelf. The color is that warm blood-red that makes a plain face pretty and a pretty face glorious. By means of a large and beautifully embroidered screen the room can be provided with a snuggery, and it is here that the lovely young mistress sees an intimate friend who has only a moment to stop and a word to say. The fire-place has a delightful profusion of brasses, and among the furniture is a little tete-a-tete table spread with a dainty china service, where the refreshing cup of vanilla cocoa or sweet chocolate is brewed with jeweled fingers and discussed with fragments of Four Hundred reputation.

There is a Matrimony Club in Baltimore. It is both skirted and kilted. That is to say, in understood English, both male and female membership is allowed. Those who join it wear badges, showing to other members that they are marriageable and want to "get there." It is a novel idea, and especially helpful to the girls.

The Constitutionalist.

THE FLAG.

Centennial events of marked importance in our national history have been appropriately honored. The Declaration of American Independence, the adoption of the Constitution, and the inauguration of the first President thereunder, have in turn justly evoked enthusiastic commemoration.

Such was the discharge of patriotic duty.

Still the roll of [illegible] contains another centennial, which, although passed unobserved, brings to mind rare and valuable consideration.

June 14, [illegible], denoted the one hundredth anniversary of the official acceptance of the stars and stripes as the national ensign of the United States.

The Star Spangled Banner?

The Old Flag!

What illustrious memories cluster around its radiant folds?

How impressive in its silent eloquence!

It portrays alike the growth, grandeur, valor and prosperity of the American Union.

When that flag was first unfurled, only thirteen silvery stars, representing as many associated States, glistened on the azure field. From time to time others have been added, until now, forty-two emblems of sovereignty, blended together into one grand and powerful nationality, emit afar the cheering ray of Freedom's glory.

When the starry flag was born, a few millions of people, scattered along the seaboard, joyously hailed it as the protecting genius of their newly founded Republican government. Now, after the lapse of a hundred years, over fifty millions of sturdy freemen, peaceful denizens of a vast and fruitful domain washed on either side by the briny waves of the Atlantic and Pacific, and stretching in unbroken unity from Alaska to Florida, and from the British frontier to that of Mexico, greet it with like devotion and confidence.

Our Flag!

How glorious in its history!

How animating its destiny!

On land and water it has been heroically upheld and carried in triumph through many a fierce conflict.

Legions have valiantly defended it in war. Countless legions in every clime reverence its hope-inspiring fame.

In peace, too, has it achieved victories, among the greatest of which is the living proof it presents to the world of the justice, permanence and superior excellence of free representative institutions, of human rights and privileges, of the Republic of Washington.

All honor to the American Flag!

It has proudly waved a century. May it so continue with increasing [illegible] lustre.

When Freedom from her mountain height
Unfurled her standard to the air,
She tore the azure robe of night,
And set the stars of glory there.
She mingled with its gorgeous dyes
The milky baldric of the skies,
And striped its pure, celestial white
With streakings of the morning light;
Then from his mansion in the sun
She called her eagle bearer down,
And gave into his mighty hand
The symbol of her chosen land.

Flag of the free heart's hope and home,
By angel hands to valor given;
Thy stars have lit the welkin dome,
And all thy hues were born in heaven.
For ever float that standard sheet!
Where breathes the foe but falls before us,
With Freedom's soil beneath our feet,
And Freedom's banner streaming o'er us.

One hundred and twenty-three different people of this city and North Plainfield were mentioned in THE PRESS of Friday. That is our "high-water mark" as a newspaper, but we shan't stop there. Yet what a marvelous record for a daily in Plainfield—over one hundred of your friends and neighbors mentioned by name and something told about each, in one single issue of THE PRESS.

St. Mary's Congregation's Subscription.

The collection taken up in St. Mary's church for the Johnstown sufferers, Sunday, amounted to $100. The sum would be larger only a good many members of the congregation had already subscribed to the various committees here and in New York. A check for the above amount was sent to the Treasurer of the City fund, J. K. Myers, Esq. It was announced that the names of the contributors would be published in the local papers, but THE PRESS was able to obtain only the following names:

The "New York World" Says.

"You don't know what prohibition means until you come over my way," said a Plainfielder, of New Jersey, yesterday. "Everything about our town is closed tighter than a drum. No, we haven't voted on local option, but the Council is divided on the subject and so evenly that licenses cannot be obtained for love or money. A majority would favor high license, but the saloon men refuse to grant them, expecting that some of the hotel-men will come over to their views and make licenses general.

"Quite a number of New Yorkers come over to the big Netherwood Hotel to secure engaging rooms for the Summer. They are splendidly warm and thirsty and you can imagine their surprise when even the luxury of a 'small bottle' in a private room is refused them. The bar is corked up tight and you can't even get wine at your meals. It is tough on the landlord and if something doesn't happen soon they will all be left."

[The first half of the above, is the words of a fool or a falsifier. Liquor of all kinds is sold without restriction all over the city and in all kinds of shops, except at the saloons and hotels that have in past years conducted the business in a respectable way and paid thousands of dollars into the city's treasury for the privilege. The latter paragraph, however, is true—alas, too true. The [illegible] Councilmen have already driven from The Netherwood wealthy families who would spend their money among Plainfield merchants, and in some cases permanently locate here. But they won't stay where a half-dozen [illegible] men interfere with their privilege of [illegible] a glass of [illegible] with their [illegible]. —ED.]

Prohibition at Plainfield.

(From the [illegible])

[illegible] ought to have a license to run a saloon in Plainfield. So he went into North Plainfield and got the Borough [illegible] to give [illegible] license [illegible] thirsty Plainfielders who [illegible] on their own [illegible]. So the City of Plainfield loses Mr. [illegible]'s $100 license fee, yet he carries on just as big a business here as he chooses [illegible] within the City's limits is absolutely unrestricted.

"CERTAINLY BETTER."

(From the Elizabeth Journal.)

The Plainfield Press says that "intoxicating liquors are being sold in fifty-two places" in that city, and "the proportion of whiskey (good and bad) that is sold is much greater than the amount of beer or cider intoxicating liquor." This is certainly a very different story from that told about Plainfield a few short months ago. Then it was shown, and quite conclusively, that high license had—to say the least—kept the number of saloons down to thirteen, notwithstanding the fact that the city had grown rapidly and had received a large accession of factory employes through the building of new machine shops. It must be taken into account that the Press does not look at this matter from the standpoint of either Prohibitionists or Republicans; but it certainly would not make the statement, giving actual number of drinking-places, unless it had some ground. If this [illegible] is the result of shutting up all hotels and "respectable" places, and refusing licenses to any, then it is time that the original thirteen drinking places were licensed. It is certainly better to have thirteen hotels and saloons and $6,500 per annum in the city treasury, from license fees, than to have four times that number of drinking places and not a dollar of revenue.

[We do not look at the above, nor any question so vitally affecting the city's interest, from a Prohibitionist's, a Republican's, nor any other biased or irrational standpoint. We view it with an unprejudiced eye from the heights of a mountain of common sense. Every man who has an ounce of honesty and judgment in his composition, will agree with the Journal and THE PRESS—it is better to have thirteen respectable hotels and saloons licensed and paying the city a revenue of $500 each, besides helping to suppress illegal traffic, than that 52 illegitimate places should be selling it without restriction.—ED.]

FETE OF THE SEVENTH DAY BAPTISTS.

Never a record is made of an entertainment by the people of the Seventh Day Baptist Society of this city, but what credit must be given for the novelty and originality in many ways and means. They are the inventors or discoverers of most of the best features that are adopted by other churches and Sunday schools as the better part of subsequent entertainments.

Thursday's Fete on the lawn of Mr. George H. Babcock's home, was no exception in this particular. The idea was original—the arranging of the booths to represent the senses—and the scheme was carried out in many novel ways. The willing and earnest hands, too, that always join together in bringing about the [illegible] arranged, uniformly insures successful accomplishment among the Seventh Day Baptists.

The spacious grounds were lighted with electricity especially for the occasion, and illuminated at its boundaries with the most gorgeous lanterns manufactured in Japan. There was also a miniature lake, traversed by a fully equipped boat. The wiring of the grounds and the arrangements of the electric lights, was done by Mr. Fred S. Dunn.

Especially beautiful was the flower booth, banked with a solid back ground of ferns, draped overheads with growing ivy and smilax, and filled with rare exotics, other potted plants and the richest of cut flowers.

An Edison phonograph was a feature in great demand. The most beautiful selections played by a full orchestra, were reproduced with marvelous perfection to the ears of all. The art gallery contained 40 subjects from "Rosa Bonheur's" Horse Fair, to the "Battery of the Home Club" by the Umpire.

Mr. George H. Babcock gave the many curious visitors to his tent, a glimpse into the future. It was a stereopticon view of the new Seventh Day chapel, to be built on Fifth street between Central and Madison avenues. Architect Teale's sketch showed a handsome building of rock-faced stone from foundation to the third-roof of the tower at its corner. The lines were substantial yet graceful, and the building would adorn any locality. Ten thousand dollars has been raised for its erection and furnishing. It will contain thirteen class rooms for the Sabbath school, a parlor 20 by 31, "work" room and kitchen. The class rooms, including two contained in the gallery, can all be thrown open into one large auditorium. Work will be commenced at once.

In spite of the many other attractions elsewhere, last evening, the attendance at the Fete was over three hundred, and the net receipts will undoubtedly reach one hundred and fifty dollars.

Those in charge, and those to whom is due the credit of the conception, completion and consummation of the affair, were as follows:

The flower booth, typical of the sense of smelling, was charmingly presided over by Mrs. Arthur Titsworth, assisted by her sister, Mrs. George Titsworth, Miss Florence Potter and Miss Mabel Potter.

The features of Hearing were arranged by Mr. D. E. Titsworth, and in one of the booths devoted to that sense, Mr. George Rogers led a parlor orchestra in a programme of pleasing selections.

The booth of Feeling was in charge of Mrs. J. D. Titsworth, chairman, and Mrs. Amanda Maxson, Mrs. C. E. Dunham and Miss Anna Titsworth.

Mrs. F. A. Dunham was chairman of the Committee on Seeing, but was subsequently called away by the serious illness of her father. Mrs. Robert Gorton, Miss Florence Titsworth, Miss Mary Lewis, and Messrs. George H. Babcock and Robert Gorton, were in charge of the art gallery and stereopticon.

The tables of Tasting were under the auspices of Mrs. C. H. Randolph, Mrs. Thad. Smith and Mrs. J. G. Miller. The waitresses were: Mrs. J. M. VanSickle, Miss Lucy Dunham and Miss Gertie Lewis. Miss May Tomlinson and Miss Grace Lewis were the cashiers.

Mrs. G. H. Babcock served the lemonade, while Miss Bessie Titsworth and Miss Mabel Maxson had in charge the "Lady of the Lake."

—The New Jersey Editorial Association will occupy the week beginning June 24 in visiting Watkins Glen, Mauch Chunk and Niagara Falls.

A Passenger Coach off the Track.

The 1.35 train from this city Monday afternoon, took the siding near Cranford to let the Washington express pass. When returning back on the main track, the brakeman turned the switch before the last car was over, and the hind trucks were thrown off. A delay of thirty minutes resulted.

Albert Tilney Elected President.

The Yale University Base Ball Association at New Haven, Conn., last evening, elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Albert Arthur Tilney of Plainfield; Vice President, Herbert McBride of Cleveland, O.; Treasurer, Edgar Ames of St. Louis, Mo.; Secretary, Samuel G. Thompson of Pottsville, Pa.

A Double Surprise.

A [illegible] party was tendered to Miss Elma Runyon and Miss Hattie Currie, at the home of the latter on Arlington avenue, Monday, the occasion being the birthday anniversary of the two ladies. The evening was pleasantly spent in dancing, playing games and the rendering of vocal and instrumental music. Refreshments were also served. The house and adjoining lawn were brilliantly illuminated with Japanese lanterns. Both of the young ladies were the recipients of numerous gifts.

Impressions of a Citizen.

Bishop McNamara's lectures in Reform Hall have, for the present, come to an end. Monday evening there was a large audience. He has had but one object—to reach the people. He called for them through the papers. They came in large numbers both Catholics and Protestants. He had but one thing to give them—the pure light of God's Word. He spared abuses among Protestants no more than among Catholics, with a courage rare indeed in these days. The words were needed. Young and old have received impressions never to be forgotten. They were refreshing and inspiring. Many are glad he came, and trust to see him here again.

Public School Notes.

The school census just completed by Assessor Hubbard, gives the total number of children in Plainfield between the ages of five and eighteen, as 2,674. Last year the number was 2,549.

State Superintendent E. O. Chapman will be invited to be present at the P. H. S. Commencement, Thursday evening of next week, at Music Hall. Governor Robert Stockton Green, has written Secretary L. F. Wadsworth of the Board of Education, that he much regrets his inability to be there and make an address.

The teachers have all been excused the days they have been absent during the past term, and will receive their salaries in full.

The Trustees have given their consent that the Stillman building may be lighted during the reception to be tendered the graduating class, by the classes of '87 and '88.

It is the decision of the Board that scholars who "go home" on Fridays and stay over Sunday with their parents in another county, are non-residents and must pay for their tuition as such although they may board in Plainfield during the whole week.

The Committee of Award appointed for the prizes in English Composition, Penmanship and Mathematics, have all accepted and will soon be hard at work.

THEY DISOBEYED THE BISHOP.

The Ladies' Aid Society of All Saints Episcopal church is not, as you might imagine from its title, an association for the relief of aged or indigent females. Perhaps it would be well to slightly transpose the words of their name and call it "The Ladies' Society for the Aid of All Saints Episcopal church." (They are not all saints, by any manner of means, but we will let that pass.) You see, this church of the sanctified membership is usually in a hole—financially speaking—for it carries on its shoulders—also financially speaking—that customary load which churches generally have to bear, a large, heavily built bonded debt.

Bonded debts come high, but we must have them. At least, that is the custom of the country. And yet, I remember, years ago, how Bishop Scarborough stood in that very pulpit, with all the sanctified congregation before him, and with burning words endeavored to dissuade them from mortgaging the church; but they did it.

Heigho! that was years ago, and since then the seasons have come and gone, and the people that sat in the church that far away Autumn Sunday have been growing older, and some of them have been carried from it, and some of their children have since joined the church and some have moved away, and the church looks hardly older than the day it was built. I wonder how many of the present congregation were sitting in those pews that day; I wonder if there ever comes over any of them a kind of vague, undefined doubt whether the real objects of the church have been very much farther advanced than they would have been if the people had followed the Bishop's friendly advice.

But dear me! we mustn't be so cynical. No one could have any feelings of that kind after seeing an affair like that of last Wednesday, where everyone was working just as hard as she possibly could and putting herself to no end of inconvenience, just in order that the thing should be a success, and solely because it was "for the benefit of the church."

I have been a dreadfully long time in coming to the point, haven't I? I assure you that when I started out I had no intention of wandering off in that way, but meant to record the simple fact that the Ladies' Aid Society of All Saints Episcopal church gave a garden party on the eleventh of June, from three to nine P. M., and that in spite of the rain and disagreeable day it was a success; that the Elizabeth Glee Club came down with a large contingent of ladies, which was a very gentlemanly thing to do; that the band played a waltz and everybody felt like dancing; that they kept perfectly still and didn't dance; that there was a magnificent rainbow, which Paul Tune and Harry Carter tried to make people pay for looking at; that they found they couldn't do it; that Mr. Sam Oliver made himself generally useful and worked like a trooper; that he looks for all the World like his brother and that we had to tie a blue ribbon around his arm so that people could tell them apart; that Mrs. George Kyte and Mrs. Rare Tom Nicholl had a table with no end of good things on it; that Miss Sykes and Miss Carrie Hall sold flowers; that Mrs. Hall had another table and Mrs. Sayre another and Miss Tune another and Mrs. Thomas another and Miss Maud Kyte and Mrs. Clarence W. Smith another; that Miss Carter and Miss Blanche Sayre were waitresses; that I really can't remember half the folks that did take part; that an overflow meeting was held the next day; that the total receipts were $——.

There, there, there! Didn't Miss Kyte tell me that I wasn't to "make any splurge?" and here I've been splurging for ever so many lines! Oh! fair ladies who aid the church of the sanctified membership, you forget, you forget that ADVERTISING is the true secret of success, and when you have an opportunity for free advertising such as that that I've been giving you, don't reject it, but take the advice of a friend, and WORK IT FOR ALL IT'S WORTH. And if you ever want any real advertising, or tickets printed, or programmes, or anything of that sort, why, you know where to come.

And now, if I have made any mistakes, I must humbly ask your pardon, and am, with most profound respect and esteem, very, very respectfully yours,

SUBURBAN SAUNTERER.

Dissolved by Mutual Consent.

The well-known clothing firm heretofore existing under the name of Messrs C. Schepflin and Co. of this city, was Monday dissolved, by mutual consent. Mr. Wm. A. Conger, the junior member of the firm, retires, and Mr. Edward Winter associates himself with the firm. The name of the firm will remain the same as before.

A Exciting Bowling Contest.

This evening on the Olympia alleys, there will be a bowling contest between twenty of the most expert gentlemen bowlers of the city, for three prizes valued at twenty dollars. The public is welcome to attend.

Protection From Fire.

The fire department arrangements for protection from fire on the Fourth of July have been completed by the Board of Engineers, but the appointments have not yet been announced. Beginning at midnight on the the third, there will be a man on duty in the tower for thirty-six consecutive hours, and all the fire department horses, engineers and tillermen will also be on duty during that time.

That's the Latest.

The "progressive dinner" is the latest society fad. There are as many courses served as guests, and between each course the entire party change places at the table, thus passing entirely around it. At one of these dinners given by a young lady at Morristown, recently, the hostess painted on the invitation of each gentleman the portrait of the lady expected to accompany him, and upon each lady's invitation the portrait of her escort.

No Loss to the Church.

The insurance policies on the new First Presbyterian church building, contained "Lightning clauses," and, in consequence, the companies will make good the damage to the peak of the spire during Saturday's storm.

Adjusters were here Tuesday, and with powerful field-glasses endeavored to appraise the loss from the street below. The damage is slight but the erection of a scaffold to repair it, will be rather costly.

No Lack of Music and Mirth, There.

The Broadway Theatre in New York, is probably the coolest theatre for Summer performances in this country. Lighted throughout by electricity, it has a system of natural ventilation, unsurpassed. This is one of the many features which favor the Summer run of Francis Wilson and Company in "The Oolah" at that house. People know they can go and see this most comical of comic operas with some degree of comfort and satisfaction.

"The Oolah" is now in the second month at the Broadway. The business continues as large as ever. Miss Lena Merville, who was engaged by Manager Canby some time ago, made her first appearance with the Francis Wilson Company Monday night of last week, and she had quite a reception. She gave a capital performance of Bengowna, the betrothed of The Oolah, and she will no doubt become a permanent member of the organization. There is no lack of fun in "The Oolah" now. It is one constant wave of merriment from beginning to end.

A Plainfield Woman Will Open the Discussion.

The Union County Christian Endeavor Union will hold a conference on Friday evening, June 21, in the First Baptist church at Elizabeth. The societies of the First Presbyterian, Trinity Reformed and Congregational churches of this city became members of the County Union last Fall and will be in attendance at the coming conference. Since the last meeting societies have been organized in various parts of the county, and all are invited to be present. If the Secretary has not sent invitations, any society will please regard the public notice as an invitation.

The conference promises to be of much interest. "The discussions on methods of work will be opened by Miss E. J. Bainbridge of this city, who will read a paper on "Committee Work." There will also be a paper on "The Pledge," and an address by F. F. Everitt, Secretary of the N. J. State Union Y. P. S. C. E. Presidents of local societies will read their minute reports, and are asked to send statistics. The musical programme will be very attractive.

A Silver Wedding at Hillside Cottage, Scotch Plains.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—We were among a numerous assemblage of delighted friends who Thursday evening, assisted in celebrating the 25th anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Miller, an event long anticipated by them. The house was beautifully decorated with flowers and vines. Outside among the trees were two canopies from which were suspended Chinese lanterns. The scene was very beautiful both from far and near. To add additional beauty to the surroundings, myriads of fire flies flashed their little lanterns as if they, too, enjoyed the occasion and wished to do their part toward making it a brilliant success.

A string band from Elizabeth gave forth sweet music, and all were welcomed to the wedding feast. Everyone present enjoyed the happy occasion, and many kind reminders were left behind to be enjoyed by the recipients—who so richly deserve them. May the golden succeed the silver, and the future bring them continued health and happiness.

A GUEST.

The Recent Monuments Erected in the "Home of the Dead."

Mr. Peleg S. Tefft, representing the Smith Granite Company of Westerly, R. I., has just completed the setting up after two weeks' work of two more handsome and costly monuments in Hillside Cemetery, making five in all which the Smith Company has erected in the "home of the dead" in this city.

The first of the two latter monuments which are now located in the cemetery, was erected for Mr. Wm. G. Anderson of No. 26 Franklin place, and includes the enclosure of granite posts and bronze rails. The monument represents a cottage, and cost upwards of $3,000.

The second monument was erected for Mr. J. L. VanNest of East Second Street. This monument is rustic in design, consists of two stones, one side being polished and lettered, and the other side rough. The cost of the monument was considerable.

In conversation with a PRESS reporter Mr. Tefft said that years ago, he used to go to school with Mr. Geo. H. Babcock, and his present partner Mr. Stephen Wilcox, the latter now Summering at Westerly, R. I. He has been with the firm for 20 years, he says.

It may be interesting to state that the Smith Granite Company, employs 300 men, eight of whom are on the road "setting" stones. The company also has agents in the larger cities, and monuments have been sent by this firm as far as San Francisco and Cuba.

Upon Mr. Tefft's authority it is stated that Mr. Geo. H. Babcock of Plainfield, started the Westerly Echo, the first paper printed in Westerly, R. I., which eventually merged into the "Westerly Narragansett Weekly," a paper of big proportion and large circulation. Mr. Tefft says he used to go to the office, wherein the paper was published, and help the proprietor "run off" the edition on a hand press. Mr. Babcock is the owner of a handsome monument in Riverbend Cemetery, R. I., which cost in the neighborhood of $6,000.

—The City Council will meet in adjourned session on Friday evening, to consider the Water Works question.

IS PLAINFIELD HEALTHIER WITHOUT SEWERAGE?

A Review of the Case From One Who Has Made a Study of "Water Works in Plainfield."

The following letter, which is the only one that covers the ground in a complete, substantial and grammatical way, and which was recently sent by ex-Mayor Randolph to the Common Council's Committee on Water, the readers of this paper will be glad of an opportunity of reading in full:

To the Committee on Water Supply and Sewerage:

From time to time for a dozen years past, efforts have been made to induce the City of Plainfield, through its authorities, to adopt a system of artificial water supply. For good reasons the subject has each time been postponed. But the advocates of schemes of this sort continue to urge them. I am informed that at present the discussion is already so far advanced that a report of your committee is ready to be submitted to the Common Council, and that the report will favor the introduction of water through conduits, and other plans incident to such a scheme.

Your committee has invited communications from citizens on this subject, and, whilst apologizing for having deferred the expression of my views until this late hour, I feel it a duty, even now, to place them before you. I had not really supposed that anything approaching a decision in favor of this scheme would be reached this Summer; and, in common with many well-informed citizens, I believe it would be a serious mistake for the Council to take precipitate action. Whilst it is true that the subject itself is an old one, no well considered plan has ever been presented, certainly none that has met the approval of the citizens and tax-payers. And these, as they must bear the burdens and take the consequences attendant upon this movement, must surely be heard before the city is committed.

When I entered upon the duties of the Mayoralty about eight years ago, I was partially impressed with the idea that a system of water-works would be beneficial to Plainfield. I made as careful a study of the subject as possible during the two years of my service, noted with some care the probable advantages and disadvantages of adopting such a system, examined questions of health connected therewith, ascertained the trend and grade of the territory to be covered, procured (without cost to the city) the opinions and advice of some of the most distinguished engineers on the subject; computed as nearly as possible the cost of such an undertaking, and reached the conclusion in my own mind that the adoption of any such scheme as had been proposed would be prejudicial to the best interests of our city.

Among the facts and arguments as they then appeared to me, and as they now appear, are the following:

I. First and most important, the health of the City of Plainfield has been, and is now, better than it is likely to be after the introduction of a water supply, with, or without, a system of sewerage. I have known this settlement for upwards of forty years. During all of that period it has been an exceptionally healthy town. It is as much so today as it ever was. Meanwhile it has grown from a village of 1,500 people to a city (with borough adjoining) of about ten times that population. Statistics, carefully gathered for a score of years, have regularly shown the remarkable fact of which we are proud, and for which we should be thankful, that Plainfield is the healthiest city of its size, if not indeed the healthiest city of any size, in New Jersey. The death rate with us is at a minimum, notwithstanding the fact that many invalids, afflicted with chronic complaints, come here for their health. This favorable condition of things we owe, under Providence, to two circumstances—the first of which is the peculiar and most healthful soil on which we live; the other is the absence of artificial water systems. As to the soil itself, its character is at once our salvation and our assurance. We live over a deep bed of uncontaminated and well-nigh uncontaminable gravel. Our settlement is more than a century old, and the members of your committee can find at any time door yards in Plainfield in which wells and out-houses have stood near each other from the days of the earliest settlers, without the shadow of danger or injury to any family, many of the inhabitants having grown to old age in the houses built upon the same lots.

Any one who has had the soil beneath the worst neglected cesspool in Plainfield examined, will know that he has found there absolutely nothing but clean, fresh gravel. If he were to drive a well pipe (as our venerable Mayor Mele once did), right down through that gravel, he would find good potable water. He might have a sentiment against using it, but if he used it he would find it perfectly innocuous. No more significant fact could be stated than this to show that we do not need artificial water supply to protect us from contamination from vaults or cesspools.

During the period of my public service I had examinations and analyses made by our State geologist, Prof. Cook, of water taken from a number of different wells situated in different parts of Plainfield, including some from central portions of the city, where residences were closest together. Some of these were taken from the upper lake, or stream, beneath our houses, that which is found just below the upper stratum of gravel. Some of the water was taken from the supply which we find stored away below the hard-pan that underlies this gravel. In every case Prof. Cook found that the water was pure and healthy to drink.

When we reflect on the fact that in every town in New England, New York and New Jersey, into which an artificial water supply has been brought, malarial and other disorders have subsequently prevailed, it should surely make us pause before courting a change so injurious.

Irresponsible and anonymous statements have recently been published to the effect that reputable and distinguished physicians have ceased to recommend Plainfield as a sanitarium because it is in danger from lack of water and sewerage systems. There is not the slightest ground for such a statement, much less for such a medical opinion. Notwithstanding the croakers' prophecies the town is healthy, and is still a health resort. It will continue to be so until, or unless, it fall into the grip of the speculators.

II. Plainfield ought not to be delivered over to the mercy of any water company or of any water and sewerage company. Even a privilege to buy out such a company at some future time is only a delusion and snare. The estimates made by and for me indicated very clearly that a system adapted to the use of even the most thickly settled part of the city alone, would cost not far from $400,000, if well and thoroughly constructed, and with a suitable outlet for sewerage provided. It would be a particularly great misfortune to permit a cheaply constructed system to take possession of the ground. In this connection it might also be observed that, sooner or later, the cost and loss (if any) of any system adopted must fall upon the city. Whenever it does become necessary, therefore, to take up such an enterprise, it should be done in a manful way by the city itself and not turned over to speculators. But at this period in our history, it would, in my judgment, and in that of many others, be a most unwise proceeding to bond the city for the cost of water works. Our taxes have in various ways been increased from year to year until they are already too high, though not yet so high in some respects as those in some of our sister cities. We have seen the disaster brought about by extravagant and unnecessary municipal "improvements," and the warning furnished by the experience of others should be sufficient.

III. At present, no system of distributing the cost of such an enterprise as has been proposed is practicable, such as would be fair to the residents of the different portions of our much scattered town. Perhaps the projectors do not care for this, but the Council ought to care, and the people will. For example, it would not be fair for Netherwood or Evona to be held in responsibility for such a plan as might be designed chiefly or exclusively for the more crowded central portion of the city. This remark is by no means comprehensive, but will serve as an illustration of this point. Some day, if the town is allowed to grow naturally instead of being abnormally "boomed," we shall have a pretty solid settlement of three or four miles square, and can then, with much more equity and reason, give attention to this subject.

IV. Those of us who for many years have been permitted to enjoy our healthy and pleasant homes in Plainfield are reluctant to see a change attempted, which, as the closest observation and calculation shows us, must be detrimental alike to health and prosperity. We may indeed dismiss with contempt any endeavor to injure by falsehood the reputation of our city. But it is a more serious matter when it becomes possible that such falsehood, combined with a spirit of reckless speculation, may succeed either in injuring our public health or in enlarging our public burdens.

L. V. F. RANDOLPH.

Plainfield People in the Court of Appeals.

The Court of Errors and Appeals opened Tuesday. In its list of causes are: John Collins et ux., and Isaac R. Collins, Messrs Jackson & Codington for the defendant; Mulford Cole et al., and Sarah House and Wm. Hetfield, ex'rs., Messrs Jackson & Codington for the defendants; Eleanor B. Jones et al., ex'rs., and Marib Davenport, et al., Charles A. Reed, Esq., for the plaintiff.

Chief Doane Visits Easton.

On his return from Belvidere, last evening, Chief Doane stopped over in Easton and in company with Chief Smith of that place, inspected the fire department apparatus. Chief Doane speaks well of the Easton Fire Department. He says that seven men are kept on duty at all times in the city proper, with a reserve of fifteen call men. On College Hill, a suburb, there is a company of twelve call men. The horses are used for street sprinkling purposes, a duty which the Fire Department horses of this city should be engaged to do.

Reception to the Pupils.

The Dunellen school reception was held on Thursday evening at the residence of Mrs. A. E. Marlow, who kindly allowed the school the full control of her house. At 8:30 the parlors and reception rooms were filled with smiling faces of the scholars and their friends. Prof. Oley and his corps of efficient teachers were present to dignify the occasion and rejoice the small boy who was present in all his glory.

At nine o'clock the dancing was commenced by a grand march led by Miss Maggie Swackhamer and escort. Prof. Smith, of Somerville, as pianist, led the orchestra, and dancing, which continued until twelve o'clock was only interrupted by the refreshments served by the teachers, to which all did justice.

Every one enjoyed themselves to the utmost, the only cloud of disappointment which appeared was the sickness of the hostess, Mrs. Marlow, who was taken suddenly ill, but was able after a short rest to return to the parlors, where the guests were anxiously awaiting her.

At twelve o'clock the orchestra played "Home Sweet Home," and all departed well satisfied with their evening's enjoyment.

Saturday's Storm.

The thunder storm on Saturday afternoon was the heaviest experienced in this vicinity for many years. In addition to the damage done by the lightning, as reported in Saturday's PRESS, the Telephone Company's office was damaged to the extent of about $500, and several other residences were also struck. Among them were the houses on West Fifth street owned by Mr. Wm. V. Mundy and a house on West Third street, owned by Mr. James Brand. Both houses were considerably damaged.

Mrs. Walter Coon of East Second street, was standing in front of the kitchen stove while the storm was raging most fiercely, and a bolt of lightning struck the chimney, descending to the kitchen, severely burning Mrs. Coon on the feet.

During the storm a son of Mr. Solomon Flaig of East Front street, is reported to have been knocked down by a bolt of lightning, while attempting to close a window. In other parts of the city trees were struck.

A timely shower and the efforts of neighbors, saved the house of Mr. Charles McCutchen in Washington Park, from serious damage if not total destruction, during Saturday's storm.

A chimney at one corner was struck and shattered, and a few minutes after the sheathing of the roof of an adjoining tower began to smoke. Mr. H. P. Reynolds, with a friend who was visiting him, and Mr. Wm. H. Griffen, another neighbor, hurried to the assistance of Mr. McCutchen's servants. A ladder was secured by which they could reach the dangerous spot, and a few pails of water augmented by a fierce shower that just then set in, quenched the fire. The electric wires in the house were all burned out.

Guests at The Netherwood.

The Netherwood season is fairly opened, and already most of the best suites and single rooms are engaged and the majority occupied. Among the permanent guests now at the Hotel, are the following, of whom all but a very few are former guests:

Miss Hazel E. Westervelt, of East Second street, started on Saturday for Anthony, New Mexico, to be absent for six months or a year, during which time she will be the guest of her brother.

The serious illness of Miss Burt, of the Bryant School, has compelled her temporary resignation from professional duties. Her many friends will unite in a sincere wish for her permanent recovery.

Miss Lilian Fritts, daughter of Dr. J. T. Fritts of Park avenue, will accompany Miss Julia E. Bulkley and party on their European tour. Miss Fritts will prolong her stay and travel extensively on the Continent.

The ladies of the Crescent Avenue church choir will hold a bazaar in the Fall, the proceeds of which will go towards the $1,500 the choir pledged themselves to raise, besides their individual subscriptions, for the extension and alteration fund.

Master "Jimmy" Arnold, son of Borough Clerk James K. Arnold, is perhaps the happiest boy in the borough. He is the owner of a handsome pony and cart, of which he is very proud, and his friends will doubtless be given an opportunity to test the speed of the animal.

The death is announced at Haddonfield, N. J., on the 16th instant, of Mary C., widow of the late John Harris, formerly of this city. The funeral took place at the residence of the deceased's daughter, Mrs. Geo. W. Appleton, at Haddonfield, on Wednesday and interment was made in the Methodist Cemetery in this city.

At the residence of the bride, on Orange street, June 12, occurred the marriage of Miss Pauline Doeckler and Mr. Jacob Beckman, the latter of Fordham, N. Y. Rev. E. M. Rodman performed the ceremony. The bridesmaid was Miss Christine Doeckler, a sister of the bride, and Mr. Charles Beckman did service as best man.

Manager Chas. Runyon of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company, is entitled to great credit for extinguishing the fire in the cupola over the company's office in the Stelle Building, during the shower on Saturday. Mr. Runyon and his men worked all of Saturday night and Sunday repairing the telephone circuit.

The Rev. Cornelius Schenck contemplates seeking a rest and entire change this Summer by spending his vacation in a trip to Europe. His earnest labors during the past season have accomplished so much in the growth of the church and the lightening of its debt, it is natural to suppose that the consistory would be glad to extend this Summer's vacation another month.

Right Eminent, Albert D. Winfield, of the Grand Commandery of the State of New Jersey, will visit Plainfield, on the evening of June 26, with other officers of the Grand Commandery, for the purpose of inspecting Trinity Commandery, No. 17, K. T., of this city. In all probability officers and members of other Commanderies of the State will be present and participate in the interesting ceremonies.

Mr. Thomas B. Armstrong, the affable and efficient managing clerk of Reynolds' pharmacy, is rapidly recovering after a severe sickness from fever. In a week or so he will undoubtedly be able to take a vacation trip amid other scenes, where he will regain entirely his past good health.

Mr. L. Kayser and family of New York city, have taken possession of one of Mayor Male's new residences on Kensington avenue near Putnam street, where they will permanently reside. Mr. Kayser is a son-in-law of Mr. James Lyon, President of the Third avenue surface railroad of New York city.

Mr. Wm. M. Smith of Elm street, who recently drew up the engrossed set of resolutions presented by the City Council to ex-Chief of Police, Chas. W. Dodd, has designed the diplomas for the graduating class of the High School. The work on the diplomas shows the skill of an artist, and is certainly very pretty.

Captain Wygant, of the U. S. A., with his wife and family, arrived from New Orleans, Thursday of last week, just in time to be present at the silver anniversary of the wedding of his sister, Mrs. Edward Miller, at Scotch Plains, as reported in The Press. The Captain is on his way to a new post, at Arizona.

Mr. F. X. Schoonmaker, one of the most pleasing orators of the day, is a resident of this city and a member of the State Board of Education. As Governor Green writes that it will be impossible for him to address the people at the High school commencement of next week, The Press would, in all modesty, suggest Mr. Schoonmaker as a fitting substitute.

School Prizes.

Miss Rocap's school closed Wednesday for three months. There were devotional exercises and singing, and the year's reports were read. Each pupil received a pretty souvenir, and the following prizes were awarded:

Prize in Attendance.....Miss Nellie [illegible]
" " Spelling.....Miss Florence [illegible]
" " ".....Master Bryant G. Herman
" " Deportment.....Master [illegible]
" " S elling.....Master Fred Dorman
" " Scholarship.....Master Charles [illegible]

Refreshments were served, and all went home with light hearts and many pleasant remembrances. Miss Rocap will open a primary school for boys in the Fall.

PLAINFIELD'S STREET RAILWAY.

Unexpected delays still occur at the Philadelphia factory where is being constructed the street railway car that Mr. Daft has ordered for a public exhibition and test of his proposed ways and means of transportation for this city. The car is being built upon the latest models for the purpose, and fitted with the most improved appurtenances and conveniences, consequently vexatious hindrances have arisen and the car will not be finished before July.

The piece of trial track that is to be laid on the Martine property, just off of Broadway and between Carlton and Kensington avenues, is not begun yet; but will be ready in time. After the car is sent from the shops to the Daft Works where it will be fitted with its motive power and storage batteries, the track can be constructed. If upon a thorough test in every way—ease of starting; speed; running power when loaded, ascending grades and turning curves; quickness of stopping or reversing, etc.—the service proves satisfactory, the franchise will be granted Mr. Daft for the exclusive right to construct and maintain a street railway in Plainfield.

The route is not yet definitely fixed upon, but will probably be through Front, Peace, Sixth and Seventh streets and Clinton avenue. Maps were given a number of citizens of judgment for their marking as to the most practicable route through that part of the city, that would serve the greatest number of people. The result of this deliberation by many minds was a labyrinth, the traversing of which, if possible, would have resulted in the car colliding with itself at every street corner, and eventually reaching its destination about once in six months.

Every cent of the money necessary to construct the road and plant, and equip them, is ready. The contractor who is again going over the ground today, will put himself under a forfeit to complete the road and restore the streets to their former, or better, condition, within sixty days from the time he first breaks the earth. The road will cost $31,000, and the entire plant, equipments, and rolling stock as much more. That everything will be of the very best is proven by these figures. Surely Plainfield is to be congratulated upon the Mr. Daft.

He Must Pay Rachel the Money He Borrowed.

Mrs. Rachel Levy, the daughter of Mrs. Samuel Brier of this city, sued Solomon Levy, from whom she was divorced absolutely by a rabbi, and afterward by the Supreme Court, in the New York City Court June 11, for $1,500, which he borrowed from her shortly after their marriage.

He gave her a worthless check when she demanded the money. She had him put in Ludlow Street Jail, where he is still confined. The case was tried before Judge Holme and a jury, and the plaintiff was given a verdict of $1,676.26.

MUSIC AND AMATEUR THEATRICALS.

The gathering that completely filled Seminary Hall, last Thursday, was thoroughly representative of the higher circles of Plainfield's society, and its culture, wealth and philanthropy. Tickets at one dollar and fifty cents each had been sold to the Hall's capacity, and $340 was realized from the occasion towards the relief of the survivors of the inundation at Johnstown and its vicinity.

The event had been arranged by Mrs. George Wharton Edwards assisted by Mrs. Rowland Cox, and the programme included amateur theatricals and a musical interlude under the direction of Miss Ella Haines, of Netherwood. Great credit is due also to those who took part in different ways, for their individual efforts towards the perfect success of the whole.

The audience was a brilliant one in all ways. Much handsome dress was displayed, many of the ladies being in full evening costume and their escorts also. Their appreciation was thorough and pronounced. Each number on the musical programme being encored with hearty sincerity.

Miss Haines was compelled to repeat her skilled rendition of Anton Rubinstein's Caprice; and Mrs. Augustus C. Baldwin sang "Scots Wha Hae!" as an encore to her announced selection. She was accompanied by her sister, Miss Hattie Gardiner.

Mr. James Metcalf, of the New York Philharmonic, sang Goring Thomas' "Summer Night" in a grand and expressive way that captured the admiration of his hearers. He was accompanied with piano and 'cello. His encore piece was another most agreeable selection, beautifully rendered. Mr. Ernest Muldener, Jr., played the same violoncello solo as The Press was called upon to praise upon the occasion of Mrs. James L. Anthony's soiree musicale at her Netherwood home, last September.

Two little farces constituted the theatricals. They were:

MY UNCLE'S WILL.

Charles Cashmere.....by Mr. James Murray
Mr. Barker.....by Mr. Edwards
Florence Marigold.....by Miss Stewart

THE LOAN OF A LOVER.

Captain Amersfort.....by Mr. Perkins
Peter Spyk.....by Mr. Titsworth
Swilzel.....by Mr. Edwards
Delve.....by Mr. W. Stewart
Gertrude.....by Mrs. Edwards
Ernestine Rosendaal.....by Miss Stewart

To particularize the merits of the members of each cast is unnecessary, because an universal praise of all is just. Mrs. Edwards' interpretation of Gertrude's part was remarkably perfect—and she filled the play with life and a number of sweet songs. Mr. Titsworth as Peter was also beyond criticism from even a professional stand point. Miss Stewart was a strikingly beautiful heroine of both plays, and the others filled their parts admirably.

Each one present was given a souvenir of the occasion that had been reproduced by the photogravure process from a design by Mr. George Wharton Edwards. At the close of the programme, that original design as it came from the artist's pencil, framed in white and silver, was sold at auction by Mr. Alex. Gilbert. It was secured for $85 by Mr. Wm. B. Wadsworth. The plate from which the souvenirs were printed was disposed of in the same way for ten dollars, and now graces the walls of The Press office, an imperishable token of the labors of Mr. and Mrs. Edwards in behalf of suffering humanity.

The net financial result after paying slight incidental expenses, was $340, which will be forwarded to the Johnstown sufferers by Mr. J. K. Myers, as "From the Ladies of Plainfield."

THE BETHEL CONCERT.

The concert at Bethel chapel has become one of the events of the season, and it is anxiously awaited each year with great expectations of enjoyment that are exhaustively realized. In fact no musical affair in any line that is given in this city, so thoroughly fills the bill or so overflows with money's worth.

Thursday the chapel was packed before the colored folks themselves arrived, and numbers were turned away at the door. The programme consisted of twenty selections, almost every one of which was encored, consequently the complete satisfaction of even so large a crowd, was consummated. Mr. Alfred W. Duxbury had trained the vocalists and arranged the affair, so there was not the slightest falter in the programme. It is needless to say, also, that the gratification of all present was unconfined in expression.

The "opening chorus" of the evening was by six little girls dressed in white, with garlands of daisies over their shoulders, who sang very prettily, "I'll Keep the Pledge!" for which song and sentiment they were encored.

Miss Charlotte Allen, arrayed in gray silk, demi train, and pink roses, gave that new song, "The Letter in the Candle," very effectively, and upon a recall feelingly inquired, "How can I Leave Thee?"

Mr. Benj. Sutton ably rendered in fine style, "A True Little Heart, and a True Little Home," ending with a forte flourish which was loudly appreciated. He responded with "Old Dog Tray," as promised in The Press of Monday of last week.

Miss F. M. Johnson was an imported songstress who showed considerable cultivation. She sang in good time and a black silk dress, with much effect, "Saved From the Storm," and "Hearest Thou?" and as encores, "Suwanee River," and "The Song of Home Sweet Home."

Mr. James Harris gave "Nancy Lee" in an appropriate way, and was followed by Mrs. Ida Dunham, a symphony in gray and white. Mrs. Dunham has a fine voice, and sang "The Last Rose of Summer," succeeded by "The Village Maid," very well.

Mrs. Reasoner, the contralto, was never in better voice, and rendered "Had I Never, Never Known Thee," in her best style. She wore blue cashmere and white lace.

Mr. J. Wesley Smith, with the assistance of Miss Dewey, sang "Where the Rippling Waters Flow" in the key of eight flats. His encore, "Fairly Caught," was quite natural.

Miss Alice Wood, one of the favorites of old, was clad in white lace over blue. She gave "Dear Robin, I'll be True," in great shape, followed by "Gates Ajar," without climbing the bars.

There was much expression in Mr. Wm. Barrick's rendition of "My Old Village Home," but it was surpassed by Mrs. Fisher in her "Sighing For Thee." She was an etching, in pink under white lace, and warbled as an encore, "Silver Threads Among the Gold."

Orlando's orchestra gave various pleasing selections. Flowers were numerous, every one receiving one or more bouquets. Mrs. Dunham was favored with two baskets and one bouquet—one of the former being completely enveloped in tissue paper, which the usher afterward removed, and revealed its splendors.

A great deal of the success is due Miss Dewey for her sympathetic playing and the manner in which she adapted herself to the ad libitum of the soloists.

Under Clothing for the Hospital Wanted.

There being a great demand in the Hospital for underclothing that has been partly worn, the Ladies Auxiliary Board desire that there should be a generous contribution. They have always met with willing responses in making an appeal, and they are confident that this will not pass unnoticed. Send direct to the Hospital or leave with Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, Secretary, 10 LaGrande avenue.

Out on Strike.

A strike of miniature dimensions occurred in a butcher shop in North Plainfield last Tuesday when two of the four men employed in the shop quit work because their employer refused to accede to their demand for shorter hours. At last accounts the men were still out, but no trouble is apprehended. The two men who refused to go out, had their wages raised Wednesday.

A Reception to Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson.

A reception was given on Friday afternoon by the Elizabeth W. C. T. U., No. 2, at No. 206 Broad street, that city, to Mrs. Dr. T. H. Tomlinson of this city, President of the County W. C. T. U. There was a good audience and Mrs. Tomlinson entertained the Union for half an hour with a delightful and instructive address. Following the reception a luxurious supper was served by the ladies.

Plainfielders to Speak.

The Alumni Association of the University at Alfred Centre, N. Y., is to hold its annual meeting at that place on Wednesday, June 26. Among the speakers for the occasion announced by Dr. Daniel Lewis, President of the Association, are Rev. Dr. Armitage of New York city; Charles Potter, Jr., and George H. Babcock of this city; Judges Seymour Dexter, of Elmira, N. Y., John B. Cassoday of Madison, Wis., and N. M. Hubbard of Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Wedding Bells.

At the residence of the bride's parents on East Fifth street, Thursday afternoon, occurred the marriage of Miss Anna Lucretia Brymer and Mr. Wm. F. Oliver, both of this city. Rev. Cornelius Schenck officiated. A strange incident in connection with the marriage is the fact that Prof. Oliver, of Fort Scott, Kansas, a brother of the groom, arrived in this city unexpectedly, Thursday, just in time to attend the wedding, having been detained on the road by the recent floods in Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Oliver left for Philadelphia, and Prof. Oliver sailed for Europe Saturday.

A Bereaved and Heartfelt Tribute.

Of that noble man and venerable actor John Gilbert, who died in Boston Monday afternoon, and whose widow is the sister of Mr. Wm. L. Gavett, of this city, a New York paper of last night, has the following to say:

"The temptation to humbug is so strong just now upon the stage that we can ill afford to lose from the boards such true artists as Lester Wallack and John Gilbert."

Mr. Gilbert died at 1:30 P. M., Monday, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bartlett, in Boston. Mrs. Bartlett is also a sister of Mr. Wm. L. Gavett's, and her husband is Mr. Gilbert's half-brother.

Nearly Lost His Life.

Just after the heavy shower on Saturday afternoon, a four-year-old son of Mr. Jacob Staub of West Sixth street, nearly lost his life by drowning. During a heavy rain the New street sewer fills up, and being inadequate to carry off the supply the water backs up at the intersection of New and Sixth streets, to a considerable depth. This was the case on Saturday, when the roadbed on West Sixth street was entirely submerged, and the little fellow inadvertently stepped from the sidewalk into the gutter, in water over his head. Assistance arrived just in time to prevent the boy from drowning.

These They Thank.

To the Editor of The Press:—The ladies interested in the success of the Theatricals given on the 13th, at the Seminary in aid of Johnstown, beg to acknowledge their high appreciation of the universal kindness shown by the community, in lending every aid, free of charge, thereby lessening the expenses and adding to the amount realized. They especially thank

Mr. Runkle for use of gas.

Mr. M. Estil for stationery.

Holy Cross Church Festival.

The annual iced cream and strawberry festival given by the Sunday school of the Holy Cross church, was enjoyed Thursday afternoon and evening by a large company. The children of the parish, with many of their young visiting friends, had everything to themselves in the afternoon, and made a merry throng as they enjoyed themselves on the church lawn and at the refreshment tables in the school building.

In the evening the festival was well patronized by the members of the church and others. A table laden with beautiful flowers was presided over by Miss Della Storm and Miss Emily Thompson, who also dispensed lemonade. The cake and strawberry table was in charge of Mrs. Spencer. The Misses Anna Murphy, Grace Brown, Agnes Smith and Maggie Long were the dispensers of confectionery. Many young hands were engaged in waiting upon the guests at the tables, among whom were the Misses Bertha Worman and Mary Thompson, and Masters Willie Townley, Henry Wells, Arthur Alburtus, Herbert Schutt, Fred Waring and Arthur First.

In Aid of the Debt Fund.

The commendable work of a number of the ladies of Trinity Reformed church who saw an opportunity to increase the debt fund of the church, by holding a strawberry and iced cream festival, was encouraged by the large number of persons present in the Dunlap Building on West Front street, last Thursday, where the affair took place.

The interior of the commodious room was tastefully and artistically decorated with flags, bunting and Chinese lanterns, and there was also a profusion of choice cut flowers. The amount realized from the festival will be quite large. Messrs Jacob Brothers kindly loaned the piano, and during the evening several of the young ladies present favored the visitors with selections. Mr. R. F. LaVere also contributed several cornet solos, accompanied on the piano by Miss Emma U. King.

In convenient places tables were located for the serving of iced refreshments by the following waitresses: Mrs. F. S. Dunn, Miss Lizzie Dunn, Miss Ella Kryser, Miss Mabel Woodruff, Miss Lulu Seedacker, Miss Emma U. King and Miss Lillian A. Force, all of whom were kept busy during the evening.

The flower girls were the Misses Sadie Adde, Lizzie Emmons and Lillie Zeing. The candy table was presided over by Miss Etta Howland and the lemonade well by Miss Julia Johnson. The cream was served. Mr. David Smalley acted in the capacity of cashier.

The Carrabelle Land Company.

A meeting of the stockholders of the Carrabelle Land Improvement Company, was held at the residence of Mr. Wm. Moore on East Second street, Tuesday June 11. Encouraging reports on the condition of the Company's land in Florida, were made by some of the stockholders, who have recently returned from there.

An Enterprising Firm

The phenomenal increase in the business of Messrs. Geo. Watson & Co., the Clothiers, has compelled them to add the buildings 166 and 168 Market street to the rear of their Broad street store. This firm cut all their garments by hand, as they say it is more economical and satisfactory than any of the cutting machines now used, and this extension will give them room for twenty-five more skilled cutters.

WATSON & CO.

want plenty of room for their cutting force, but have never been led away from the economical plan of keeping their salesroom of moderate size, which enables them to make their prices fully 20 per cent below the rates of any store too large for the business done in it. Just now they are making in the prices of their elegant Spring suits cut from all the new patterns of Cassimeres, Cheviots, Serges and Worsteds now marked down to $10, $12 and $13, with the latest effects in foreign goods at $14, $15 and $16 a suit finished with all custom extras.

GREAT REDUCTIONS

Watson & Co. make these to reduce stock, as they have neither the room or desire to carry over a single garment, and at this time of the year they cut up all the superfine goods in their custom department and add them to their ready-made stock. You should see their elegant garments which you can now buy for less money than the usual run of machine-cut clothing is sold for, and their stock was never as large or their garments as handsome as at the present time. The rush of business at their establishment is the talk of the city, and a will now buy you a very handsome suit if you go to the establishment of Geo. Watson & Co. for it. The young men of our city all go there for the correct cut and novelties, but these only occur at the close of the season and make a great rush while they last, as all get bargains that cannot be duplicated. This is the firm that divides all their odd lots of pantaloons among their customers as presents and you should ask to have your name recorded, and your measure taken when you make a purchase, as you will then come in for your share of these presents which is worth making it a high premium to be a customer of the house of GEO. WATSON & CO.

TEN DOLLAR BILL

A Great Discovery.

The fact that castor oil, as vile a medicine as was ever discovered, has so long held its own as a laxative, is because, until HAMBURG FIGS were discovered, no medicine could take its place. Now, however, ladies and children take HAMBURG FIGS, and like them. 25 cents. Dose, one fig. J. G. Miller, Agent, Plainfield.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institution of learning throughout the country.

Sold only in cans, full weight.

THREE KINDS!

I know
The past, and thence I will essay to glean
A warning for the future, so that man
May profit by his errors, and derive
Experience from his folly.—Shelley.

Three kinds of men start out to buy Clothing. The foolish man is hauled in by a bait and buys cheap shoddy clothing from the "hurrah" fake.

Then comes the thoughtless man, who wends his way to the fashionable tailor, gets a good suit, but pays a very big price for the same.

The wise man deals with some reputable manufacturer of Clothing and secures garments fully equal to those made to order at about half custom prices. Thus the wise man gets his Clothing, with quality and workmanship thrown in, as cheap as the foolish man his miserable trash. An unusually large number of wise men are being attracted to our store this Spring. Whether it's a case of "once bitten twice shy" or not, we don't know, but certainly their patronage of us does credit to their good judgment, and we don't think, once having traded here they'll be caught by clap-trap again. We know what we sell. We make it, and neither time, effort or money is spared to produce garments that will do us credit and still further establish our reputation. It's a selfish interest we take, we'll admit, but the effect is the same. It's there, and it pays both you and us.

SOME NEW OUTING GOWNS.

Riding Fashions For 1889—Something About the Much-Abused Bathing Gowns—Water Rigs for Yachting Girls—Some Tennis Gowns.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

Now that the young Summer is with us, the perennial sailor hat appears again on the promenades, the lawn tennis racket is taken down from the hook on which it has hung in winter obscurity, the alpenstock is knotted with fresh ribbons, the bathing cap and stockings are laid out in readiness, the long double canoe paddles are excused from further service as portiere poles, the bright colored sun umbrella prepares to act as beacon light in the matter of beach flirtations, and the sweet girls of the select "set," such of them as are not already off to Europe, button themselves in the natties of riding habits and spend their afternoons cantering through the long blossomy bridle paths of Central and Prospect Parks or over the country roads, where the sunshine is filtered through the June foliage of oaks and chestnuts, and where the bobolinks are caroling joyously.

Nearly all of the fair equestriennes wear a few flowers fastened in the bodices of their severe dark habits—a flower head, a sprig of mountain laurel, a wild rose—and one young girl with a velvet jockey cap has her corset throat full of buttercups and daisies. One by one or in pairs or groups they dash by in mounted procession, and the habit of number thirty-seven is as like in cut and finish to the habit of number two as a couple of [illegible] a procession two editions of the almond-eyed Chinese baby. One hundred riding habits of one hundred girls of fashion are in all essential particulars identical. Every seam, every fold, every hem is the same, every cross cut, every curve, every device to the exact number of buttons on the sleeve and the queer long coat tails draped squarely behind.

Even in color there is little variety. Sixty per cent. of the riders wear black and thirty per cent. of the remainder are habited in dark blue or green. A young girl in a claret habit and cap, who [illegible] brightly complexion, and a strong handsome woman, whose eager, quivering horse tosses his silky mane and curves his glossy neck in impatience for a burst of speed, wears a light gray habit with

BATHING GOWNS FOR 1889.

[illegible] in the new substitute which supports the hips, and there is far greater freedom of seat and action. Safety is greatly increased, if such a paltry matter is to be considered. [illegible] The stirrup strap has at last ousted the awkward and unwieldy bags of shot or lead with which the hem of the skirt has so long been weighted, and which frequently irritated and frightened the horse. [illegible] always, and reach to the knee.

Some few women who are going on western vacations are having riding habits made on the Jenness Miller divided skirt principle, for in the Valley of the Yosemite and among the Colorado canyons women must use all the advantages which nature originally gave them and ride astride or leave the chief glories of [illegible] unseen.

It is hard to turn from the tramping of hoofs and the tossing of silky manes and the arching of curved necks, but in June the bathers always begin to demand attention. The bathing gown almost as urgently as any character in the country demands vindication. Allowing for exceptions, it is a much abused article of attire. An amateur photographer has an interesting Brighton Beach picture. Two young girls emerging from the water and an indefinite number of men are crowded close to the edge of the breakers to observe the spectacle. One girl's head is turned toward the sea, the other looks straight in front of her, and if a photograph recorded colors, her cheeks would probably show crimson. As a rule the trouble is not with a garment which in these days of athletics when women learn swimming, can't, for safety's sake, afford much length or bulkiness of drapery, and which, when wet, can only be hindered by the cramping expedient of wearing corsets in the water from making some revelations as to figure. Occasional instances to the contrary, notwithstanding, the bathing suit needs reform much less than do the beach loungers, whose conduct is making the most healthful of summer sports unfashionable among fastidious women.

The bathing suits thus far exhibited show nothing to alarm the timid. The skirts are short and girdled. Most of the modish suits have elbow sleeves, and are matched by coquettish bathing caps of oiled silk or bright colored kerchiefs. Black stockings and sandals are preferred. A fair proportion of the suits are sleeveless and a new bathing corset is in the market.

The fishing gown is something new. The pole and basket will be fashionable this summer. All the summer girls are devoting their energies to trouting gowns. A pretty example has a full gown front of fine yellow serge, tied at the waist by a girdle, and a redingote of gray goods in the same material—the only stuff that will honestly endure water. Anchors are embroidered at lapels and a sailor hat or helmet completes the costume.

A picturesque yachting dress is of silver grey serge with wide collar of blue turning away at the throat, blue cuffs and blue girdle, gray yachting cap with blue cord.

Day by day the tennis gowns multiply. They are made this year with full skirts laid in accordion plaits or more rarely tucked. They have seldom any draperies, a ribbon sash or girdle supplying all the finish necessary. Plaited skirt of scarlet surah and blouse of white surah, jockey cap of scarlet make a bright costume which would be equally effective carried out in serge. Blue silk blouse with white silk borders and cuffs, white felt hat and tucked skirt of white flannel is another successful toilet. Pinkish gray serge accordion skirt is the basis of a third trimly simple tennis gown. With it is worn a blouse of white crepe and a small pearl gray straw hat trimmed with folds of white crepe and pink carnations. Cool yellow with lettuce green sash and green stockings and hat is perhaps the most fashionable combination.

ELLEN OSBORN.

ABOUT WATCH DOGS.

What a Dealer in Canines Knows from Long Experience.

Some Dogs Bark in Season, Some Out of Season, and Some Don't Bark at All—Good Points of the Bull Terrier and the Skye Terrier.

"But I am not looking for a cur," snapped the lady. "If I was I should not come to you. I could get all I wanted for nothing."

"You can have this one for nothing, ma'am," said the liberal dealer. "And if he does not suit you I shall just ask you to bring him back. Just leave the basement door open and set the brute out at him. I'll warrant you'll see him no more."

The lady, says a New York Sun reporter, was offended. She picked up her reticule, which she had deposited on a chair, and haughtily swept out of the store. The dealer politely held the door open and allowed a vagrant yellow and white cur to follow her. He watched them until they disappeared in the crowd. Then he turned to the reporter, who had silently witnessed the interview.

"She would have given me five dollars for that dog," he said, "if I had told her he was well bred. She is one of the many people who fancy that the watch dog is of a peculiar species. Of course, anybody who has the slightest practical knowledge of dogs is aware that they are all watchers. They are the lightest of all sleepers, and are very vigilant and quick to detect a strange footstep in or near the house. The only difference in their mode of watching lies in their action after they are aroused. The common cur, such as the one who has just gone out with the lady, is by far the most watchful, but he will bark furiously at any thing; and it is not the pleasantest thing imaginable to have the house disturbed every time a [illegible] passes it in the night. [illegible]

[illegible] story got up in the morning. I once sold a good bull terrier to the widow of a clergyman. She lived in a lonely house in Westchester County, and before she had owned the dog a week a burglar climbed through the basement window. He saw the terrier in the dining-room, and managed to clamber up on the high mantelpiece. It was a bitterly cold night in mid-winter, and he clung there, shivering for several hours, while the dog hungrily licked his jaws underneath. The lady kept no servant, and when she entered the room in the morning she was at first terribly frightened; but the fellow told her such a pitiful story of his sufferings that she was moved to compassion. She gave him ten dollars and a good breakfast, and allowed him to go away. Then she sent the dog back to me, advising me to shoot him, as such a savage, remorseless brute was clearly unfit to live. Bull terriers and the writers of newspapers have no common ground upon which they can ordinarily meet.

"I doubt, too, whether bull terriers, faithful, brave, strong and watchful as they are, have very much intelligence. Certainly they have not so much as the Scotch or the old-fashioned Skye; I mean the big silky-haired Skye, from which the delicate little thing that is miniature portrait of his ancestors, has been bred for a lady's lap dog. A prominent lawyer of New Haven bought a fine bull terrier from me about a year ago. On the second night after the dog had been in his possession the gentleman was a guest at a supper party, and did not reach home until the small hours of the morning. The terrier met him at the gate of his orchard, and drove him up an apple tree, where he held him a prisoner until the family arose at breakfast time. The dog had only seen him half a dozen times, and he did not recognize him. This is a danger with all bull terriers when used as watch-dogs. They reason slowly, and when they once reach a conclusion, whether it is wrong or right, they cling to it as tenaciously as [illegible] [illegible] Nothing will [illegible] them to forget their duty while [illegible] [illegible] enter the house is infinitely safer to close the [illegible] for the burglars when they arrive, ready for business, at sight.

"By far the best dog for keeping watch and ward in a country house is one of the large light-colored, rough-coated terriers, with as little of the fancier's breeds about him as possible. He need not be a pure strain, but there must be no bad blood in him. A cross of Scotch and Irish is very good, but, I think, the old Skye and large plain Scotch is better. It should produce a dog weighing about twelve pounds. Such an animal, without either the strength or the ferocity of the bull terrier, has all his courage, tempered with a good deal of discretion. When he hears a noise near any of the doors or windows he does not at once begin to bark. He goes cautiously to the place whence the sound came, and, of course, generally finds that it was made by the wind, or some harmless passer-by, and the sleepers are not aroused without reason. But when he barks you may feel assured that it is time for you to get up, for he never gives a false alarm; and if there is any fighting to be done he will take his full share of it. But he is no fool. He can not deal with the burglars alone, and he is not going to try to do so. His bark almost invariably frightens them away, but if your house is isolated and they persist in trying to enter it, you can safely count upon him as a valuable assistant. The bull terrier allows them to come in before he begins operations, while the rough-coated dog endeavors to keep the door between you and them."

How to Kill Time.

Here is a novel method. A number of men take perfectly similar cigars and see who can keep his lighted the longest. Each one puts a certain sum into a pot and all the cigars are of course lit at the same time. The new game has had great success in various clubs. One young man kept his cigar lighted two hours and forty-eight minutes. Of course these cigars must not be allowed to go out; when they do the smoker must drop out of the contest.

A DIPLOMAT.

A Man Who Wanted an Appointment—How He Got It.

"I have been trying for two weeks to see Secretary Blaine," said a seeker after a consulate one evening last month. "I have been at his door daily, but he has so many distinguished callers that I am always barred, though I personally know him."

He was talking to an experienced and aging Government clerk, who said: "Take this sheet of paper and write down briefly what you would say to Mr. Blaine if you were to get one of those half-minute interviews which are accorded to office-seekers. Don't ask me why, but put it all down, inside of a dozen lines."

The consulate-seeker did so, and then said: "Here it is. That is all I want to say to him."

His friend read it over and then advised him to go to the White House on the morrow, catch Secretary Blaine as he came from Cabinet meeting, talk to him if possible, and, if he could not get a hearing there, place the document in his hands.

Promptly at noon the next day Mr. Consulate-seeker took his position on the north portico of the executive mansion and waited until nearly two o'clock. The Cabinet meeting adjourned, and Mr. Consulate-seeker stepped up to him and said: "Mr. Blaine, can I see you for a minute, only a minute?"

"Certainly, if only for a minute, and thank you for being so brief," responded Mr. Blaine, as he cheerily turned, called the man by name, and shook hands with him. "What do you want?"

"I want an interview with you, and would like to tell my story in full, when you can have time to receive me."

"I never have time. Now is as good a time as any. Tell me what you want, right now, and I'll hear you."

"I am seeking an office, Mr. Blaine," he said, "and I should like to tell you all about it, but as you seem to be in a hurry I will give you this paper which briefly expresses what I want," and he handed him the paper.

"You are an exceedingly practical office-seeker," said Mr. Blaine, as he stepped into his carriage, "and I will read this as I drive along. You ought to make a good diplomat, and I can assure you I shall not forget you," and he drove away, reading the paper. That man has received his appointment.

Fashion Notes.

New princesse gowns for home wear have stylish jacket fronts.

Stripes promise to be a marked characteristic of dressy watering-place gowns.

The general tendency of the prevailing fashion seems to be to give an appearance of height.

Empire cloaks of lace are in a measure a substitute for the lace costumes so long in vogue.

Gray, silver and violet are again used to graduate the change from mourning to colors.

FREEHOLDERS PROCEEDINGS.

OFFICIAL.

ELIZABETH, N. J., May 23, 1889.

Pursuant to adjournment the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union met on Thursday, May 23, 1889, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

Present—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Briant, Doty, Houston, Jones, Kyte, Kleinhans, Pierson, Roll, Thompson, Wright, Whaley, Donahue, Howard, Vanderbeek, West, Van Saun.—17.

Absent—None.

The minutes of last meeting were read and on motion approved as read.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

Committee on procuring county road map reported that they had carefully examined and compared map with record and found it correct in every particular, after which Freeholder West offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the map made by E. L. Meyer, surveyor, and entitled "Map of Union county, showing the roads designated as county roads," which said map shows and indicates the roads which this board has assumed control of and adopted as county roads, be adopted as the map required under an act entitled "An act to enable boards of chosen freeholders to acquire, improve and maintain public roads," approved March 19, 1889, and that said map be filed in the county clerk's office.

On motion of Freeholder Thompson adopted unanimously.

On motion of Freeholder Briant a recess of fifteen minutes was taken.

On roll call after recess all the members were present.

From committee on engineer minority report.

To the honorable the Board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union:

GENTLEMEN—Your committee on county engineer would respectfully report that after carefully considering the question of work and compensation would recommend the appointment of Mr. Louis Quien, of Elizabeth, at a compensation of $10 per day for each day employed in performing his duties as said engineer. Further, your committee would recommend he be allowed $2.50 per day for each assistant, not to exceed two, necessary to properly prosecute the work.

JOHN J. DONAHUE,
Committee.

Freeholder Donahue moved its adoption.

On roll call lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Freeholders Briant, Donahue, Kleinhans—3.

Nays—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Doty, Howard, Houston, Jones, Kyte, Pierson, Roll, Thompson, Vanderbeek, Van Saun, Wright, West, Whaley—14.

From committee on engineer majority report.

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union:

GENTLEMEN—Your committee on county engineer, after carefully considering the question of work and compensation would respectfully recommend the appointment of Mr. F. A. Dunham, of Plainfield, as engineer of county roads, at a compensation of $7 per diem for each and every day he is actually employed in performing his duties as said engineer; and further your committee would recommend that he be allowed $2.50 extra per day for each assistant, not exceeding two, necessary to prosecute the work; and your committee would further recommend that in case this board deems it for the best interests of the county in order to expedite the work of surveying the county roads to direct the engineer to employ other engineers to assist in the work, he be allowed the same compensation as heretofore recommended.

WM. T. WEST,
A. VANDERBEEK,
WM. HOWARD,
E. D. VAN SAUN,
Committee.

Freeholder Kyte moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted as follows:

Ayes—16.

Spring Disorders

Shattered nerves, tired brain, impure blood, debilitated system, all are the natural outcome of the spring. A medicine must be used, and nothing equals Paine's Celery Compound. We let others proclaim—you cannot help believing a disinterested party.

Brigadier-General W. L. Greenleaf, Burlington, Vt., writes: "I have used Paine's Celery Compound on several occasions, and always with benefit. Last spring, being very much run down and debilitated, I commenced taking it. Two bottles made me feel like a new man. As a general tonic and spring medicine I do not know of its equal."

"I have used two bottles of your Paine's Celery Compound, and it has given entire satisfaction as an appetizer and blood purifier."
T. L. BEEMAN, Watertown, Dakota.

Paine's Celery Compound

is prescribed by physicians, recommended by druggists, endorsed by ministers, praised by users, and guaranteed by the manufacturers, as a spring medicine which will do all that is claimed for it. Use it this spring, and see how quickly it tones you up.

Purifies the Blood.

Full accounts of wonderful cures made by Paine's Celery Compound after other medicines and the best physicians had failed, sent free. There's nothing like it.

$1.00. Six for $5.00. Druggists.

THE GREAT RESERVATION

AND

Milk River Valley OF MONTANA

Have just been opened for settlement to the home-seeker. You have a right to a homestead under your government rights. Why not use it before it is too late? Land all free to settlers, and is the only part of the United States where free land suitable for stock and grain raising can be taken, at or near stations on the line of a railroad. You can take your choice from level vally lands or gently rolling bench lands. Soil very rich, and produces all grains and vegetables without irrigation. Climate delightful, being made very mild in Winter by warm Chinooks from the Pacific ocean. Timber, water and coal in abundance. Cheap land seekers' and settlers' tickets. Buy tickets to Glasgow, Chinook (Dawes), Benton, Great Falls, Helena and Butte. Plenty of government land near these points. For further information, the new pamphlet, "The Great Reservation", maps, etc., apply to F. I. Whitney, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, St. P., M. & M. R'y, St. Paul, Minn.

IN CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY.

To Catharine M. Torrey and Samuel W. Torrey:

By virtue of an order of the Court of Chancery of New Jersey, made on the day of the date hereof, in a cause wherein The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States are complainant, and you and others are defendants, you are required to appear, plead, demur, or answer to the complainant's bill, on or before the Tenth day of July next, or the said bill will be taken as confessed against you.

The said bill is filed to foreclose a mortgage made by William S. Maddock to the complainants dated the twenty-eighth day of June eighteen hundred and eighty-seven, on lands in the city of Plainfield, Union county, New Jersey. And you Catharine M. Torrey are made party defendant because you claim to own said lands, and you Samuel W. Torrey because you are the husband of Catharine M. Torrey, and may claim some interest in said lands.

AN AWFUL WARNING.

A wide Shakespearean sweep of brow,
A dome of thought Titanic;
A quick, magnetic nature his,
A spirit strong, galvanic.
He had the wit of Hudibras,
The intellect of Plato,
And every one perceived at once
He was no small potato;
But yet he asked, alas! 'tis true:
Well, is this hot enough for you?"

And he had deep Websterian eyes
Beneath his brows o'erarching,
His mind kept step to that great tune
To which the world is marching.
Along fame's track we prophesied
He'd be the fastest sprinter—
His intellectual lightning gleamed
Like Northern lights in winter;
But yet, he asked the summer thro':
Well, is this hot enough for you?"

And as his high Shakespearean thought
Was step by step arrested,
His elephantine intellect
Was gradually congested;
His lofty, intellectual dome
From day to day grew flatter,
His head so shrunk and shriveled up
It terrorized his hatter;
But still he said: "How do you do!
Well, is this hot enough for you?"

And now his thoughts are very crude,
Inane and embryotic,
He mumbles and jabbers all the day
In manner idiotic.
The poor, old, hopeless imbecile,
The jest of all creation,
Lives as a warning to those folks
Who make this salutation:
Good morning, friend, how do you do;
Well, is this hot enough for you?"

—S. W. Foss, in Yankee Blade.

PHEBE'S PRESCRIPTION.

In Her Search for Health She Found a Husband.

"I always foresaw how it would turn out," said Mrs. Mynton. "You can bear witness, girls, that I prophesied this from the beginning. She isn't strong enough to work in a store. She's no sort of use about the house; and here she is sick on our hands, and no telling how long it is going to last, with every prospect of a doctor's bill, and an account at the drug store, and Mynton's salary just cut down on account of the dull season coming on and business being slack, and"—

"Hush, mamma!" said Angelina Mynton, lifting her finger with a gesture which denoted caution. "She hears you."

It was true. The black mist was floating away from Phebe Clissold's obscured vision; the words, which at first sounded like the distant buzzing from a bee-hive, now assumed form and distinctness.

"I am very sorry, Aunt Mynton," said she. "I will try not to be a burden on you. Indeed," with a faint smile flickering around her white lips, "I did not faint away on purpose; but the store was so hot, and the ventilation so poor—if I could have a few drops of water to drink"—

Phebe Clissold had been left an orphan at sixteen. Her nearest relative—a brother of her deceased mother—was a bank clerk in New York, and to him she had naturally directed her footsteps. He had succeeded in obtaining for her a situation in a great fancy store; and in this, the first quarter, she had ignominiously broken down.

"She can not endure long hours and close confinement," said Dr. Falkney. "She must have plenty of exercise and fresh air. This store business won't do."

"Exercise!" bitterly repeated Mrs. Mynton, in whose heart years of privation and toil had well nigh soured the milk of human kindness. "But we don't keep a carriage and pair, Dr. Falkney, neither do we have time to walk in the park. Fresh air! We live in a flat, and the bed-rooms are lighted by gas and ventilated through the shaft, and things can't be helped, so far as I can see."

Dr. Falkney shook his head.

"Slow poison," said he, "for a girl of her temperament."

Phebe, lying on the lounge in the adjoining room, and slowly knitting on a pair of socks for the last Mynton baby, heard all this. She put two and two together in her mind.

"They don't want me here," thought she sadly. "I am a useless boarder, and Dr. Falkney says I am not to go back to the store. The question is, what am I to do? Exercise! Fresh air! Aunt Mynton is right; there seems to be no prospect of my attaining any such luxuries."

As she lay there she watched Angelina Mynton trying to trim her last season's hat with three yards of crushed-strawberry-colored ribbon, and a bunch of yellow primroses. Evidently, Angelina was no milliner. She twisted the ribbon this way and that; she pinned the primroses first on one side, then on another, and ended by flinging down the bonnet with an exclamation of despair.

Phebe laid down her knitting needles. "Give it to me!" said she.

A few dextrous folds and turnings of the ribbon, a dainty adjustment of the much-abused primroses, and Phebe held up the bonnet to Angelina's admiring glance.

"How do you like it now?" said she.

"Oh, it's lovely!" cried she. "It isn't like the same hat. How did you do it, Phebe?"

"I don't know," said Phebe. "I always used to trim my own hats and my mother's. I like to do it."

"You ought to be a milliner," said Angelina. "Only," with a sudden recollection, "Dr. Falkney says you can't be shut up in a store, and a milliner's trade is about as confining as any there is."

"Yes," assented Phebe, with a sigh.

Dr. Falkney was a quiet, brief spoken man of forty, and a bachelor at that. He had practiced medicine in the same location for ten years, and never felt that any element was lacking in his life until now. But on this brisk spring morning he sat thoughtfully in his office, looking at the great skeleton that hung behind a baize curtain in the corner, and tapping his ruler on the table.

"She has eyes like a startled deer," he said to himself. "And such a soft, sweet voice! She doesn't chatter like those cousins of hers. She speaks in a slow, gentle way, that seems to rest one's hearing. And she is so utterly friendless and alone. Yes, I'll marry her, if she will have me."

When Dr. Falkney once made up his mind, he was not long in acting upon it. He went that self-same afternoon to Mrs. Mynton's and asked to see Miss Clissold.

"La!" said Mrs. Mynton, who sat at her everlasting mending-basket. "Didn't you know? She's gone away."

"Gone?" Dr. Falkney looked surprised. "Gone where?"

"Well, it's the queerest thing," said Mrs. Mynton. "We don't know. And I don't fairly believe she knows herself. She said she was going to follow out your prescription, doctor."

"My prescription!"

"Exercise and fresh air, you know. She said she'd be back at the end of a few weeks and let us know how it worked."

Dr. Falkney's jet-black brows contracted.

"And you let her go away like this!" said he. "So young, so lovely and so inexperienced! Where were your maternal instincts, Mrs. Mynton?"

Mrs. Mynton bridled a little.

"I don't see what maternal instincts have to do with it," said she. "She's no kin to me. Only Mynton's sister's child. And I've got four girls of my own to look after. And when all's come and gone, I've got no authority over Phebe Clissold to stay or stop her."

"Yes, I see," said the doctor, with a disturbed look. "I dare say it is as you say. But I hope she will soon come home again."

Phebe had made up her mind what to do.

"I'll be a traveling peddler," she told herself. "Part of my stock I'll carry in my brains, and part on my arm."

That day, just as Mrs. Perkins, at Flock Center, was setting her table for dinner, Phebe Clissold knocked at the door.

"Bless me!" cried the farmer's wife, nearly dropping her biggest blue-edged plate in her surprise. "Is that you, Phebe?"

"Yes," nodded Phebe. "How good your dinner smells, Mrs. Perkins! Chicken pot-pie? I thought so! And an Indian pudding! Mrs. Perkins, I think I shall stay and take dinner with you."

"And welcome," said the good woman. "But I thought, Phebe, you had gone to your New York relations. You hain't quarreled with them, I hope?"

"Oh, no," said Phebe. "I never quarrel with anybody, Mrs. Perkins. But I've got my living to earn. Uncle Mynton isn't a rich man, and I can't be a drag on him. I tried life in a store, but it seems I wasn't strong enough for that sort of thing. So I'm going to strike out on a new tack. I'm a traveling milliner at present."

"What!" said Mrs. Perkins, holding the [illegible] high above the shining plated teapot.

Phebe nodded to the [illegible] basket that she carried on her arm.

"In that basket," said she, laughing, "there are three compartments. One is full of the latest style of spring frames, packed closely, one within another; the second contains flowers and wreaths; the third is full of ribbons of every color of the rainbow. You'll get your spring bonnet of me, Mrs. Perkins, won't you?"

"Well, if that ain't providential!" said Mrs. Perkins. "I was just going to Linley [illegible] to-morrow—I was, just as sure as you're born!"

"I'll suit you better than any of the Linley milliners, Mrs. Perkins," said Phebe. "And I'll work cheap, too. Give me a trial, that's all I ask."

"Well, I'll do that," said the good dame. "I remember, now, you was always handy with the needle. Dinner's ready, an' I'm goin' to blow the horn for Perkins and the hired man. Sit down, Phebe, and take pot-luck with us."

After dinner Phebe set herself diligently to work to suit Mrs. Perkins with a new bonnet. Scarlet field-poppies, black satin ribbon and a frame covered with puffed black silk took the worthy woman's fancy completely.

"I never had a handsomer bunnit," said she. "There's real style to it. Eight dollars! Of course I'll pay you eight dollars, Phebe! I expected to pay ten in Linley, and this is prettier than I'd have got there."

This bit of success took the edge off from the criticisms and carpings of Mrs. Deacon Root, who lived in the next house with her three daughters, who had none of them, to use her own expression, "any faculty fur fixin' up bunnits." And Phebe was compelled to "wholesale" the family for twen-[illegible] dollars, which hardly more than covered expenses.

Then she repacked her basket and once more set forth, under the blossoming trees and along the shady lanes, where dandelions sprinkled all the grass like drops of sunshine.

"Dr. Falkney was right," she said to herself. "Air and exercise are what I needed. I feel like another woman, only it does make me feel bad to think of never seeing Dr. Falkney's kind face again!" And for a moment the far-away blue of the April sky glimmered through a mist of unshed tears. "How foolish I am!" said Phebe to herself.

Then she knocked at Mrs. Parthan's door, and asked leave to show her the new spring shapes in hats and bonnets.

The fresh, glistening rolls of ribbon, the crisp roses and jonquils, the tempting "shapes" in straw, and lace and buckram, and Phebe's own natural-born skill in combining them—all these proved irresistible to the country folk, and before long Phebe had sold out all her stock and returned to the city with a considerable sum over and above her expenses.

"This," she said gleefully to herself, "I shall give to Aunt Mynton toward the cost I have been to her."

As she crossed the street toward the dreary, red brick walls of the "Ontario Flats," where the Myntons dwelt, with about a dozen other families, some one reined up a horse, with a quick cry of: "Do you want to be run over, Phebe?"

She looked up. It was Dr. Falkney.

"Oh, doctor," she cried, radiantly, "I have taken your prescription, and you can't think how much good it has done me!"

The doctor looked as bright as she did herself. "I shall call to see you to-night," said he.

"Another prescription!" cried Phebe. And then she remembered, with a sudden crimsoning of the cheeks, that she had not yet paid his bill.

"But I can pay him now!" she thought, as she stood there and watched his carriage roll down the street. "Just as soon as his office hours begin I'll go there. I won't wait for him to present his bill."

To Dr. Falkney's great surprise his first patient that afternoon was Phebe Clissold.

"Doctor," said she, "I've come to pay your bill out of money that I've earned myself."

"Have I sent it in?" said he.

"No, but—"

"Nor do I intend to do so!" he declared. "Phebe, I'm thinking of going into partnership."

"Then your partner will certainly want all the old debts paid up," nodded she.

"I don't know about that. I am thinking of a life-partnership, Phebe—not a medical one—and the partner I want, dear little girl, is you!"

It was, perhaps, a little vague, but she understood it in an instant. Her cheeks flushed; her long brown eyelashes drooped.

"Dearest," said he, taking her hand, "is it to be Dr. Falkney and wife?"

Some other patients came in just then, and after that one look into her hazel eyes Dr. Falkney was troubled with no misgivings.

So there came an end to the bonnet-trimming business—"the itinerant millinery," as Phebe's husband called it.

"But I shall always feel happier and more independent," said she, "for knowing that I am able to earn my own living."—Saturday Night.

MRS. TANNER'S RHYMES.

Mrs. Ingalls Talks About Her Husband's Many Accomplishments—His Tussle With Trunks and Packing Boxes. Industrial Palsy in Washington.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

The administration is to have a poet laureate—Mrs. "Corporal Tanner," the wife of the sturdy and widely known Commissioner of Pensions. Ever since she graduated at Charlottesville, New York, she has written verse, but during the last year this has bourgeoned into a stately and ambitious form that may be said to be unique. She has now three finished lectures written in verse, which she has delivered since inauguration day—one as her husband's substitute in Connecticut, when, in the middle of his campaign in Washington, she telegraphed him:

"James Tanner: Do not come. I will take your place."

And she did, reading a new lecture in verse on soldiers, and especially the duty of the government towards them. Mrs. Tanner has four children, ranging from ten years old to twice ten, but she finds some time to give to the G. A. R., and to her other friends, the Woman Suffragists.

I heard her lecture this week on this latter question—it was a rhythmical and rhymed argument, in the dialect of an old fashioned New England farmer, a controversy between John and Betsy, after the fashion of Lowell or Carlton. Betsy's grammar was sometimes out of joint, but she had lots of facts and a shrewd wit and sarcasm that turned to derision John's ridiculous claims to superiority.

I have heard her lecture to the G. A. R., too. It is a heroic didactic verse, and the memories of war time are emphasized by the scream of the old eagle. Corporal and Mrs. Tanner seem exact counterparts like their predecessors, Gen. and Mrs. Black. Gen. Black is one of the most eloquent of Senators, and his wife an accomplished reciter and each is proud of the attainments and ability of the other. Corporal Tanner is an eloquent man, facile and vigorous of speech. Careful and precise of articulation, and with a rich and ringing voice capable of pathetic modulations; and Mrs. Tanner seems likely to win distinction in current polemics and dialectics. Mrs. Tanner has a comely and attractive personality, a large head firmly poised upon ample shoulders, and a square face in which strength of purpose and decision of character are conspicuously marked. She wears her iron-grey hair brushed back from a high forehead in a style of which Madame Pompadour's Coiffure was an illustrious example.

Commissioner and Mrs. Tanner have gone to Georgetown to live, and there they will take the boys and girls and household pots and penates—to a great, stately old mansion in the middle of two acres of lawn.

* * *

One of the prominent figures in the vernal [illegible] was that of Senator Ingalls, who has at last pulled up his lares, etc., and gone to Kansas with his wife and seven children.

I made a neighborly call and spent a pleasant hour the other evening at their castellated home opposite the Capitol. The Senator was away looking the last arrangements, and the pretty little girls swarmed over the house, exhilarated over the homeward journey.

"Now, Mrs. Ingalls," said a lady of the party, "we must not stay a minute, but say a hasty good-by for you are doing your last packing."

"No, I am not hurried," she said, "and have next to nothing to pack. Everything is packed. Mr. Ingalls did it. I tell you it is a great thing to have a husband who is so helpful and effective as mine is."

"How does he get time for everything," I asked.

"It puzzles me," said Mrs. Ingalls, "but he does. I am glad, every day of my life, that I married a good packer and a good buyer," and she laughed with us at this characterization of the leader of American legislation.

She went on: "Mr. Ingalls has fairly spoilt me by his universal usefulness. He can do just anything. He can buy a horse shrewdly, and he can build a house as it should be built, and he superintends the cutting and sale of our wood at home and the running of a farm. To be an editor and a lawyer is commonplace, but James can be trusted to select buttons and match ribbon! What do you think of that? He buys our carpets and curtains and portieres, and they harmonize. He can do the marketing. Now and then he picks out a bonnet down town and fetches it home to me. He can select the girls' clothes as well as I can.

"One day when I was home at Atchison, a big box came to me by express from Washington. I opened it and found two dresses—handsome dresses, brand new. I saw at once that a mistake had been made, for I had not ordered any costumes, and I began to pack them away again and wait till the address was corrected. When Mr. Ingalls came up from town I told him about it and wondered whose they were. I got them and exhibited them to him—one a rich gray silk and the other a lovely lace robe. He acted puzzled about it, but said I had better try them on and if they fitted me, keep them till called for. I did. They fitted like a glove. The outcome of the inquiry was that he had voluntarily got them for me when he was in Washington a month before. He selected the silk and the lace and all the materials, and carried them to the modiste who had my measure and there they were! This lace dress I have on this minute is one of the trophies of that occasion. I tell you a man who can do such a thing is a poet. I have arrived at that pitch that I wouldn't give a cent for a mere statesman."

Few cities in the world can boast a larger number of public parks than Washington; in fact, it is said to lead them all. But many of these parks are mere small triangles of green at the junction of streets and avenues. These, of course, all belong to the United States, and are cared for at Government expense, and the expense is expensive.

Passing one of these diminutive parks the other day, where eight men were ostensibly mowing, I halted and spoke to one of them who was leaning on his swath, and looking at the sparrows in the trees.

"I shouldn't think it would need so many of you to mow one little spot of ground that scarcely needs mowing, any how," I ventured.

"Deed, it do sorr!" he said, "what else wud we be doin?"

About twice as many unskilled people are hired by the Government as the work requires. I have often seen one man pushing a little lawn mower on a public park, and another drawing it with a string; and I do not doubt that two supernumeraries may be found sweeping with one broom.

Now remember that there are thousands of these unskilled clerks, messengers and laborers in all parts of this city, paid at least twice as much as similar service commands anywhere else in the country, and then imagine what effect the spectacle must have on the population of a city. The result is palsy. Every trade in the district is demoralized and paralyzed by it. Everybody is waiting to be employed by the Government, and private industry is almost at a standstill. Thousands of mechanics are made loafers by the fact that they do not earn as much as Government employes. John does not want to work for $1 a day, when his brother James, "who has got influence," receives $2.50 a day for doing half as much.

I know a poor family, named Burrows, on one of the back streets. They all worked when and as they could, and managed to keep together the souls and bodies of father, mother and eight children. In a hapless moment I took one of the daughters out of a candy factory where she was earning $3 a week standing before a roaring furnace all day, and got Benedict to give her a place at $2 a day in the Government printing office. From that moment every member of the family knocked off work and sat down to be supported by her—father, brothers and sisters. She stood it for two years, but when they had all settled thoroughly down to indolence, she resigned her position as bread-winner and ran away and got married, and the indignant family of loafers execrated and abused her.

BIG PAY AND LITTLE WORK.

I sent for a tinker to repair my roof. He promised to come next day. He failed and I went after him. He promised again. Again he did not come. I sent once more to know the reason, and got the following note:

"MR CROWFFARD I am doo not care for the roof gob i her a Bent giv up latch gobs i am a wating for a gob in the Intear depotmt"

So on all sides. Everybody is waiting for a Government job and neglecting work.

The life of an officeholder in Washington who has the power of appointment, is scarcely worth living. Public Printer Benedict says to me "When unsuccessful at my office they called at my house. They waylaid me when I went home, and I found them sitting on my doorsteps in the morning. They made my sister miserable, and finally they lay in wait for the little girls—often, poured their griefs into her ear and induced her to pray to me. The importunity became intolerable. It was a pleasure to get out of the reach of it at last, and now I know how to pity Mr. Palmer."

An Austrian Pompeii.

An Austrian Pompeii has just been unearthed near Zara. Zara is the capital of the Austrian province of Dalmatia. Thousands of coins of the Diocletian period and of other early times, rare specimens of Grecian and Roman sculpture and Byzantine architecture were discovered along the Dalmatian shores. Amphitheaters, temples, catacombs and other evidences of a busy and highly civilized community were unearthed.

A SPECIAL ON MILK.

The Reporter From Vassar Investigates a Fearful Crime.

She Defends the Reputation of the Cow and Attacks That of Farmer Robinson, But a Small Error Leads Her to Forsake a Journalistic Career.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

Dan Harding was the son of the New York, Omaha and San Francisco railroad company. That company was financially the father of the New York Daily Argus. It will thus be perceived that the relationship between Dan and the Argus was close. That was why Dan got a job as reporter when he came out of college.

The only journalistic work that Dan had done before the Argus secured his services was writing a protest against the practice of compulsory prayers before 9 a. m. This was printed in a college paper and its pathetic sincerity atoned for its literary defects. Dan had a head full of ideas but they were too personal to be of interest to the public.

THE ONLY COW WITHIN FIVE MILES.

I am not kicking about Dan. He was a good looking, and good natured fellow, and he had money enough not to care whether he got ten columns or five lines into the paper during a week. He was reporting for the sake of experience.

Dan's best girl was in Vassar. He showed me her photograph one day, with a burst of confidence, and told me that he was in a peck of trouble about her.

"It's all my own fault," said he. "You see she's one of those girls that think about things and have all sorts of confounded ideas. She likes me well enough but she won't marry me because she believes that woman should be industrially independent of man. How's that for an answer to a fellow after he's been down on his knees over fifteen minutes talking eternal devotion with a fervency that bordered on profanity? I expected her to say she'd be a sister to me, and that would have been bad enough, but when she said she'd be 'industrially independent' of me it broke my back."

"I don't see how it's your fault," said I, consolingly.

"So far it wasn't," said he, "but I didn't have sense enough to simply let her try it and fail. I had to work up a little industrial independence of my own. Since I've been here I've been writing her some of the confoundedest lies about my doings in this paper that ever you heard of. She thinks I am the greatest living journalist because I've been sending her papers with all the best articles marked, whether I wrote 'em or not; how, as she knows in that part of intellect which has not been confused by an advanced education, that I'm about the worst chump that ever was born, she's gradually come to the conclusion that it must be easy to become a great journalist; and by Jingo, nothing will do her now, but that she must come down to New York and be one herself. She says, by way of consolation, that when we've both made ourselves immortal, and won the control of the destinies of two or three leading dailies, she will be mine. She's coming down to begin the immortalizing act in about three weeks. What do you think of that for a brilliant matrimonial prospect?"

"Young man," said I, "do not despair. In my capacity as city editor of this paper I will think up a job that no woman can do and keep out of the hospital. Then in my capacity as your friend I will assign this young woman to do it. You make love to her some more when she gets convalescent and marry her before she's well enough to yearn for any more industrial independence."

We made an unholy bargain on the spot with the above scheme for its basis; and three weeks later, when Miss W. Daisy Howells approached the field of journalism we were ready to let down the bars.

"Miss Howells," I said, on the second day after she became connected with the Argus, "I have a story here which has been waiting a long time for somebody to do it justice. It needs the broad and noble sympathy of woman, and the high intellectual attainments of a college graduate. I have had considerable of the latter at ten dollars a week but the former has hitherto eluded me. It is an important task and I do not conceal from you that there is dead loads of work in it."

DAISY MEETS WITH A SWELL ACQUAINTANCE.

"It is woman's place to work," said she. "The industrial independence, ——"

"Exactly," said I, "but this is a story about milk. You are doubtless aware that the supply now being sent to this city from the immediate vicinity is not what it should be. It is so dilute that it breeds melancholia among the children of the poor. But this is not the fault of the cow. Let us be just to her if only for the sake of her sex. The blame rests with the farmer and the old oaken bucket. Now what I want you to do is this: Go out and write a special on the home life of the suburban cow. Clear her good name and cast the opprobrium upon the proper party. Pick out a few of the farmers by name and call them murderous things in such a manner as to avoid a libel suit."

"Is there any particular locality where this nefarious practice is more common than elsewhere?" she asked.

"Well," said I, "perhaps you'd better try Sandy Point. It's a suburb of Brooklyn. It's reached by two lines of horse railroads which connect with each other, but neither of which runs to Sandy Point. If you get the right road it lands you under a board fence on the south side of a cemetery. In Brooklyn all roads lead to the cemetery. Professional cemeteries and amateur theatricals are almost the only things which keep Brooklyn alive. You will crawl through a hole in the fence and pass through the cemetery. If it happens to be the right one you will find on the other side of it a place where six roads intersect so as to form nineteen corners with a saloon on every one of them. Then you will know that you are in Sandy Point. Ask anybody you meet if he knows where the Grassy Slope Milk Farm is? It's out on the sandlot somewhere, about ninety miles from pasturage. If a cow that had been brought up in the place saw a blade of grass she would faint away. He has recently added two cows and an artesian well to his stock farm, and is supplying about half the East Side of New York with milk. He sells to the woman I board with. You may call him a murderous thing, but don't say anything libellous. Then hustle around and find some more farms and give us a couple of columns for Sunday."

Miss Howells accepted this work as if it had been a mere problem in quadratic equations. She said that it was the proud privilege of the press to expose fraud, and she proposed to get right out and do it. I hadn't scared her a bit. This was a disappointment for I had expected her to resign at the mention of a cow. However, I was still confident that Sandy Point would do the business, if she ever got there. I was gratified, therefore, to observe that she look tired when she came back to the office late that afternoon.

She was somewhat reluctant about relating the events of the day, but I finally learned the principal facts. She had gone to Sandy Point, or some place answering to the most invidious description of that locality. The only person of whom she dared to ask her way to Grassy Slope Farm was a small boy who was driving a goat harnessed to a cart; and he didn't know where it was. Then she asked, on a venture, if his father sold milk, and the boy replied that he did. Miss Howells then followed him and the goat and the cart about four miles across lots to a one-story shanty in the lea of a sand hill, and in the back yard thereof she found a cow so thin that she looked like a piece of faded red carpet spread over a saw horse. The boy said proudly that that was the only cow within five miles of the place. Miss Howells couldn't find her way back to Sandy Point, and the boy, being offended at her contempt for his cow, refused to show her, so she wandered around till she came to a cemetery from which there was a means of transportation back to town.

"But I think I am on the trail of a sensation," she said, "and I will try again to-morrow."

The next day, accordingly, she set out again, but this time she hired an escort. It was rather a brilliant idea. She went to a milk dealer in Brooklyn and procured the services of a young man from the country. She did not tell him what she was looking for, but simply said that she wanted to find a place where they kept cattle out in Sandy Point.

SHE FAINTED AWAY IN DAVIS' ARMS.

She had to promenade through about half of Brooklyn with him on the way to Sandy Point, and in the course of that walk she met about two dozen swell acquaintances of hers who lived in the city. It was a cheering reflection, she said, that they probably took the young man to be a relation from the rural districts.

The next day she brought in her story, and when I read it I came to the conclusion that my scheme to scare her out of journalism had failed. It was a lurid and sensational tale. She had discovered a place where 200 cows were kept in the back yard of a distillery. They were fed, she asserted, upon the waste product of the distillery, and altogether led a dissolute life. They were frequently intoxicated. Their milk had a strong flavor of [illegible], and was sold in the neighboring saloons for milk punch. Then she had an interview with a physician (alleged) who said that the infant mortality from delirium tremens had increased 79 per cent. No other conclusion was possible except that this milk had done it. She related that John Robinson owned the cows, and she gave a brief but rasping sketch of his family history, after which she called him a murderous thug as directed; and wound up with an appeal to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, the S. P. C. A., the Sons of Temperance, General Fisk of New Jersey, the Legislature of the State of New York and the enlightened public sentiment of Long Island.

It struck me as a good story, and I let it run.

The day following its appearance John Robinson called at the office. He was induced to let the office boy hold his club, after which I admitted him. Miss Howells was present, and ready to back up her statements. She was eager to confront Robinson and crush him to the earth. I let her confront. Dan Harding sat in the background.

"So you're the critter that called me a murderous thing?" said he to Miss Howells.

"Yes, I am," said she, "and I think a man who would wilfully lead innocent cows to the vice of intemperance deserves the name."

"And I'm the man that sows the seeds of delirium tremens among babes!"

"You are the man. I saw your depraved cows."

"Well, sir," said he turning to me, "I don't own any cows; I never owned any cows; I never sold any milk. The animals this young lady investigated are not that kind of critters. No, sir; not by a darn sight. They're all steers!"

"All, what?" gasped Miss Howells.

"All steers. Masculine, not a cow among 'em."

There was a howl of laughter from the other side of the partition where the reporters had been listening to the dialogue. Then Miss Howells fainted away in Dan's arms, and when she opened her eyes a few minutes later and looked up into his face I saw that my plot had succeeded and that she would hide her mortification under the veil of matrimony.

HOWARD FIELDING.

ORIGIN OF BOCK-BEER.

A Harrowing Tale of a Feudal Lord, Dark Beer and a Goat.

The reputed origin of bock beer has been preserved in various legends which are current throughout Germany. At the town of Nuremberg, in the spring of a certain year during the feudal ages, an Easter church fair was being held, which was participated in not only by the townsfolk but by people from all the countryside as well. There came riding into town a feudal Lord of great renown, who brought with him from Munich a quantity of light beer, which he praised very much. At the fair the people were drinking a dark beer, which the Lord looked upon with disdain.

After much discussion upon the relative merits of the light and dark beers a wager was laid, to be decided the following year when fair time should come around again. Each side was to brew a quantity of its favorite beer, and by a practical test it was to be ascertained how many mugs of each could be drank before making the drinker drunk. The beer that would make a man drunk first was to be awarded the palm.

At the next Easter fair the contestants sat down together in the presence of a vast concourse to decide the wager, the Lord drinking the dark-brown beer of the town and one of the lustiest of the Nurembergers drinking the Lord's light beer. A citizen kept tally of the number of mugs emptied by each. The Lord soon became hilarious and was finally exalted to a state of roaring intoxication long before his rival began to feel the effects of the light beer. Accordingly the dark beer was declared the winner of the contest and the townspeople sung the praises of their favorite beverage.

While the people were still assembled, a young goat, which is known in Germany as a bock or beck, broke into the space where the drinkers were sitting and rushing between the legs of the befuddled Lord, threw him flat on his back, where, such was his condition, he was compelled to lie till he was picked up. From this circumstance comes the name of the dark-brown beer which still comes at Easter time.

Another legend is to the effect that the Jesuit monks were accustomed to hold a feast in the spring, at which they slaughtered a young goat or bock. To drink with this they brewed a dark, sweet beer which was considered a delicacy and which, when it became known outside of the monasteries, was hailed with delight by the people, and under the name of bock beer became an established institution.

Match-Breakers.

In Harrisburg, Pa., there is an organization which has excited considerable comment in the press of that State. Ladies and gentlemen of certain churches have agreed to break up wedding engagements, by fair means if possible, between young ladies in their teens and young men, or old, who are known to be habitual drinkers. It is kept secret as far as possible, and yet several marriageable young men have felt its refrigerating force. They have been frozen out from the objects of their alleged affections.

"One of the finest places in the country for a great city," said General Sherman one day when the conversation turned upon the probable removal of the National capital to the Mississippi valley, "is at Nauvoo, Ill. It is a natural, sloping declivity; where good drainage, assisted by the rapids of the river, would make it healthful. It is located in a defensible region, in the midst of good cereal and fruit crops, in a country well watered; in fact, just such a place as a civil engineer might plan and hope for, but could never make without the assistance of nature."

REFORM.

There is a vital meaning in the word Reform.

Amendment of what is defective, vicious, corrupt or depraved is its correct interpretation.

Whatever is essentially good does not need amendment. It is bad things that demand rigid reformation, if not utter demolition.

Reform can in many ways be made properly and profitably applicable to the habits and usages of individuals and society, but it especially pertains to public affairs in a country like this, where popular freedom has been ordained a sovereign principle, and to preserve the life of which political integrity is an absolute necessity.

Are we as a people politically perfect? Are politicians of to-day, not of any political party, but of all parties, students and practitioners of the science of honest and efficient government, which is the true mission of politics, or are they not, as a general rule, eager seekers after patronage and power for selfish purposes, not for the public welfare, unscrupulous as to the arts and means employed, and willing, as occasion presents, to even abandon sound principles for the attainment of partisan ends?

These are serious and important questions for the people, the honest people, to consider and remedy.

To discard public virtue is to cut adrift from the anchor of national safety.

We do not charge all politicians with mercenary motives. That would be unwarranted, as many ardent and active partisans unquestionably believe themselves to be in the line of right service and clear of improper designs or methods. Unfortunately, however, they must be classed as exceptions. It is the manipulating member, the professionals, who run the political machines and have given to politics such an unsavory reputation.

Political corruption has grown and widened until now it casts a dark stigma upon the American name.

No just observer can truthfully deny that to be an actual condition, not a theory, and no patriotic citizen, be his partisan affinity what it may, ought for a moment to hesitate about hurling against it the severest denunciation and demanding the earliest and most sweeping REFORM!

Our platform reads thus—

Ballot boxes ensured without and unpolluted within.

Votes honestly counted and certified.

Cheerful acquiescence in the legally expressed will of the majority.

Absolute freedom and security for each and every legal voter to select and deposit such a ballot as his own individual judgment approves, without any species of bribery, intimidation or hindrance.

Condign punishment, coupled with the disfranchisement of any and every man, high or low, who buys, barters or sells a vote for money or any other consideration, or who coerces employes to politically act against their free will; or who gives or raises money for corrupt electioneering purposes, or who as a candidate expends money or offers patronage, directly or indirectly, to either secure a nomination or election to public office.

Who will dare brand the foregoing as other than sound Constitutional timber?

Honor to Whom Honor's Due.

How is the way in which a true story from this city gets twisted all out of shape in its travels, and finally lands in the columns of the Times of Troy, N. Y.

A little girl in Plainfield, N. J., whose parents attend the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, was very thoughtful on the way home from morning service on a recent Sunday. The last hymn had been, "Even Me, Even Me." Finally she asked her mother, who was holding her hand: "Mamma, did Adam write that hymn?" "Why, no, my child," said her mamma; "why do you ask that?" "Because it says 'Eve and Me.'"

It remains for THE PRESS to tell for the first time, the facts of the case. It was not a little girl at all who was the hero of the story. It was Master George Richards, son of the pastor of the Crescent Avenue church. The refrain that caused him to think his wise little thought, was, "Jesus Loves Even Me!" and his remark was that "Adam must have sung that song about Jesus loves Eve and Me."

Public School Matters.

President [illegible] and Messrs J. W. Murray and L. F. Wadsworth, constituting a quorum of the Board of Education met in special session in the Franklin building, last Monday, and finished up the school business for the year.

Mr. Murray, from the Building Committee, reported that the new building has been thoroughly examined and was ready for acceptance by the Board. He made a motion which prevailed, that the new school building be accepted, and the balance on the contracts paid. He further stated that the difficulty with the well at the Monroe school was not the fault of the contractor, and all that was necessary was a little pumping before the water was offered the pupils for drinking purposes. The well was accepted, and the bill for the same was ordered paid. The bill for the furniture was also ordered paid.

In the event of a deficiency in the Building fund to meet the remainder due the contractors on the new building, the clerk was authorized to draw from the general fund to meet said deficiency.

Mr. Murray made a preliminary report for Mr. Babcock who was absent, on the matter of connecting the High and Franklin schools with a new system of heating, at a cost of about $2,000. The matter was referred to Messrs Babcock and Murray for investigation, they to report to the Board at a subsequent meeting.

Upon motion of Mr. Wadsworth, Janitor Mattox of Music Hall was authorized to expend a sum not to exceed $7 for decorations for commencement night.

The President stated that on account of the State Normal School exercises taking place on the same evening, State Superintendent Chapman would be unable to attend the graduating exercises in this city. He said that Mr. F. L. Schoonmaker would deliver the address on Thursday evening.

Miss Bulkley was present and reported that upwards of $200 had been received for tuition fees.

Some discussion followed on the subject of increasing the musical instructor's salary, but the request for an increase was not granted.

A claim of Mr. Wm. M. Smith for expenses was ordered paid, and the Board adjourned.

—Newspaper advertising promotes trade, for even in the dullest times advertisers secure by far the largest share of what is being done.

Must Go Early.

Persons without admission tickets who intend to be present at the graduating exercises of the High School in Music Hall, this Thursday evening, will be obliged to go early in order to secure seats. A limited number of seats will be reserved for the parents and friends of the graduates.

At the Washington School.

The closing exercises of the Washington school building on Thursday will include the unfurling of a handsome flag, ten by fifteen feet in dimensions. A flagstaff has been erected on top of the building, from which the flag will float in the breeze. An address will also be delivered by one of the members of the Board of education.

[illegible]

Mr. Wm. E. Hall, whose reputation for eloquence is national, will give his lecture entitled, "John, and Demi-John," at the Reform Hall, on next Lord's day evening. Take your children along when you go to hear him; for he is an artist, an orator and artist, all within one book. President French may be relied on to preside and to sustain the charter.

This Year's Appointments.

Those who have received appointments in the graduating class of '89 of the High School, and the subjects of their essays, are:

Valedictory, Ella Underhill Osborne; Salutatory, Louise S. Runyon; [illegible], Teresa Genevieve Keenan; Monologue, Lyle Wellington Moorhouse; Gypsies, Emma Frances Gibbon; Fanaticism, Alfred Edward Holmes; Trifles, Mary Emma French; A Heroine, Anna Louise [illegible]; The American Negro, Maud E. Mitchell.

Circumstance, Charlotte Marshall Beckwith; Pen Pictures from Milton, Mary [illegible] Fritts; Love of Country, Alice Mary Quinn; Education for the Home, Laura D. Wendt.

The members of the training class to receive diplomas as its graduates, are: Eleanor G. Beal, Abbie M. Wilson and [illegible] N. Wood.

NEW MARKET NEWS.

Bass seem to be very plentiful in Spring Lake, several handsome specimens having been carried away by sports from Plainfield, Bergen Point and Elizabeth. The finest one was 21½ inches long, weighing [illegible] pounds, and there are lots left to [illegible], yet.

The mail catcher seems to be in anything but good working order, one mail pouch was torn in two, and upon another occasion it failed to catch the bag. The agent on the train, should use more care in throwing off the mail, otherwise he should be reported.

The Postmaster-General sent a special agent to inquire into the justice of the [illegible] of a large number of our citizens in relation to the undesirable location of the post office, and it is probable another expression of opinion will accompany any report that may result from the investigation.

The department should heed the voice of the people, when such a pronounced majority asking redress are steadfast followers and supporters of the administration.

"Plainfield's Place in the County Conference."

Besides the facts presented Saturday in the account of the conference at Elizabeth, of the County Y. P. S. C. E., published exclusively in THE PRESS, the following additional details are of local interest.

The Rev. Asa R. Dilts, of this city, made the opening prayer. Mr. W. C. [illegible] of the Congregational church, was one of the Nominating Committee that named Mr. E. St. John, Vice President, Mr. H. E. Gayle, Secretary, and Miss Alice Spangenberg, Treasurer.

Among those appointed on the Executive Committee, were Mr. A. E. Hoagland to represent the First Presbyterian church, Mr. E. E. Anthony, the Trinity Reformed church, and Mr. E. S. Kober, the Congregational church. The reports showed that the largest society in the Union is connected with the Trinity Dutch Reformed church of this city. It has a membership of 172, of whom 140 are active members. The average attendance at prayer meetings is ninety-five, and thirteen of the associate members united with the church during the year.

The society of the First Presbyterian church of this city, also reported a membership of fifty-three, an earnest interest in the prayer meetings, and marked development in all the matters of the organization.

A GRAND INSTRUMENT.

Every seat of the [illegible] in Dr. Ketcham's new church, was filled Monday night. It was the first time the edifice had been formally opened to the public, and the complimentary tickets issued were all accepted, even if only because of curiosity to inspect the interior of the edifice. But, besides, fully half the audience were music lovers who thoroughly appreciated the treat afforded by the inaugural concert of the new organ built for the church by Reuben Midmer & Son, of Brooklyn, who also built the instruments in the [illegible] and the Anchor Lodge rooms.

The instrumentalists of the occasion were Messrs Frank Taft and Henry Eyre Browne, who had both been heard before at the opening concert on the Odell organ which was first completed for the Crescent Avenue church. The vocalist was Miss Blanche Fellows, the leading soprano in St. Paul's Cathedral, Albany. She is a niece of Mr. J. M. [illegible] of North Plainfield. The programme as published in THE PRESS, last week, was rendered as follows:

PART I.

Overture to the Occasional Oratorio........Handel.
Toccata and Fugue in D. minor........Bach.
Henry Eyre Browne.
[illegible]—"O Sanctissima"........[illegible]
Frank Taft.
"[illegible] Thirsteth for God"........Mendelssohn.
Miss Blanche Fellows.
a. Bridal March, "Lohengrin"
b. Pilgrims' Chorus, "Tannhauser" } Wagner.
Frank Taft.
Sonata in D minor, op. [illegible]........Merkel.
Henry Eyre Browne.

PART II.

[illegible] Toccata in F........Bach.
[illegible] Storm........Adapted by Taft.
Frank Taft.
"[illegible] I've heard the seraphs"........J. Faure.
Miss Blanche Fellows.
Adagio, 1st Symphony........Beethoven.
Finale 5th Organ Symphony........Widor.
Henry Eyre Browne.
[illegible] de Ste Cecile........Batiste.
Frank Taft.

Miss Fellows' singing was especially pleasing. Her selections were well suited for the display of her voice, and the way they were rendered evidenced her faultless training. Her method in every particular is perfect, and her voice is rich and sweet. She received an enthusiastic recall—the only encore of the evening that was granted in.

Mr. Taft and Mr. Browne have already been criticised in these columns, and are, besides, so well known now that nothing more can be said of them. Mr. Taft again proved what a brilliant and showy player he is, and how unrivalled he stands in ability and skill to display the solo effects and novel combinations of a church organ. As usual he was the more enjoyed of the two. Mr. Browne's selections were mostly beyond the appreciation—not to mention the comprehension—of at least three-quarters of his audience.

The organ is a grand one, and the public will join in the hope that frequent opportunity to hear it, will be granted them. It comprises three manuals and pedals, and has 1,264 speaking pipes. It was designed by Architect [illegible] and built by Mr. John Chandler, in [illegible].

VIEWED FROM THE METROPOLIS.

A New York paper of Sunday contained a column about the people in the swim of Plainfield, which was described as a city "without any back streets." Much of the article was either colossal nonsense or prodigious sarcasm, and in fact none of its society news was at all noticeable except such as had been copied from back numbers of THE PRESS. Below is quoted some of the good and true, the bad and erroneous—and some of the ironical, as well:

"Probably the representative leaders of the 'four hundred' are the family of Mr. J. Evarts Tracy, of West Eighth street. Like all true leaders, Mr. Tracy's family would doubtless disclaim all pretense to leadership. And yet the fact remains that Mr. Tracy and his estimable wife and large family of interesting young people are the real centre of Plainfield's very exclusive best society. Mr. Tracy is a nephew of Senator Evarts, and the family being in mourning for his mother are not identifying themselves prominently with society events at present. Associated with them are Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Perkins, the latter a daughter of Senator Evarts.

"With them are Mr. Augustus D. Shepard and family. Mr. Shepard is a brother of the editor of the Mail and Express. His eldest daughter, Miss Mollie, is probably the fairest and sweetest-faced girl in Plainfield. Her face is familiar to the friends of her uncle in New York, at whose house she is a frequent guest. During the Summer while Mr. John Taylor Johnston and family occupy their residence on Front street, they are important factors in the Summer-tide festivities of the town. Mrs. Johnston's death last year and the long illness and subsequent death of Mr. Collis Johnston the previous year have been the cause of this family's entire withdrawal from Plainfield as well as New York society.

"The elegant home of Mr. Charles Potter, Jr., on West Seventh street, is thrown open for entertainment more than any other in town. Two unmarried daughters, the Misses Florence and Mabel Potter, are exceedingly popular. Mrs. William Palmer Smith of Netherwood Heights, is considered one of the most striking-looking ladies from that locality. She has a very fine figure, dresses with good taste, and with her wealth and position easily takes place among the best society. The wife of Mr. Frederick F. Beals of Crescent avenue, is considered one of the most beautiful women in town. Her complexion is a marvel of loveliness.

"The family of Mr. Orville T. Waring of Park avenue, is an interesting one. The marriage of Miss Frances, the eldest daughter, to Mr. Louis Gouverneur Timpson the past Winter, was one of the finest social events Plainfield has ever witnessed. A brother of Mr. Waring, Mr. Edward Waring, and his wife are readily recognized as leaders of society in the Washington Park district. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wadsworth of Central avenue, are great entertainers. Mrs. Wadsworth is a very handsome blonde, tall and stately. Not a few people consider her one of the most beautiful women in town. A brother, Mr. William Wadsworth, and wife are recognized as belonging to the 'four hundred.' The recent death of Mrs. Wadsworth's mother has closed their beautiful home on Eighth street to any extensive entertainment. It is not true that the names of all of Plainfield's most exclusive society are given here. Only those who are most prominently identified with society events have been mentioned.

"Among the Washington Park people the families of Mr. Morgan S. Taylor, Mr. Martin I. Cooley and Mr. James McGee, late President of the New York Produce Exchange, are representatives. Mrs. Cooley is a bright, sparkling little woman, very popular. Mr. McGee has two unmarried daughters, the Misses Emma and Adelaide, who are considered in every way charming girls. Mr. and Mrs. William J. Roome of Willow and Mercer avenues, are great society-loving people. Mr. and Mrs. B. Arrowsmith Hegeman, Jr., easily bear the palm as a handsome and stylish couple. Mrs. Hegeman is the daughter of Mr. Charles Matthews, and is a niece of the late Frederick A. Potts. Her face is the picture of glowing health. Her manner is vivacious and bright. Their beautiful home, with its ample grounds on Grove street, gives them opportunities for frequent entertainments, of which they are not slow to avail themselves. A most charming young lady is Miss Ida Musgrave, daughter of J. J. Musgrave, the New York banker. In complexion she is a decided brunette, her form is tall and willowy, her manner is gracious and pleasing. The house of Charles McCutcheon, on Rock View and Washington avenues, is by all odds the most beautiful one in the Park. Its doors are not infrequently open to the demands of society.

"At Netherwood the family of James Anthony are recognized leaders. Mr. Anthony occupies the handsome house built several years ago by John F. Plummer. Across the avenue the beautiful home of Mr. Henry P. Talmage stands just on the edge of the hill. A little lower Henry C. Bowen, son of the famous editor, lives. These three families form the nucleus of Netherwood's best society.

"The Poverty Cotillion, composed entirely of young people, has dancing as a means and an end, and embraces representatives from many of the best people in town. Among the many pretty young ladies who belong to it is Miss Kittie Stewart, daughter of W. E. Stewart of West Seventh street. Miss Stewart is a tall, stately blonde, has an abundance of beautiful hair and dresses with great taste. Her eyes are dark and lustrous. The daughter of Eric Erickson, Miss Jean, is a very lovely and lovable girl. The family of John W. Murray, of Central avenue and Eighth street, are embraced in this circle. The oldest son, William D. Murray, is one of the most popular young men in town with all classes. He has devoted most of his time to Christian work and is now President of the Y. M. C. A.

"The Monday Afternoon Club, which embraces Crescent avenue, Park avenue and Broadway people, bears the reputation of furnishing more real enjoyment than any other club in town. Mrs. C. E. Brooks, nee Miss Sally Ames, is its treasurer and, practically speaking, its centre. To it belong also Mr. and Mrs. Rowland Cox of Seventh street; Mr. George Wharton Edward, the artist, and wife. Its centre of gravity is Steinway Hall, where most of its social gatherings are held, though occasionally some of its members open their doors to a cotillion, german or evening of private theatricals. Mr. and Mrs. Frank S. Herring, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Fleming and Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Lowe are all recognized as leaders in this special circle of society, and are all of them prominent as entertainers."

A Narrow Escape All Around.

As Dr. E. W. Rushmore went to step into his buggy on Grand View avenue, last Thursday, the impatient broncho attached to the vehicle started and in a few minutes was going down the street at a rapid gait beyond the control of the gentleman who held the reins.

The Doctor looking anxiously after the runaway, saw the buggy upset as it turned a corner near the Children's Home, and his anxiety increased as he saw his friend thrown out into the road. The horse was stopped by some painters at work for Mayor Cooley, and Dr. Rushmore found that his riding companion was able to walk, although much bruised. The buggy, also, was but little damaged.

CITY COUNCIL MEETING.

An animated session of the City Council was held Friday evening, the object being to give the members an opportunity to thoroughly discuss the water works and sewerage question. That the subjects were thoroughly discussed, goes without saying, as this report indicates later on. The night was warm and sultry and the mercury in the thermometer in the Council chamber was playing foot ball up in the eighties when President Dumont called the meeting to order at 8:30 o'clock. In answer to the roll call, all the members responded except Messrs Myers and Watson.

The reading of the minutes and the regular order of procedure were dispensed with, and Mr. Newhall's motion to take up and act upon the report and resolutions submitted by the Committee on Water, Printing and Stationery at the last meeting, prevailed. Mr. Newhall stated that Engineer Herring was present, and willing and ready to answer any questions the members of the Council saw fit to ask him.

Clerk Oliver B. Leonard read the Committee's resolutions authorizing the return of the general specifications for the erection of water works and sewerage for revision, and providing for an increased expense of $200.

THE DISCUSSION BEGINS.

Mr. Marsh spoke at length. He said among other things, that with two reports, those of Engineers Bassett and Herring, the Council should be prepared and ready to ask for proposals. He said he knew of companies which were ready to bid on certain conditions. To outsiders, he said, it looked as though the thing was arranged so that certain parties would get the bid. He said he thought the Committee could ask the various contractors to send in their bids, on the strength of the two reports already presented by competent engineers, and to specify on what terms and conditions they would furnish the City with water. He withdrew a motion of his made at a previous meeting, and substituted one to the effect that all reference to sewerage be stricken out of the general specifications. After a long discussion, the motion prevailed, Messrs Dunham, Erickson and Newhall voting against the motion.

Corporation Council Marsh was present and stated the manner in which the City could procure sewerage. The latest statute, he said was passed last Winter. It provided that the citizens first petition the Council, said Council to call for estimates of two or more systems, then advertise for bids and accept the lowest bid. In case of damages or benefits to property owners, application is made to the District Court Judge, he to appoint Commissioners. Another act was passed in 1882. The act of '88, the Corporation Counsel said, was the most favorable if submitted to the people.

Engineer Herring stated that in Philadelphia sewers were constructed under a similar law.

Mr. Squires said he was willing to support any measure that would lead to the establishment of water works, but he did not agree with the Committee in the matter of sewerage. He favored a gradual system.

Mr. Dunham favored the introduction of both water works and sewerage, and thought it best to wait until bids could be received for both. He said he considered that sewerage was the more necessary.

The revised general specifications submitted by Engineer Herring were then taken up and discussed at length. Mr. Marsh stated that through some misunderstanding the Water Committee had got a report from Mr. Herring, but it was not so full as that made by Engineer Bassett two years ago, and it contained no specifications upon which a man can bid.

Mr. Dumont said the Committee could not get detailed specifications because the appropriation made for that purpose was not large enough.

In the matter of considering Green and Stony Brooks as sources of supply, Mr. Newhall said that the Committee had come to the conclusion that they were no good, partly because of low water in the dry [illegible] and because of the muddy condition of the streams. Of the two sources Stony Brook is the better.

Engineer Herring was asked to state why the Passaic River supply was included in the general specification. He said that New Jersey has a water commission, and that the State has been divided into districts. The commission has named the Passaic River as the future water supply for Plainfield. Stony Brook, he said, would be a good source for obtaining water at present, but in later years when the City becomes more thickly populated, and an extra supply of water was needed, it would then be comparatively easy to cross the mountain and connect with the Passaic River. Mr. Herring considered that a sufficient quantity of subterranean water could not be obtained. The underground water, he continued, runs from the Northeast to the Southwest. While a sufficient amount of running water can be had the City's health will not be affected, but when it becomes necessary to draw back the subterranean flow from the lower part of the city, then the surface water will settle into the porous ground, and become dangerous to the health of the residents in the lower part of the City.

After some modifications were made to the general specifications, a resolution was adopted authorizing the return of said general specifications to the Committee for revision and to have the same printed in pamphlet form; also to advertise in two trade journals and in the City papers for bids for the construction of water works. The bids are to be made in conformity to the method submitted by the Committee, and will be opened in the Council chamber on August 5, at 8 P. M.

Mr. Newhall introduced a resolution which prevailed, that upon the request of the applicants who have already made bids, for the return of the same, that the requests be granted.

Mr. Gallup offered a resolution authorizing the collector to return on or before July 2, to the City Judge, the names of the tax delinquents, the City Judge to immediately issue his warrant to Vincent W. Nash for collection. The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Marsh stated that inasmuch as it had been reported to the Police Board that there were numerous places in the city where liquor was illegally sold, and that the police were powerless to enforce the law, he thought the Council should back up the authorities and authorize the Mayor to expend $300 for the detection of illegal sellers. He made a motion to that effect. This brought forth considerable discussion.

Mr. Moffett said that it was the duty of the Mayor or some other city official to communicate to the Council the fact that liquor was sold illegally, before voting $300 to employ detectives on hearsay evidence.

In response to a question as to where he got his information concerning illegal selling, Mr. Marsh said that he had been informed by certain Councilmen.

Mr. Dumont said that if the Mayor or other proper authorities should make application for the money, he would vote in favor of granting it. If it was to be used for "spies," he wanted to know the name of the officer who requested the money. The motion was lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs Dunham, Marsh, Newhall and Squires—4.

Nays—Messrs Dumont, Erickson, Gallup, Jenkins, Moffett—5.

Council adjourned at 10:30 o'clock.

—Don't forget the tennis tournament, Saturday at 3 P. M.

Election of Officers.

At a regular Convention of Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, K. of P., held Friday night, the following officers were elected to serve for the term ending Dec. 31.

Chancellor Commander—J. C. VanDyke.
Vice Chancellor—Samuel Miller.
Prelate—S. J. Robinson.
Master-at-Arms—Edward Hann.
Trustee—J. W. Ford.

Reform Hall Meeting.

There was a good-sized audience present at the Reform Club meeting in Reform Hall, last Sunday. President French was in the chair, and Rev. C. L. Goodrich, pastor of the Congregational church, conducted the devotional exercises. Spirited and interesting addresses were delivered by Rev. Messrs C. L. Goodrich and J. B. Cleaver. The usual Reform Club choir furnished the music.

To Retire From Business.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Dreier of West Front street, are soon to retire from business, and spend the remainder of their days in quietude. Mrs. Dreier states that she intends to remodel the building at the corner of Front street and Madison avenue, by adding another story and fitting up the same in flats with all the modern appointments. Mr. and Mrs. Dreier will reside there permanently.

Run Over by a Coal Wagon.

Wm. Perrine, a gardener, who resides near the gravel pit, was run over by a coal wagon at the corner of Front and Somerset streets, about 4:30 o'clock afternoon of June 19, and sustained painful injuries to his left foot. The injured man attempted to climb into the wagon in which his brother was seated, when he slipped and fell, the hind wheels passing over his foot. Officer Lynch accompanied him home in a carriage.

George Thatcher, the Minstrel, Receives a Surprise.

The Leadville, Col., Herald of Saturday, June 15, says: "As the 'Second Edition' came on in the first part at the Tabor Opera House last night a gentleman surmounted the footlights and approaching George Thatcher, presented him with an elegant solitaire diamond bosom pin. The minstrel was taken by surprise. The pin was a gift of Joseph Gavin, of the Board of Trade."

Tennis by Mixed Doubles.

As the tennis tournament held at Mr. I. W. Rushmore's was so great a success, it has been decided to have another tournament. This contest will be played by "mixed doubles," and on the Central avenue courts, on Saturday the 29th inst.

As the object is to increase the building fund of the Y. M. C. A., it is earnestly hoped that all friends of the above Association, and the tennis-loving part of the community, will be well represented at this great contest.

COMMENCEMENT AT SCOTCH PLAINS.

The public school closed a week earlier than usual this year, chiefly on account of the warm weather, and because the scholars have been working unusually hard. The Commencement exercises were held Friday evening. This is always the greatest occasion of the year, and Excelsior Hall is sure to be packed. It was never more so than it was this time; in fact, few except the ladies could get seats, and many of them had to stand.

All of the graduating class read essays. Miss Mary Mercier's paper on "Moonshine" indicated considerable research; Miss Nellie Hollingsworth, who has small brothers and sisters enough to furnish material for several novels, wrote from experience upon "Children in Literature." "Social Sins" was the theme of Miss Anna Radin, and she found plenty of them. Miss Fanny Haskard read a carefully written essay entitled "At Cost," and to her the Valedictory address was assigned. Miss Haskard discharged her trust faithfully, and although her address was very short, it went exactly to the point. Perhaps among the essays, that of Miss Emma Clark upon "Failures," carried off the palm. The duett sung by Misses Lillie Nicholl and Christine Sorensen, was exceptionally good. The doll drill was on a par with the flag drill and tambourine drill that were so successful last year, and it called forth such tumultuous applause that Mr. Nicholl had to announce that no encores could be given.

Following is the programme:

Instrumental solo........Amy Cook
Essay—Moonshine........Mary Mercier
Song—Vocal Duett........Lillie Nicholl, Christine Sorensen
Essay—Children of Literature........Nellie Hollingsworth
Instrumental Duett........Lillie Nicholl, Blanche Sayre
Doll Drill........Pupils from Primary Dept.
Essay—Failures........Emma Clark
Recitation........[illegible] Marsh
Vocal Duett........Nellie Hollingsworth, Mabel Mooney
Essay—Social Sins........Anna Radin
Recitation........John [illegible]
Essay—At Cost........(with the Valedictory address) Fanny Haskard.
Awarding of diplomas, 2d grade certificates and 3d grade certificates.
Announcement of Roll of Honor in Primary Department.
Song........School

The following is the Roll of Honor of the two lower rooms. Mr. Nicholl said that he was sorry certificates could not be awarded to these scholars because the grade of their course was not high enough, but that they would be given the honor of public mention.

First Primary, A Class—Florence Nicholl, George Snyder, Anna Belle Snyder, Philip Jahn.

B Class—John Wade, Bertha Frentz, Flora McNair, Carrie Flynn.

Second Primary, A Class—Kittie Flynn, Edna Nicholl, Roger Haskard, Lizzie Reick.

B Class—Willie Illsley, Jeppe Sorensen, Jennie Frentz.

C Class—Jennie Coyte, Etta Cook, Nettie Reick.

I am very sorry that I have not at hand the names of the scholars who received Second and Third Grade certificates, but I will try to give them next week.

The following pupils have not been absent from school a single day: Anna Radin, Mamie Mercier, Anna Murphy, Ella Frentz, Bella Mercier, Walter Collins, Willie Illsley, Kittie Flynn.

Mr. T. J. Nicholl presented the graduates with their diplomas, and made the address. Although the latter was a little one, it was first-rate, and remarkably free from the stale platitudes usually promulgated on such occasions. There was something said, I believe, about some one else having been originally expected to make the address, but no one could have spoken more forcibly and to the point than did Mr. Nicholl.

I suppose it's Mr. Goodenough's fault that we have such good school entertainments nowadays. They are never uncomfortably long, and are interesting throughout. The teachers deserve great credit; they themselves feel that their year's work has been a successful one, which is often the only satisfaction that a teacher gets, but in this case they feel that everybody is in accord with them, so they have the added pleasure of knowing that even the parents, often unreasonable and hard to please, have no fault to find.

And as for the Board of Trustees, which sat upon the stage vigorously fanning itself and trying to keep cool, well, I don't think there is any very pressing and immediate need of its worrying itself as to whether the people are satisfied.

Stopped Dead When Starting for Home.

The funeral of Rodolphus R. MacDonald will take place at his late home on East Front street, Friday afternoon, at three o'clock. The remains were brought on from Asbury Park, Tuesday, arriving here about six o'clock in the evening.

Mr. MacDonald was in the sixty-fourth year of his age. He has been suffering from a rheumatic affection about the heart for the past few weeks, and intended returning home Tuesday. His trunks had already been sent, and he came down on the porch to take the carriage for the station.

Suddenly he was oppressed for breath and asked to be taken "out-doors." A chair was brought at once, into which he sank and almost immediately fell back dead. This occurred at 7:30 o'clock in the morning, just as the carriage that was to take him to the train for home, was coming up the street. The cause of death was heart failure from valvular insufficiency.

The Rev. W. R. Richards, Dr. K. F. Ketcham, and the Rev. Cornelius Schenck, will officiate at the funeral services.

The North Plainfield Graduating Exercises.

SATURDAY'S TROTTING.

There was an increased attendance at the track of the Gentlemen's Driving Park Association on Saturday afternoon, at the second in Summer series of trotting contests which are to take place there during the present season. The track was in excellent condition, and some good time was made. The judges were Messrs. J. W. Johnson, O. T. Waring and Nate Robbins, the latter of Metuchen.

In the first race to harness there were three entries, viz. John Osborn's "[illegible]," John Hayes' "Andy" and Wm. Van Sickle's "Sag Wah." The first named horse won two straight heats, with "Andy" second. Time 2:57 and 2:51½.

The next heat was the deciding one in the unfinished race between Nate Robbins' handsome black horse, "Metuchen Boy," and Geo. B. Bascomb's "Harry." The two first heats were trotted two weeks ago, each horse winning a heat, "Metuchen Boy" trotting the mile in 2:57 and "Harry" in 2:56. Mr. Robbins' horse won the deciding heat in 2:55, and this time would have been considerably lowered, if "Metuchen Boy" was pushed.

Mr. A. C. Vail drove his horse "Betsy Bobbitt" against "Ed." Waring's "Ledger Boy" in a mile heat to wagon, owners driving. "Betsy Bobbitt" crossed the line at 2:45¼, thus winning the heat.

Ex-Councilman O. T. Waring drove his horse "Copeland" to wagon, the fastest on the track this season, making the half mile in 1:17¼.

There were other "sports" but the time was not recorded.

A Suburban Choral Organization That Excels Anything in the City.

Evona can justly boast of something in which Plainfield cannot rival her—the Evona Vocal Club. The second private concert of Club took place Tuesday evening, as announced in THE PRESS, in the Dunellen Presbyterian church, and the rendition of the extensive programme given below, would have been creditable to many larger, more experienced, or professional choral organizations.

The officers of the Club are: President, Mr. R. J. Shaw; Vice President, Mr. C. W. Oley, Secretary, Mr. P. Rupp, M. D.; Treasurer, Mr. J. Fowler Pound; Librarian, Miss Elizabeth G. East.

The church was comfortably filled by an appreciative audience that numbered many musical people from this city. The encores were frequent and hearty. The Club was assisted by: Miss Bella L. Watson, soprano; Miss Edith Tuttle, contralto; Mr. Robert Schreyvogel, tenor; Mr. Wm. T. Angel, baritone; Miss Jessie Utter, pianist; Mrs. Kate C. Conant, musical directress and Miss Margie Atkinson, accompanist. The programme was as follows:

PART I.

Part song—Ladybird........Cowen.
Evona Vocal Club.
Tenor solo—Longing........Rubenstein.
Mr. Schreyvogel.
Soprano solo—Lieto Signori—The Huguenots........Meyerbeer.
Miss Watson.
Chorus—Spring Waltz........Milde.
Evona Vocal Club.
Alto solo—Love's Sorrow........Shelley.
Miss Tuttle.
Baritone solo—Serenade........Schubert.
Mr. Angel.

PART II.

Soprano solo and chorus—Gypsie Life........R. Schumann.
Miss Stevens and Evona Vocal Club.
Duetts. { a. A Streamlet full of Flowers. b. Nearest and Dearest. } Carracciolo.
Miss Watson and Miss Tuttle.
Baritone solo—Lost Chord........Sullivan.
Mr. Angel.
Oft in the Stilly Night—Harmonized by Max Vogrich........(From No. 87.)
Evona Vocal Club.
Soprano solo—Stars of the Summer Night. Tours.
Miss Watson.
Part song—Bugle Song........Jordan.
Evona Vocal Club.

Too much credit cannot be given Mrs. Conant for the meritorious results of her patient training. She has organized and drilled a chorus of voices that render some of the most difficult parts [illegible] with a shading and harmony that is seldom excelled. Milde's Spring Waltz was sung most beautifully, the soprano and basso parts, especially, being full and true. It was loudly encored.

Miss Watson and Miss Tuttle, each, received sincere recalls to their solos, and their duetts were also much enjoyed. The former sang as encores, "He Thinks I do not Love Him," "Maid of Dundee," and a Lullaby, and the latter gave Goetz's "O, Happy Day!" Miss Watson possesses a very sweet and sympathetic voice, while Miss Tuttle's is remarkably fine and rich, and its expression perfect. Mr. Schreyvogel's tenor solo was very charming. Mr. Angel replied to sincere recalls with, "One Sweetly Solemn Thought," and Molloy's "Polly!"

The pulpit of the church was banked with ferns, grasses and calla lilies. There were twenty-two members of the chorus on the platform. The letters "E. V. C." built of daisies, were suspended above them.

—The Evona Juniors beat the Dunellen Stars in a game of base ball at Dunellen on Saturday afternoon, by a score of 28 to 21. Smith pitched for the Juniors. The Juniors would like to play any nine not over 16 years old. Inquire at G. Smith's, 220 South Second street, near the Pond Tool Works.

W. L. Force, Postmaster.

—Oh, for a Y. M. C. A. building.

—The fund for it has now reached $20,436.

—The regular business meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held in rooms on Tuesday next at 3 P. M.

—Friday was the longest day of the year. You all saw the end of it, but how few saw the beginning.

—The Board of Freeholders will meet on Tuesday afternoon next owing to Thursday coming on July 4.

—The service of song announced for next Sunday evening in Crescent Avenue church, has been indefinitely postponed.

—The ball game Saturday afternoon between the Orients of this city and the Evonas, resulted in a victory for the latter by a score of 29 to 14.

—We are always glad to see home interests succeed, and every good citizen ought to feel proud when anything of a local character attracts attention.

—If there is one subject, more than any other, which should engage the attention of our people, it is the welfare of the young men and women of our city.

—The New Jersey Central Railroad Company is building an eight-story building for offices, [illegible], at the corner of Liberty and West streets, New York city.

—A regular meeting of Alpha Lodge, No. 4, I. O. G. T., was held in the Sons of Temperance rooms on Friday evening, when two applications for membership were received.

—Chief T. O. Doane's residence on West Fifth street has been equipped with a telephone instrument and the Chief can now be communicated with by telephone. His number is 72.

—The Reform Club excursion to Rockaway on August 8, promises to be an interesting event. The steamer "Grand Republic" will convey the excursionists to and from the beach.

—Rev. Mr. [illegible] of Brooklyn, preached an interesting sermon in the Unitarian course, before a large audience in Jacob Bros.' piano warerooms on East Front street, Sunday evening.

—A meeting of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals will be held in the office of Chief of Police T. J. Carey, on Monday evening next. A full attendance of the members is requested.

—The graduating class of the North Plainfield public school this year numbers twenty-five pupils. The exercises will take place in Warren Mission chapel, on Thursday evening, the 27th instant.

—The city fund for the relief of the Johnstown sufferers was enriched today $33.45, the result of the entertainment recently given in Reform Hall by Mizpah Lodge, United Order of Independent Odd Ladies.

—The weak fish have arrived at Sewaren Beach and have come to stay. Messrs Wm. H., Samuel D., and Frank H. Price, of Newark, caught 25 fine ones there, Friday, with some of John Turner's choice bait.

—"When a cinder gets in one eye"—says an engineer—"rub the other eye, and let the suffering member have its rub by proxy. In a little while the cinder will pass out of the corner of the eye, and may easily be removed."

—One week more will close Dr. Kimball's stay at the City Hotel, as he is advertised to be in Trenton the first week in July. All troubled by their feet in any way, may be cured permanently and cheaply, by his treatment.

—The Board of Education will receive sealed proposals up to the 29th inst., for the delivery of 200 tons of furnace coal at the various school houses in this city. All proposals should be addressed to Louis F. Wadsworth, Secretary of the Board.

—The Lehigh Valley Railroad company has located and named a station on its branch between South Plainfield and Bodelle, "Marcinea." The new station is located about one-quarter of a mile east of where the branch road crosses Park avenue.

—An esteemed reader writes that the 17-year locusts were around this part of the country not more than twelve years ago, hence it is altogether too soon to look for them this Summer. But maybe the locusts expected will be another 17-year variety.

—Newspapers are often criticised for what they print, but if it were known how much credit they deserve for what they don't print, or for the nonsense they whack out of what they do print, they would command a much more generous judgment.

—Dr. Kimball, the chiropodist, will remain at the City Hotel for a few days longer, where he would be pleased to meet all persons who are suffering from corns, and other foot troubles. The doctor shows special favors to persons in moderate circumstances.

—A special service for the institution of the surpliced choir of Grace church was held in that place last Sunday. The service included prayer, the versicles, anthems, the creed, the examination of those to be admitted choristers, and an address by the rector, Rev. E. M. Rodman. The attendance was very large.

—There were over two hundred persons at the depot when the milk train arrived, last Sunday. Many of them took passage on the train, and many others were there out of mere curiosity. One thing in particular which amused the crowd, was a man with a big box encircling his waist, from which cool and refreshing "water" was drawn to quench the thirst of the bystanders.

—Directly after the first of August, N. D. Lauter Co., of Newark, will commence extensive alterations in the building recently purchased by them at 657 and 659 Broad street, and as soon as they are completed, will occupy the entire building, using the first floor for offices and for the display of the higher grades of Pianos, grands and uprights. The second floor will be used for general warerooms; on the third floor they will make additional music rooms for the use of music teachers, and a large room for storage purposes; the fourth floor will be for work connected with the repairs of pianos and organs. These and many other improvements which they will make, will place their establishment at the head of their line of trade, and will give them the largest and finest piano and organ warerooms in this State.

J., formerly of this city, died at the home of his father last week, from hasty consumption, after an illness of about six weeks. Interment was made at that place Wednesday, 19th inst. Mr. Hill won several medals for fancy roller skating while the skating craze was in progress. Mr. Hill gave several exhibitions of his skill at the Casino in this city.

At the home of the bride's father in Scranton, Pa., Thursday, at noon, took place the marriage of Jessie Merriweather and Lewis Melville Evans, youngest son of the late ex-Mayor Evans of this city. On account of the recent bereavement of the groom's family, only the immediate relatives were present. The Rev. K. P. Ketcham, D. D., of this city, assisted in the ceremony. After their wedding trip, Mr. and Mrs. Evans expect to make a visit at "Oakwood," early in July.

Miss Mary J. Loftus is spending a week at Carbondale, Pa.

Mr. Eugene Lorton is still very sick at his home in this city.

Dr. D. Godfrey Atwood, dental surgeon, has removed his office to 15 East Front street.

Mr. Frank Vosseller of Broadway will start for Chicago on Monday next where he will permanently locate.

Miss Dora Ouderkirk, now of Philadelphia, has been visiting former school mates and neighbors in this city.

Mr. James Frazee of East Second street was presented Monday morning by his wife, with a baby girl. Mother and child are both doing well.

Mr. "Charley" Smith of Front and Somerset streets is the happy father of a bouncing baby girl. The little one arrived Monday, and weighs 'teen pounds.

Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Musgrave, and Miss Lefferts, of 47th street, New York, spent Sunday at the home of Mr. Musgrave's father, Mr. J. G. Musgrave, of Washington Park, North Plainfield.

The four-year-old son of an Italian, whose name is unknown, pulled a bicycle over on himself Wednesday at the depot and fractured the right leg in two places. Dr. J. T. Fritts set the broken limb.

James T. McElroy, M. D., died Tuesday morning, in the 34th year of his age, at his home, 29 GrandView avenue, where he has been living for the past three months. He leaves a widow, the granddaughter of the late 'Squire James Verdon, of Somerset street.

Miss Carrie Dusenbury, a sister-in-law of Bishop John H. Vincent, was the guest during yesterday of Mr. and Mrs. Theo. French of West Fifth street. Miss Dusenbury sailed for Europe today on the steamer City of New York, in company with a party of friends from Buffalo.

The standing of Miss Louise B. Runyon in the High School class of '89, was so high that it was almost an utter impossibility to decide between her and Miss Ella U. Osborne in making the appointment of valedictorian. The fact that the latter was ultimately chosen, does not imply that Miss Runyon's scholarship was less praiseworthy.

The many friends of Mr. Randolph Dunham, will be sorry to learn of his misfortune in being very badly hurt by a horse about four weeks ago. Dr. Fritts has daily attended him, as the case is worse than a fracture, being diseased at the bone. Mr. Dunham is the father of Surveyor F. A. Dunham and O. M. Dunham of Front street, this city.

Respectfully Referred to the Proper Authorities.

It is a shame and an outrage to clean cess pools or out-houses in the day time, as was done Thursday afternoon about 4 o'clock in the rear of some buildings on Park avenue. The numerous guests of Force's Hotel were obliged to leave the dining room in consequence of the odor arising. Should not such work be done at night?

The Stereopticon Show.

The unpopularity of the news was again demonstrated by the fact that only 125 persons, including ushers, deadheads and all, assembled in Music Hall, Thursday, to witness the stereopticon exhibition gotten up by Mr. T. W. Morrison, editor of the news, assisted by Architect Oscar S. Teale of North Plainfield. The object of the entertainment, as the editor stated, in a swallow-tailed coat, was to increase the fund for the Johnstown sufferers. It is unfortunate for the sufferers that the affair was not under different auspices.

Some excellent views of the dilapidated condition of Johnstown, Cambria, Woodvale and other places visited by the flood, were exhibited on the canvas, together with scenes at and around the South Fork dam. Several maps were also displayed "for the edification of scientific men," and the debris and wreckage piled up on the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and in some of the principal streets of Johnstown, so the spectators were told, was forty feet high.

The views in the Conemaugh Valley were followed by a series of miscellaneous pictures, presented and described by Mr. Teale, and also a number of excellent views taken at different points along the line of the recent Centennial parade in New York.

A feature of the entertainment was the delightful rendition of "Home, Sweet Home," by the Holy Cross choir, while a panoramic view of Johnstown was being exhibited on the canvas.

The originators of the scheme lost money by the entertainment, partly because it was brought out after the Conemaugh Valley sufferers had been relieved.

The Marriage of Mr. Kirkner and Miss Newell.

Grace Episcopal church, Tuesday night, was again filled with society people, the wealth and culture of the city, upon the occasion of another marriage in high life. The bride was Miss Kathleen F. Newell, daughter of Mr Theodore H. Newell, formerly proprietor of the extensive oilcloth works on North avenue and Richmond street, and the groom was Mr. George Moss Kirkner, eldest son of the Hon. Jacob Kirkner, President of the Board of Education.

The bride's intimate friends had decorated the interior of the church in a charming way. Across the aisle, midway to the altar, was built an arch of daisies and ferns, the reredos was banked with the same, and ropes of daisies were twined about the reading desk. The sun shone gorgeously through the stained glass windows. During the wait those present were entertained with a programme of organ music by Mrs. Freeman, including Leybach's Suisse Tyrol, Kullak's Grand Parade, a Scherzettino by Sternberg, Hunt's Shepherd's Morning Song, and a Rustic March by Villeroccia.

The bridal party entered to the music of the Lohengrin March. It was headed by the ushers, Messrs John B. Drayton and Robert A. Fairbairn, of this city, Mr. Edmund T. Church of New York, and Mr. Charles E. Machold of Philadelphia. Following them were the bridesmaids, Miss Minnie Case of Brooklyn, and Miss Carrie Kirkner, sister of the groom, with another sister, Miss May Kirkner, as maid of honor. These maids were all dressed in white India silk frocks, and carried bouquets of daisies and ferns.

The bride entered on the arm of her uncle. She was robed in white faille francaise, with white velvet brocade skirt embroidered with pearls. The veil of tulle was fastened with a costly pin of diamonds and pearls, a present of the groom's. In her hand was a prayer book. Her beauty was the subject of general admiration. The bridal party was met at the steps of the altar by the groom with his cousin, Mr. Frank H. Moss, of Philadelphia, who acted as best man.

The ceremony was performed by Archdeacon Erskine M. Rodman. There was no formal reception afterwards, and Mr. and Mrs. Kirkner left at once for a short bridal tour. They will divide their residence hereafter between this city and New York where the groom is enrolled in business among the brokers of Wall street. The couple's popularity and the esteem in which they are held, was evidenced by the quantities of costly presents received.

—"Dot leedle game of draw poker," is in progress every Sunday, in a certain secluded spot. The police have their eyes on the place, and a wholesale "gathering in" may soon be looked for.

DEDICATED.

THE NEW FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH FORMALLY TRANSFERRED.

The handsome and costly edifice on East Front street, which has recently been erected for the congregation of the First Presbyterian church, was formally dedicated for the spread of Christianity, Tuesday even'g, when a large and fashionable audience was present to witness the initiative service. Rev. Dr. K. P. Ketcham, the pastor, who for the past eighteen years has faithfully labored with his flock, officiated, and the regular church choir rendered special music for the occasion in a truly delightful manner, accompanied on the new Midmer organ by Dr. E. W. Hedges. As before stated, the attendance was large, and courteous ushers and church officers exerted themselves to comfortably seat all who applied for admission.

The service opened with an organ voluntary and Gloria, Mass in B Flat by the choir, followed by the doxology by the choir and congregation. Rev. Dr. Studdiford, at one time pastor of the First Presbyterian church in this city, but now pastor of the Third Presbyterian church of Trenton, invoked the divine blessing, the congregation joining, at the close, in repeating the Lord's prayer.

After a hymn was sung, Rev. Dr. Studdiford read from the Scripture according to Second Chronicles, sixth chapter, beginning with the 17th verse, and also from Revelations, 21st chapter.

Another hymn was sung, after which Rev. Chas. L. Thompson, D. D., pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian church, of New York, who was also an associate of Rev. Dr. Ketcham at Princeton, and who sailed for Europe today, preached an eloquent sermon, taking for his text the ninth verse of First Corinthians, thirteenth chapter: "For we know in part, and we prophesy in part." The learned doctor eloquently pictured out how Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, had prophesied certain things, yet only in part. We, as a people, he maintained, are prophets in reality, and yet only in part. The church of God, he said, is a prophet in the relation of her truth to His Word. Christian life is a true but limited expression of God's Word.

Dr. Ketcham led in prayer, after which he gave notice of the union dedication service on Friday evening, and the first regular church services on Sunday at 10.30 A. M., and 7:45 P. M., to which, he said, "all, rich and poor, strangers and friends, are welcomed to this house of God." The doctor very moderately asked for a liberal contribution, which was then taken up. He stated that the present dedication was the first the church has had in many years. Furthermore, it has never held a fair or festival to solicit funds. While the church is practically out of debt, he added, the trustees need $1,000.

Following the collection, the choir rendered Venite in E flat, by Dudley Buck, and Rev. Dr. Ketcham made a commendable dedication report, which is in substance as follows. In part he said: This is the third church of the First Presbyterian denomination which has been dedicated in Plainfield; all three have been dedicated in June. The first one was raised during the first week in July, 1826, and was dedicated the last Thursday in June, 1827. The first Sunday school in connection with the church was organized on the the third Sunday in December, 1826, with five teachers and twenty-three scholars. The first church building was converted into dwelling houses, and the latter now stand near the gas works. The first brick church, the one recently torn away to make room for the new edifice, was erected in 1854, the corner stone having been laid on Tuesday, December 26th of that year. The church was dedicated in June of the following year, 1855, Rev. Dr. Nicholas Mundy of Elizabeth, having preached the dedication sermon. Both of these dedications were under the pastorate of Rev. Lewis Bond, whose memory is ever held dear.

Here Dr. Ketcham stated that eighteen years ago Dr. Studdiford told him, that a new church was needed here, and now the new church was a reality. At a congregational meeting held in June, 1888, a committee was appointed to take charge of the whole matter of erecting a new church. The committee consisted of the following gentlemen: Messrs J. M. Bettman, chairman, Howard A. Pope, Fred C. Lounsbury, Wm. H. Shotwell, Edward St. John, Rev. K. P. Ketcham and Robert H. Radford. Mr. Oscar S. Teale was selected as the architect and to Mr. Isaac W. Pangborn was awarded the contract for the carpenter work and masonry. Mr. John Chandler did the carpenter work, much to his credit may it be said. The corner stone of the new building was laid with appropriate exercises on the afternoon of Thursday, September 13, 1888.

Here Dr. Ketcham spoke of the work done by the various contractors. The windows in the new edifice, he said, were made by Tidden & Arnold of Brooklyn. the memorial window, dedicated to memory of the late Sarah M. Latimer, represents Mary of Bethlehem pouring the precious oil on the head of the Saviour. The pulpit furniture is the gift of Miss Annie Page, the seven-year-old niece of Mrs. Latimer, and is built according to drawings by Mr. Teale.

Dr. Ketcham stated in his report, that out of a total cost of $43,000 for the new structure, Mrs. Latimer had contributed $38,000, showing an unselfish act of charity on her part. The deceased said previous to her death: "The old church is abundant and ample for me, but it is not adequate for Plainfield." She further gave instructions to have the new edifice furnished in modern style and in good taste. This church is her monument. She had but one wish and that was to live until the church was completed and to hear the pastor preach the first sermon from the new pulpit.

The Building Committee, Dr. Ketcham continued, have exerted their energies and wise action in carrying on the work, and at all times unity has prevailed. Much credit is due to Mr. John M. Bettman, Chairman of the Committee, and also to Mr. Oscar S. Teale for his judgment, taste and integrity. "We had faith in man," said the doctor. Bids were not solicited; competent men were selected, and the work was entrusted to their honesty. Messrs Pangborn and Chandler put $700 worth of additional labor on the organ front than they were under obligations to do, and Messrs Reuben Midmer & Son, the makers, incurred an additional expense of $1,000 on the organ, for which there was no extra charge. Dr. Ketcham alluded to the other contractors, all of whom, he said, had performed their work to the entire satisfaction of the committee. The total cost had not exceeded their expectations. He then on behalf of the Building Committee formally tendered the new church to the congregation, and especially to the Board of Trustees and to the session.

Mr. E. St. John accepted the church on behalf of the trustees, and expressed his hearty recognition of Mrs. Latimer's munificent gift. The trustees, he said, asked for the earnest support of the members of the church.

Mr. R. B. Opdyke replied for the session, recognizing the solemn trust now given to their care. With the acceptance of the church, he said, the honored pastor's association with the Building Committee will now mainly end.

The pastor and congregation read responsively from the Scripture, and the former delivered the dedication prayer. The choir sang "Jesus, Now Sweet," by Dudley Buck, and after the audience joined in singing a hymn, Rev. Dr. Studdiford pronounced the benediction, thus bringing the dedication service to a close.

The pulpit decorations were neat although not elaborate, and consisted wholly of ferns, cut flowers and potted plants.

The First Presbyterian church was organized in 1825, with less than two dozen members. The late Rev. Dr. Boyd was one of the first pastors of the church, and was followed by Rev. Dr. Studdiford, Rev. J. H. Myers and others. Rev. Dr. Ketcham, the present pastor, associated himself with the church about eighteen years ago. He is a native of Huntington, Long Island, and is a graduate of Princeton Theological Seminary. Under Dr. Ketcham's pastorate the membership has increased, and the church is today free from all debt. The first sermon by the pastor will be preached in the new church on Sunday morning next.

Fourth of July Excursions on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

In pursuance of the usual custom the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will open its line for Fourth of July travel at the usual reduction in rates.

Excursion tickets will be sold between all stations on the system on July 2d, 3d, and 4th, valid for return until July 8th, 1889.

At Keller's Grove.

About fifty young persons, representing the National Turn Verein of Newark and the Elizabethport Turn Verein came to this city and spent Sunday at Keller's Grove in North Plainfield, together with the members of the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein. The day was pleasantly passed in outdoor amusements, such as acrobatic feats, turning, jumping, climbing and putting the shot. The visitors returned home early in the evening, well pleased with the day's sport.

Where They Will Enter College.

The closing exercises at Prof. Leal's school, took place Friday in an appropriate manner. The pupils who have completed their course at Prof. Leal's school, and will now enter college, are as follows: John Paret, Jr., will enter Cornell University; Messrs A. H. Exton and W. L. Rockwell will enter the Lehigh University; A. S. Wadsworth enters the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; S. P. Hall goes to Harvard; E. S. Tracy goes to Yale; Thos. Hale, Jr., will enter Trinity College at Hartford, and Howard Opdyke will enter Stevens Institute of Technology.

Who the Contractors Are.

The new First Presbyterian church which was dedicated Tuesday evening, is wired throughout for incandescent lighting with the Westinghouse system by Mr. F. R. Kinsman, general manager of the Electrical Construction and Supply Company of New York city, of which Mr. F. S. Dunn is the agent in this city. The other contractors, outside of those mentioned elsewhere, are as follows: decorations, by the Stereo Relief Decoration Co.; gas fixtures and electrolier by Orly Giddings & Sons; painting, Woolston & Buckle; pulpit furniture, Barnatz & Diehl; cushions, H. D Osterman, & Son; carpets, Howard A. Pope.

A Tennis Tournament of Both Sexes.

Two weeks ago the "Ys" held a tennis tournament of young ladies only—the contestants in which were published exclusively in The Press—on the grounds of Mr. L. W. Rushmore, in aid of the building fund of the Y. M. C. A. Not only was the affair a success financially, but socially it was extremely enjoyable.

It was suggested at that time that a tournament of both ladies and gentlemen would be still more enjoyable, and so one has been arranged for the afternoon of Saturday, June 29, at the Tennis Club grounds, near the corner of Eighth street on Central avenue.

Gentlemen from the club and young ladies from the "Y" will participate, the receipts being for the Y. M. C. A., fund. All lovers of tennis and friends of the "Ys" are invited.

Reception to Mr. and Mrs. Mosher.

Mr. and Mrs. William R. Mosher have returned from their wedding trip and were last Thursday tendered a reception at the residence of the groom's father, Mr Elias J. Mosher on East Fourth street. Guests were present to the extent of about thirty, and all wished the bride and groom many years of health and happiness. The bride was the recipient of many rich and costly gifts.

A strange coincidence in connection with the reception was the fact that while the guests were enjoying themselves a nephew was born to the groom, Mrs. Edward Mosher of West Seventh street, having given birth to a son. Thus Mr. Elias Mosher has acquired a daughter and grandson within the past few days, the former by marriage and the latter by birth.

Threats to Mob a Plainfielder in Asbury Park

John Charles Cleveland, formerly of this city, but recently working in Ocean Grove as a painter, was arrested at that place Friday night on a charge of attempted assault on a minor, the daughter of George L. Fowler, a respectable business man. The child is ten. Cleveland is 48 years old and has a child by the wife of a man who is still living in this city.

In Judge Borden's Court it was stated that Cleveland had been eating in Fowler's restaurant and by degrees, through kind attentions, had won the child's confidence. John F. Robinson detected Cleveland, called Policeman Chas. Kipp, who secured his arrest. The hearing was quasi private, as threats of lynching had been made. Cleveland was taken to the Freehold jail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

OBITUARY.

HERBERT WINTHROP PECK.

The entire community has been deeply shocked by the news of the sudden death of Herbert Winthrop Peck of this city, who has been thus cut down in the very prime of life, at the opening of a brilliant future, with prospects unexcelled probably by any young man of his age in the United States.

Although just 21 years old, he had been graduated from Columbia College, the youngest in a class of 200 but ranking fourth in scholarship. He had also just passed successfully a severe examination at Poughkeepsie and been admitted to practice at the New York bar. He was a member of Trinity Reformed church, a teacher in its Sunday school, and a conscientious Christian, as well, in his daily life.

Death occurred from heart failure, about three o'clock Saturday afternoon, at Milford, Conn., where he was visiting his grandfather, Mr. Samuel C. Peck. His mother was with him at the time, having been sent for because of his sickness, some days ago. Mr. S. C. Peck, Jr., received a message at four o'clock of Saturday, stating that his son was dying and left for Milford at once, although, of course, too late.

On Saturday afternoon right after eating a hearty dinner, Mr. Peck straightened himself up in the chair in which he was sitting and thrusting his arms back and forth as if rowing, said: "Now for a long pull, a strong pull and a pull altogether, and we'll soon reach the shore." Immediately he fell over unconscious, and was dead almost instantly.

A meeting of the teachers of the Trinity Reformed Sunday school, was held Sunday afternoon, and a Committee was appointed to draw up and present resolutions of condolence. The Plainfield Bicycle Club met Monday evening at eight o'clock, to take some appropriate action in recognition of the loss of so esteemed a companion.

Bowling by the Ladies.

A bowling club has recently been organized among the lady friends of the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein, and regular practice games are now held on the alleys in the Gesang and Turner Hall on Somerset street.

In a recent match the ladies beat the score made by their male escorts. The alley in the new building has been remodeled and improved.

The Singing and Turning sections of the Society will bowl on Thursday evening of next week.

How Long John Assesses Westfield's Dogs.

"Nice dog you've got there, Mr. Reporter. Setter?"

"Yes."

"Yours?"

"Yes."

"That acknowledgement costs you just 25 cents," and the ubiquitous John M. C. Marsh, the gifted and painstaking assessor, constable, surveyor, insurance agent, auctioneer, correspondent, etc., etc., ad infinitum, made an entry in a big black book, and walked off to assess the weather-cock on Mr. W. Miller's new barn, and to make a poll tax on the strength of Dominie Cadwell's young Republican, and to hunt up a wooden Indian to assess under the head of idols.—Standard.

Three Officers Chosen From Plainfield.

At the conference of the Union County Christian Endeavor Union, held in the First Baptist church, at Elizabeth, Friday evening, Mr. Edward St. John, of the Plainfield First Presbyterian church, was elected Second Vice President. Mr. H. E. Gayle, of the Plainfield Trinity Reformed church, was elected Secretary, Miss Alice Spangenberg, of the Park Avenue Baptist church, was elected Treasurer, and Mr. E. E. Anthony, also of this city, was chosen a delegate to the Executive Session at Philadelphia in July.

Of the conference programme, the most praiseworthy feature was a paper on "Committee Work," by Miss E. J. Bainbridge, of North Plainfield. It was very fine and thoroughly appreciated.

For a Ten-Dollar Bill.

The great closing out sale of Spring Suits by Watson & Co., is attracting buyers from all directions, as the elegant garments made by this popular firm are well known, and when they commence their regular mark-down sales they seem to do almost the entire clothing business of the city. Just now their store is like a bee hive, and in their suit department on the second floor extra salesmen have been assigned to take care of the rush; $10, $12 and $13 are their reduced prices for Cheviot, Cassimere, Serge and Fancy Worsted Suits, of the most elegant patterns, while whole lines of the most expensive suits, cut from imported goods, have been marked down to $15, $16 and $18, without regard to cost of value. Sample suits may be seen in their windows, but you want to go through their suit department to know how much you can buy for a ten-dollar bill at this great mark-down sale of Watson & Co., which is just now the talk of the city.—Newark Press.

—A delegation of young people from this city started for Alfred Centre, N. Y., Sunday, to attend the closing exercises at the Alfred University.

Why Should I
Go to Montana?

Great Reservation. Because 17,500,000 acres of free Government land, with a delightful climate, and equally suited for general farming and stock raising, have just been opened to the homeseeker, in the Milk River Valley and near Benton and Great Falls.

Stock Raising. Because the favorable climate and superior grasses of Montana make it the natural home of horses, cattle, sheep and other domestic animals; and because Winter feeding is not required, as stock grazes at large the year around.

General Farming. Because a rich soil and abundant Summer rains produce wheat, oats, rye, barley and the grasses and vegetables of a quality, size and yield unsurpassed.

Mining. Because Montana produces more of the precious metals than any other state or territory, and abundant opportunities remain to secure valuable properties at nominal cost.

Immigration. Because the Great Reservation is the meeting point of settlers from the Pacific Coast and from the Eastern States, and is the only extensive tract of good land left, suitable for settlement.

Business. Because the rapidly growing towns along the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. offer splendid opportunities to engage in business.

Manufacturer. Because the 1,000,000 horse-power water-power at Great Falls, the extensive coal veins, the wool, mineral and grain raising resources of Montana offer exceptional opportunities to the manufacturer.

Tourist. Because the canon of the Gates of the Mountains, the Great Falls of the Missouri, the Giant Fountain and Continental Divide offer the most sublime and diversified scenery to be found on the Continent. Take a Summer tour.

Why Travel by the St. P., M. & M.? Because only by it can you travel through the largest body of free land left for settlement. Because it reaches the Great Falls, with the largest water-power on the Continent. Because it reaches Helena, the richest city of its size in the world; and because it is the shortest and best route to Butte, the largest mining camp on earth. Special tourists' and landseekers' rates. Daily trains through solid to Montana. Choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. Find out all about it by writing for "The Great Reservation," and "Tourists' Summer Guide." For further information, rates, maps, etc., apply to F. I. WHITNEY, G. P. & T. THREE KINDS!

I know
The past, and thence I will essay to glean
A warning for the future, so that man
May profit by his errors, and derive
Experience from his folly.—SHELLEY.

Three kinds of men start out to buy Clothing. The foolish man is hauled in by a bait and buys cheap shoddy clothing from the "hurrah" fake.

Then comes the thoughtless man who wends his way to the fashionable tailor, gets a good suit, but pays a very big price for the same.

The wise man deals with some reputable manufacturer of Clothing and secures garments fully equal to those made to order at about half custom prices. Thus the wise man gets his Clothing, with quality and workmanship thrown in, as cheap as the foolish man his miserable trash. An unusually large number of wise men are being attracted to our store this Spring. Whether it's a case of "once bitten twice shy" or not, we don't know, but certainly their patronage of us does credit to their good judgment, and we don't think, once having traded here they'll be caught by clap-trap again. We know what we sell. We make it and neither time, effort or money is spared to produce garments that will do us credit and still further establish our reputation. It's a selfish interest we take, we'll admit, but the effect is the same. It's there, and it pays both you and us.

AT THE JUNE WEDDINGS.

Some Points For the Benefit of Early Summer Brides.

The New Generation Taking Up the [illegible] Superstitions—The Details of a Beautiful Trousseau for a Wealthy Young Woman.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

One result of the Winter [illegible] promises to be an unusually large crop of June weddings, and several of the [illegible] which have already been [illegible] have a touch of [illegible] [illegible]

A JUNE WEDDING

[illegible]

A SECOND GOWN.

[illegible]

[illegible] a velvet bowknot. A wide sash of [illegible] blue satin lends a finishing touch to the waist.

The third gray gown has a petticoat of smoke-gray water velvet; over this comes a [illegible] gray [illegible] with Directory waistcoat and coat beautifully embroidered in four [illegible] sleeves in silver and steel. The gloves and shoes [illegible] gray [illegible] to match the petticoat, and the wide Directory hat is of gray straw covered with gray plumes and knots of white ribbon.

Two pretty tea gowns are not the least charming items, one indeed being Greek enough to have belonged in Athens. Embroidered pale green crepe de chine is the material striped with [illegible] of the same color. It is patterned somewhat after the gowns worn in the Greek play at the Lyceum a month or two ago, and its loose draperies fall in sweeping, unconventional but most artistic folds.

The other tea gown is deliciously radiant with rose color and white, most summer-like in its [illegible], suggestive of the grace and picturesqueness of Watteau. The overdress is of soft white crepon, with wide sleeves slashed with Valenciennes lace, and opening over a skirt of rose-colored surah laid in fine narrow plaitings which cling about the figure. The pink sash fastens in front and loops of pink ribbon are knotted on the shoulders, the long ends hanging down.

A simple dress, which is especially becoming to the slight figure of the bride, is a redingote of black surah, with the [illegible] of revers. The wide sleeves are gathered into deep wristbands; there is a soft sash of black watered silk and the skirt is of black guipure.

There is no space left in which to speak of the delicate underwear [illegible], daintily white, embroidered and edged with Valenciennes. Say what you will, the colored silk underwear will never make its way with really refined women. It is pretty enough but too emphatic and decidedly [illegible]. The bridesmaids' gowns at this wedding will be rather new both in design and combination of colors. The frocks will be made with underskirts of [illegible] colored silk, over which fall full straight skirts of white [illegible] moire Directory coats opening over lace waistcoats and trimmed with large gold buttons. The hats are of white Leghorn with [illegible] and gold plumes and the gloves of [illegible].

The bride's mother [illegible] finds it easy to fix on a becoming and appropriate gown. In this instance she will wear [illegible] armure and white moire.

ELLEN OSBORN.

JEM SMITH'S PIG.

Senator Sawyer Tells a Story with a Tangible Moral to It.

Senator Philetus Sawyer is back in Washington, and has been moved to tell one of his stories with a moral to it to the correspondent of the New York Tribune. A well-known politician was [illegible] a friend for an office which it was believed he wanted for himself. He was also advising the friend to [illegible] certain indirect things which would [illegible] cause him to lose the [illegible] appointment.

"It was up in Wisconsin," said Senator Sawyer, "when neighbors on the farms used to lend one another a helping hand. There was one fellow named Jem Smith, who was pretty lazy—too lazy to provide fodder for his own stock. He had one pig that was a beauty. Lord only knows how he got it, but it was fat. He used to borrow feed from the neighbors by promising that when butchering time came he would share the animal with them. When butchering time did come he found that he had promised more pork than a dozen animals would provide. He went to a friend who was a sort of lawyer and asked him what to do. Now this man had wanted Jem Smith's pig for a long time. 'You can fix it easy enough,' he said, 'just go ahead with your butchering and let all your neighbors see you at it. Then you'll want to hang the carcass out over night. In the morning you can tell the people who want a share in it that somebody stole the pig during the night. They only had a share in that particular pig, and if it is stolen they can't hold you for their share.'

"Jem thought this was mighty shrewd advice. He did just as he was told, invited the neighbors in to the butchering and left the carcass hanging out over night. The next day he went to his adviser's house with an awful long face.

"'It's gone,' he said; 'somebody took the pig last night. Didn't even leave me a slice.'

"'That's pretty well done,' said his friend; 'did you tell that story to the neighbors as straight as you have to me?'

"'But it's gone,' replied Smith. 'I tell you somebody did steal it last night!'

"'Keep it up that way,' replied the friend, 'and they'll never suspect you.'

"It didn't do any good for poor Smith to explain that he was in dead earnest. The man who had advised him to leave the carcass out over night kept insisting that he was acting first rate, and the neighbors would never catch on. But as he left the house he caught the odor of spareribs. He came back for a parting word. 'By the blankety-blank,' he said to his friend, 'I believe you've got my pork, now!' But he couldn't prove it. I suspect," said Senator Sawyer, in concluding the story, "that a good many people who are advising other people to do certain things are looking out for those other people's pork."

NO GREAT MEN WANTED.

A Parisian Barber Who Does Not Desire Their Custom.

"Victor Hugo was once one of your patrons, I believe," said a French writer, M. Planche, to Brassier, a barber of Paris. "Alas! yes," answered the barber. The word and the accent surprised the inquirer. "Was it not agreeable, then, to have the greatest man in France—the greatest poet of his century, perhaps—for a customer?" The barber shrugged his shoulders. "Ah, monsieur, it is one of the worst things that can happen to you, to have a great man for a customer. You see, they are not like other men." Then, in order to justify his paradox, he related a chapter of personal experience:

"One day a great lady, Mme. de X——, whose hair I had dressed, and who was much pleased with my work, said she would recommend me to thirty or more of her friends; and in a day or two she sent me a paper containing all the names and addresses of these people, with her recommendation of me at the bottom."

"The recommendation of Mme. de X——! why, that was as good as a fortune to you, my good man," said M. Planche.

"It might have been, sir, but for M. Victor Hugo. He was here the day I received it; he had sat down in the very chair you are sitting in now. I had just put a towel round his neck, when he seemed to be seized with some great thought and begged me to let him alone. He drew a pencil from his pocket, took a sheet of paper from the table here and began writing.

"He had been writing about five minutes when another customer came in. My men were all busy, so, seeing that M. Hugo had stopped writing to sharpen his pencil, I stepped up to him and said:

"'M. Hugo, if you will permit me to begin with you—I am in a hurry.'

"'Um! I'm in a hurry, too,' said he.

"Then he got up all at once, paper and pencil in hand, and started out of the shop. I called after him that he had the towel round his neck, and he took it off. But I didn't mind the paper, because I didn't know what it was.

"But in the afternoon I wanted the paper which Mme. de X—— had given me, and couldn't find it. One of my men said it had been lying there on the table. That was the paper that M. Victor Hugo had taken for his notes!

"It was so. I rushed away to M. Hugo's house to recover the precious paper.

"'Ah, yes,' he said, 'I remember; I had no sooner got into the house than I had another and much better idea, and so I had, therefore, no further need of your paper.'

"'Threw it into the fire?'

"'I am sorry to say I did!'"

Fashion Notes.

Pink and cream color is a favorite combination in dancing dresses.

"Alderney" is the suggestive name of a rich cream that now is in high favor for bridal toilets.

The newest accordion-plaited skirts are bordered with many rows of very narrow watered ribbon.

Rich velvet bodices are trimmed with [illegible] gold passementerie, with Empire [illegible] of gold-wrought net.

The Greek bonnet is a recent introduction, and when worn with the Empire gown the effect is decidedly classic.

LEM HILL'S FUNERAL.

The Decent Way in Which the Sad Affair Was Conducted.

Another of the queer characters in White Horse camp was a man known as Lem Hill. He was, says the New York Sun, as mild as [illegible] and as dull as a hoe, and no one ever thought of asking his advice or interesting themselves in his affairs. One day he took sick, and after a period lasting about three weeks it was seen that he must die. It was deemed best that some one should break the news to him, and so "Judge" Kelso dropped in and said:

"Lem, you are going to turn up your toes before another sunrise."

The judge didn't mean to be sudden or unfeeling, but that was his way.

"I guess I am," quietly replied Lem.

"Well, that p'int being settled and no exceptions taken, what last request hev ye got to make? We want to do the fair thing, you know, although it's a busy time."

"Kin I hev a funeral?" queried Lem.

"You kin."

"Reg'lar procession?"

"Yes."

"I don't expect any coffin, of course, but I'd like to hev the affair pulled off reasonably decent. You kin plant me on the hill beside the Frenchman. I guess we won't quarrel."

"Yes, we'll do that, though it's purty hard diggin' up thar."

"Needn't mind going over a couple of feet," said Lem, "and the fellers with the body had better take the left-hand path as they go up; it's easier to climb."

"Got any wealth?" asked the judge, after a moment's silence.

"A couple of ounces, mebbe."

"Mighty slim show for a big spread on that, but we can't help it. Well, Lem, it's my busy day, you know, and I must cut this short. Hope you won't take offense."

"Oh, certainly not. Don't neglect work on my account. Nuthin' said at the grave?"

"Just a few words, Lem, and I'll say 'em myself. I'll practice up this afternoon and git some whisky to clear my throat. I want to make a decent job of it."

"What'll you say?"

"Why, that you died happy—hev left an aching void—we shall all miss you—cut down in yer prime. I'll lay it on purty thick."

"Well, I'm sure I couldn't ask for more, and perhaps it's better than I could expect. So long, judge. Go back to your work, and I'll go on with my dying."

And the judge left the shanty whistling as was his wont, and Lem had been dead over an hour before word came to us down in the gulch. The funeral came off the next morning, and it has always been a pleasant remembrance with me that the judge did considerable better than he agreed to. He gave two eulogies in place of one, and after the burial he licked one of the men who wouldn't knock off work to attend.

VIRTUES OF MAD-STONES.

What the Owner of One of Them Has to Say on the Subject.

Under the heading "What I know about mad-stones," a correspondent writes to the Lumpkin (Ga.) Independent as follows: "About fifteen or sixteen years ago I providentially came in possession of several mad-stones, said to be genuine, which I doubted. Still their virtue has surpassed all former reports. I regard it as the last act of folly for any person to die from the bite of a mad dog, snake or poisonous insect if within the reach of a mad-stone. I have also used them in many diseases as an experiment and have seldom failed in making a perfect cure, to my delight and the relief of the sufferer. Losing sight of the cures from the bites of dogs and snakes, I will mention only such as I treated. I have cured neuralgia in its worst form, sun-pain, sore eyes, bruises, pain in the back, head or [illegible], high fever and delirium, [illegible] and kindred diseases. They are of much value in bad cases of erysipelas and poison oak. Cured one case of rising breasts in this county after six or seven weeks of intense suffering, all other remedies having failed to give relief. Three applications of the mad-stone relieved and cured her. The worse the disease the easier the cure, when there is inflammation, poison or fever sufficient to cause the mad-stone to adhere. I have never seen a failure. I have seen the water turn green while cleansing the mad-stone. No faith is required, only the disease. I once had the honor of curing a distinguished physician of a violent attack of neuralgia, after his remedies had all failed. Rather than die he condescended to send for me and try the mad-stone. I applied it and he went to sleep in ten minutes, and when he awoke he was relieved and cured. I only have confidence in their virtue when they effect a cure. I have seen persons suffering intense pain and in less than ten minutes after applying the mad-stone they would be sound asleep dreaming of some happy land. Their origin is a great mystery to many persons. I know the origin of mine and it can make no difference to the person cured whether they are bone, stone, wood, created or manufactured."

MIGRATION OF BIRDS.

Curious Observations Made by a Student of Natural History.

Many of the birds common about the fields and woods of this section fly hundreds and thousands of miles in the fall to some land where the rigors of winter do not reach. Some of them can be found at the Key of Tortugas, two hundred miles and over from Cape Florida, the southern jumping-off place of the United States. Numbers of the English birds and many from Northern Europe make yearly voyages down into the African continent, says a writer in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, and careful observers state that they have seen the great storks so common in Germany moving along high in the air bearing on their broad backs a number of small birds that had taken free passage, or were, perhaps, stealing a ride. In these wonderful migrations many birds are blown out to sea and lost, while others become so fatigued and worn out that they will alight upon boats. A New England fisherman, who in the autumn follows his calling fourteen or fifteen miles out from shore, informed me that nearly every day he had four or five small birds as companions. They had wandered off from shore, or were flying across the great bay on the lower coast of Maine, and had dropped down to rest. One day the same fisherman fell asleep while holding his line, and upon suddenly opening his eyes there sat a little bird on his hand, demurely cocking its head this way and that, as if wondering whether he was an old wreck or a piece of driftwood. Thus it will be seen that birds are obliged to adopt all kinds of expedients and to form strange friendships at such times.

A curious spectacle often seen in Southern seas by sailors long before land is sighted is that of the long-legged flamingo resting on the back of some great sea turtle, enjoying his ease by floating on the water's surface. What prompted the bird to take such a long flight can only be conjectured; but it is evident the journey proved fatiguing, and it settled on the turtle's inviting back for a rest.

MR. BRIGHT'S COOLNESS.

The Great Commoner's Meeting with a Rabid Tory Clergyman.

The following incident is related by the London St. James' Gazette on the authority of W. L. Bright, M. P.: "Mr. Bright went into an agricultural district one day, and he had to walk from the station a long way into the village. On the way a clergyman who was driving in a dog-cart came up to him, and the two men passed the time of day. The clergyman offered to drive Mr. Bright into the village, and Mr. Bright accepted the offer. The clergyman was a Tory, and he had been reading a speech Mr. Bright had made the previous night; and turning to Mr. Bright he said: 'Have you seen the paper to-day, sir?' 'Yes,' said Mr. Bright. 'What's in them?' 'Why, that rascal John Bright has been making another speech.' 'And what was it about?' asked Mr. Bright. 'Why, so-and-so and so-and-so,' and he went on to relate the incidents of the speech. Then they discussed the topic, and Mr. Bright said: 'Well, it is just possible that Mr. Bright may have been right, and that he was only expressing his honest convictions. There may be something in it.' 'Oh, no, there can't be,' said the irate clergyman. 'If I had him here, I'd feel just like shooting him.' Neither revealed his identity, but before they separated the clergyman invited Mr. Bright to go to his church next morning, and Mr. Bright promised to go. And he kept his word, as he always did. The clergyman took for his theme Mr. Bright's speech, and at the conclusion Mr. Bright thanked him for his very able sermon. As he was going home to dinner a friend of the clergyman met him and said: 'You have been preaching under distinguished patronage this morning, then.' 'No,' said the clergyman. 'Oh, yes, you have,' said the friend. 'You had John Bright among the congregation. You must have noticed him in the front in the middle pew. I know him perfectly well, and I assure you it was Mr. Bright.' 'Why,' said the clergyman, 'I drove him to the village yesterday in my dog-cart, and called him a rascal and execrated him in all the moods and tenses, and he never said a word. He kept perfectly calm and cool. I have insulted him. I must go and apologize at once.'"

THE WESTERN SOLDIER.

Some of His Accomplishments as a Critic Cleverly Described.

Captain Henry King, of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, contributes to the Century a paper on "The Western Soldier," from which we make this extract: "They assumed a right of criticism towards their regimental and company officers that was almost as free as that exercised by the average voter with regard to political officials. In some instances they did injustice, no doubt; but, generally speaking, their estimates were impartial and proper. They had no patience with pretense of any description, and they were quick to detect it. Thus, if a Colonel invested his headquarters with unnecessary pomp and formality, as a Colonel was occasionally known to do, they would nudge one another in passing and exchange looks and comments that rarely failed to produce a change. On one occasion a Lieutenant-Colonel, riding out to battle, forfeited the esteem of his regiment by holding a picture of his wife in his hand and gazing fondly upon it; but he afterwards restored himself to favor by a daring act that cost him two ugly wounds. Another officer of the same rank, on a toilsome march, gained a cheer by alighting from his horse and giving his place in the saddle to a limping soldier; but when the Major at his side did the same thing there was no response. The first had performed a kindness without prompting, while the second was a mere imitator. It was by such distinctions that officers were notified of the sharp watch that was being kept upon them, and admonished that they were mortal as well as those who wore no shoulder-straps. Now and then the instruction took a more stinging turn, as when a Captain, noted for his conceit, undertook to lecture his company upon the necessity of increased respect for officers, and was checked by a droll fellow who said, with a grin and an extravagant salute: 'Cap, I used to know you when you made harness.'"

How Gail Hamilton Writes.

Gail Hamilton, whose real name is Miss Mary A. Dodge, prepares her manuscript for the press on odd scraps of paper with a stub pen. One of her recent articles, which I saw before it went to the printer, was entirely written on the inside blank pages of old envelopes which she had cut open and saved. Friends who send her letters of which one sheet is left clean furnish her with a large amount of her writing material. Miss Dodge's handwriting is a bold, round, masculine type, and no one would suspect that it was produced by a woman.

FREEHOLDERS PROCEEDINGS.

OFFICIAL.

ELIZABETH, N. J., May 29, 1889.

Pursuant to adjournment the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union met on Wednesday, May 29, 1889, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

Present—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Briant, Doty, Houston, Jones, Kyte, Kleinhans, Pierson, Roll, Thompson, Wright, Whaley, Donahue, Howard, Vanderbeek, West, Van Saun.—17.

Absent—None.

The minutes of last meeting were read and on motion approved as read.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The bond of F. A. Dunham, engineer, was received and on motion of Freeholder West referred to committee on collector's bond.

RESOLUTIONS.

By Freeholder Jones:

Resolved, That the part of the road heretofore adopted as a "county road" leading from the junction of Morris turnpike and Springfield-ave in the township of Springfield, and passing through the townships of Summit and New Providence ending at South-st in said township of New Providence be graded, paved with telford, macadamized or otherwise improved with stone as may be set out in the specifications hereafter to be drawn up, for a width of fourteen feet, running the whole length of said part of the road above described in the centre thereof.

Freeholder Roll moved its adoption.

Freeholder West moved as an amendment after the words for a width to insert sixteen feet, except in such places as the engineer's survey may find to be impracticable.

On roll call amendment adopted unanimously.

Freeholder West moved the adoption of resolution as amended.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Howard:

Resolved, That the director appoint a committee of five on each of the roads between Elizabeth and Rahway and Elizabeth and New Providence, and a committee of six on the road between Elizabeth and Plainfield, which roads have heretofore been adopted as "county roads" for the purpose of acting with the engineer in the laying out and improving said roads under the county road act, and performing such other duties as may be necessary in looking after and supervising the construction and improvement of the aforesaid roads under said act.

On motion of Freeholder Vanderbeek adopted unanimously.

The director named the following committees:

Road from Elizabeth to Rahway—Freeholders West, Howard, Wright, Thompson, Kleinhans.

Road from Elizabeth to New Providence—Freeholders Roll, Whaley, Doty, Briant, Jones.

Road from Elizabeth to Plainfield—Freeholders Kyte, Vanderbeek, Pierson, Houston, Van Saun, Donahue.

By Freeholder West:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to examine the bridge near the residence of C. V. Banta, Roselle, and report to this Board whether the same shall be rebuilt or replaced by a new structure.

On motion of Freeholder Howard adopted unanimously.

The director named the following committee:

Freeholders West, Vanderbeek, Van Saun, Kyte, Doty.

Freeholder West moved the rules be suspended in order to offer an amendment to width of road leading from Elizabeth to Springfield, adopted at meeting held on May 23, 1889.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

Freeholder Vanderbeek moved to reconsider resolution adopted May 23, making road leading from Elizabeth to New Providence fourteen feet wide.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

Freeholder West moved to amend resolution after the for a width of insert sixteen feet except in such places as the engineer's survey may find to be impracticable.

Freeholder West moved the adoption of resolution as amended.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

Freeholder Thompson moved to adjourn.

Which was carried.

The director declared the board adjourned to Thursday, June 6, 1889, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

CHAS. E. REED, Clerk.

ELIZABETH, N. J., June 6, 1889.

Regular meeting of the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union, held Thursday, June 6, 1889, at 2.30 p. m.

Present—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Briant, Doty, Donahue, Howard, Houston, Jones, Kyte, Kleinhans, Pierson, Roll, Thompson, Vanderbeek, Wright, West, Whaley—16.

Absent—Freeholder Van Saun.—1.

The minutes of last meeting were read, and on motion approved as read.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

From committee on appropriations.

To the honorable the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union:

GENTLEMEN—The committee on appropriations after carefully estimating the probable requirements of the various departments of the county government, providing for the unusually large amount of bonded debt ($35,000) maturing during the year and making ample provisions for the additional burdens of interest, extra compensation, etc., consequent upon the adoption of the county road act, are of the opinion that with a continuance of the same economical administration of county affairs that has characterized the action of the board for the past two years the county government can be properly administered in the interest of the taxpayers without increasing the tax levy of last year. They would therefore recommend that the tax levy for the fiscal year ending May 1890, be made one hundred and forty thousand dollars as per accompanying resolution.

Very respectfully,

WM. T. WEST,
WM. HOWARD,
A. VANDERBEEK,
GEO. W. DOTY,
FRANK KLEINHANS,
Committee.

On motion of Freeholder Briant received and placed on file.

From committee on Plainfield bridge:

To the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Union:

GENTLEMEN—Your committee on Grant avenue bridge near Cadmus mills, Plainfield, would respectfully report that they have examined the bridge and consider it unsafe, and therefore recommend that an iron bridge fifty feet between the abutment wall and twenty feet roadway be built at a cost not to exceed $1,000.

On motion of Freeholder Thompson received and recommendations adopted.

RESOLUTIONS.

By Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved, By the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the county of Union, that the sum of one hundred and forty thousand dollars be raised by tax for the use of said County, for the year 1889, to be appropriated together with twenty-eight thousand one hundred dollars of assets of the County for the following purposes:

I. CURRENT EXPENSES, TO WIT:
1st. For courts	$20,000
2d. For county jail	[illegible]
3d. For lunatics	[illegible]
4th. For compensation and lawful expenses of Chosen Freeholders, and committees and salaries of their officers	9,300
5th. For fees of coroner	1,000
6th For elections	2,000
7th. For stationery	1,900
8th. For advertising, publishing and printing	2,300
9th. For incidental expenses and schools, burial of soldiers and monuments	8,500
10th. For charity hospitals	500
II. DEBT AND INTEREST, TO WIT:
1st. Payment of principal of bonded debt	35,000
2d. Payment of interest on bonded debt	19,000
3d Payment on bank interest temporary loans	1,300
III. PUBLIC WORKS.
1st. Permanent improvement of public buildings and grounds	7,000
2d. Erection and repairs of culverts and bridges	17,000
	$168,100
Less assets of the county	28,100
Total amount to be raised by taxation	$140,000

To be assessed and collected in the manner and at the times prescribed by the laws for the assessment and collection of taxes for the use of the State, and the laws for the assessment and collection of taxes in the cities of Elizabeth, Plainfield and Rahway, in said county, respectively; and that the Board hereby direct the assessors of the respective townships and wards in said county to assess the said sum of one hundred and forty thousand dollars on the inhabitants and their estates, agreeable to the law for the time being for the raising of money by taxation for the use of the State of New Jersey; and that the said assessors meet at the Court House in the city of Elizabeth, on the third Monday in July next, at 10 o'clock A. M., to adjust and ascertain the proportion of said sum to be levied in each township and ward in said county; and that the Clerk of the Board send a copy of this resolution to each of said assessors.

CHAS. E. REED, Clerk.

Freeholder Roll moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Vanderbeek:

Resolved, That all the roads heretofore designated and adopted by this Board as county roads, be graded, paved with telford, macadamized or otherwise improved with stone as may be set out in the specifications hereafter to be drawn up for a width of sixteen feet running the whole length of each of said roads in the centre thereof, except in such places or sections where, in the opinion of the engineer and the committee on the different roads, may find the same impracticable or necessary to make the same of a less width.

Freeholder Wright moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Howard:

Resolved, That the bill of Marsh & Rynd amounting to fifteen dollars, be paid when approved by the county physician.

Freeholder Doty moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Thompson:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to examine the bridge over the Robinson branch of the Rahway river, near the residence of George Bender, and report to this Board at a future meeting the necessity for and probable cost of the same.

On motion of Freeholder Roll adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Wright:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to report upon the advisability of repairing or re-building the St. Georges avenue bridge near the six roads in the city of Rahway and also the Meadow avenue bridge.

On motion of Freeholder Jones adopted unanimously.

The Director named the following committee: Freeholders Wright, Howard, Houston, Doty, Briant.

LEGAL NOTICES.

Sale of Land for Taxes IN Fanwood Township.

Notice is hereby given that by virtue of a warrant issued by the Township Committee of Fanwood Township, Union County, New Jersey, under their common seal, signed by their chairman and attested by their clerk, pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided for the collection of taxes laid on certain lands in said township for the year 1887, the subscriber, special constable for the collection of delinquent taxes, of said township, will on Wednesday, the seventeenth day of July 1889, at the hour of two o'clock P. M. of said day, at the Town Hall, Scotch Plains, in the Township of Fanwood, Union County, New Jersey, by public auction sell the lands and premises, hereinafter described, taxed to the undernamed persons, to make the taxes with interest, costs, fees, charges and expenses thereon, to any person or persons who will take the same for the shortest time not exceeding fifty years, and pay the amount due thereon. The following is a correct list of those in arrears for taxes for the year 1887 and a description of the lands upon which said taxes have been laid and that are to be sold hereunder:

T. Johnstone, tax due 1887, $1.71. Description—four lots; road district number one (1).

Fanwood, N. J., June 12, 1889.

HENRY COOK,
6-13wd Special Constable.

Take Notice.

Whereas Isaac Line, late of North Plainfield Township, Somerset county, New Jersey, deceased, in his lifetime, with Abram M. Vail, entered into certain written contracts for the sale of building lots, situate in the city of Plainfield, county of Union and State of New Jersey, to wit: One contract dated June 19th, 1880, for the sale to John J. Bourke of a lot described as Lot No. 7 on the South side of Division avenue, fifty feet front and running from the sidewalk to the rear line of lots on Union avenue; one contract dated November 19th, 1880 for the sale to Neil Scott of a lot described as Lot No. 3 on the South side of Division avenue, fifty feet front and running from sidewalk to the rear line of Union avenue lots; one contract dated October 16th, 1882, for the sale to John T. Stafford, of Plainfield, aforesaid, of a lot described as Lot No. 1 on the South side of Division avenue, fifty-six feet front and running from the sidewalk to the rear line of Union avenue lots.

Now, therefore, this is to give notice to all persons concerned that the subscriber, Executor of the said Isaac Line, deceased, will apply to the Orphans' Court of the County of Union, to be holden at Elizabeth, in and for said county, on Wednesday, the third day of July, next, to decree the fulfillment of the said contracts, respectively, so far as regards the estate of said deceased, according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

Dated April 16th, 1889.

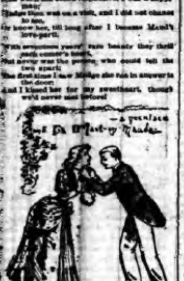
Two twins I know—two lovely girls—as pretty as can be,
Upon a charming country place far down in Tennessee;
Their names are Maud and Madge, but each resembles so the other,
To tell them is not possible to father or to mother.

Each has blue eyes and golden hair, and features just the same,
The voice is one, the form is one—they differ but in name;
They dress alike; they walk alike, and not a trait you see
Belongs to one to which the other doesn't just agree.

I first met Maud and loved her, as only lovers can,
And when she cooed responsive, I was a happy man;
Madge then was on a visit, and I did not chance to see,
Or know her, till long after I became Maud's love-part'n.

With seventeen years' rare beauty they thrill each comer's heart,
But never was the person who could tell the two apart;
The first time I saw Madge she ran in answer to the door;
And I kissed her for my sweetheart, though we'd never met before!

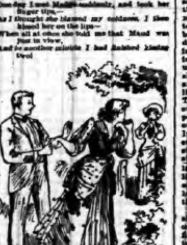


This mistake she sweetly pardoned, as she of course has to do,
Until now I seem committed by my artless woo the two;
For when they come together to each will beat my heart,
But I try to keep my kiss back till they tell themselves apart.

Sometimes—or else it seems so—Madge salutes me with a sly
Keen counterfeit of frankness in her manner and her eye,
When I put my arm around her, as I feel it is my right;
Nor can I tell the difference if Maud is full in sight.

This dilemma is portentous, though I cannot say a bore,
I should love—if there were like them—a dozen sisters more;
And I should tell each one I love her (for what else is there to do?)
Though it strains the best affection to pledge single love to two!

One day I met Madge suddenly, and took her finger tips,—
As I thought she blessed my boldness, I then kissed her on the lips—
When all at once she told me that Maud was just in view,
And in another minute I had finished kissing two!



"NOR CAN I TELL THE DIFFERENCE IF MAUD IS FULL IN SIGHT."

How to end this touching comedy I know not, till we wed,—
And still, when Maud I marry I see other balks ahead;
To go and live in Utah is not just the thing to do,
Though I'm dead in love with one girl and am paying love to two.

As I cannot court forever it surely will work strife,
If I think at times that one girl then another, is my wife;
Yet in wooing in this fashion, so very queer and new,
One's benefits are doubled by receiving them from two.

I think I'll buy a necklace and fix it fast to Maud—
(She'll have to tell me which she is to head off wrong and fraud;
But if by some strange blunder I should make the wrong one wife,
I shall never know the difference for the big-scope of my life.

But one thing does disturb me not a little, I declare,
What if Madge should have a lover? By Jove! he must beware!
There might come a complication which no mortal would condone,
If I saw him kiss my pretty wife and claim her as his own.

WORK FOR SUMMER DAYS.

Trifles to Be Concocted in Shade of Piazza Vines.

How to Make Bamboo and Bead Portieres. New Things in Cushions, Hammock Cloths and Screens—Gobelin Novelties for Table Linen.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

What will you do on cottage veranda or hotel piazza on those delicious gray-green Summer days when the rain it raineth alway? While the reader of the party is swinging to and fro in her low rocker, giving you the initial chapters of that latest study of the marriage question, Florence Finch Kelly's "Frances, a Story for Men and Women," suppose you experiment with one of those bamboo and bead portieres, which are the most approved Summer hangings. You can buy one if it suits you better, but the stores do not furnish, for a sum within the reach of the ordinary sweet woman who keeps her house and cares for her babies, any such choice of colors, designs and dimensions as the bright home genius with small expense of time and less of money has at her own command.

Fishlines are cheap at the seaside, and fishlines, glass beads and bamboo cut into short lengths are all the materials you need. Measure the opening of your doorway, have a slender strip of pine to fit it set with small hooks from which your cords will depend; then when the needle is a burden and the delicate colors of embroidery fade and soil in perspiring fingers select cool green or clear glass beads and—string.

Out on Long Island there is a country cottage owned by a young woman. All Winter she paints in a little room up in the top of a swell apartment house not far from Gramercy Park, all Summer she vibrates to and fro, in an out of another little room which is cut off from the world of greenness and beauty by a Roman scarf bamboo and bead portiere. Oiled pine is her woodwork, burnt sienna and cream her walls and ceiling, Indian red and olive the beads which are strung so as to form broad and narrow color bands across her curtain. She has used big beads and a large short piece of bamboo, and wrought in her monogram in the middle at the top. Each strand of the portiere is terminated by a tiny ball, so that her comings and goings are heralded by a musical tinkle.

Much easier than this, as requiring no care in the placing of the beads on the cords, is a curtain made by stringing bamboo and beads alternately, using only green beads, or employing a dozen different but harmonious colors. The more beads the more effective the curtain, and some of the handsomest and simplest use, without regard to color, six or eight or a dozen harlequin beads between every two strips of bamboo. To imitate the Chinese and Japanese designs of birds and beasts and flowers is almost too difficult for home weaver, involving nice calculation as to the position of each bead.

Some days ago I saw a unique portiere in a seaside cottage. The room itself was as far from commonplace as may be imagined. The ceiling was tinted a pale sea green, the side walls taking a deeper tone. Fishnets were draped from frieze to flooring and in the meshes were tangled many-colored fish, bought at Japanese shops, lobsters and the long ribbons of sea grasses. Oars were crossed above the windows and doors. In the large doorway was first a curtain hung straight of small fishcord woven into a network with the long netting needle. Many visits to the beach had resulted in a large collection of scallop and jingle shells, gold and silver shells the little people call them, and these had been perforated and knotted in. Outside the netted curtain hung a pair of portieres made of coffee sacking and decorated with rings of green plush and fringes of shells. The effect was wonderfully picturesque and had been obtained at small trouble and time.

I number among my acquaintances a half dozen young teachers in a New York private school who have spent the weeks of their warm weather vacation for two or three years past camping in a building which in its former estate was a woodshed on the picturesque Massachusetts coast, near Gloucester. Last year the main room of this festive establishment had its side walls, which are not plastered, covered with burlaps laid on flat and fastened by a strip of oiled pine which answered for picture moulding. Autumn leaves stencilled on in metallic colors gave character to the frieze. All through the Spring months these young women have been busy with decorative work for the 1889 campaign. An important feature of the room this Summer is to be a portiere made of hemp rope just out of the store. The article of furniture was manufactured, so to speak, in position. A pole was adjusted at the proper height and the rope tied over it. The cords were then knotted to form a diamond patterned network, making a band perhaps sixteen inches deep across the curtain. A quantity of perforated wooden balls had been turned out by a carpenter, and these were next strung on the cords three or four deep, as in the making of the bamboo portiere. Below the balls came more knotting and then more balls, and so on to the floor. When completed the balls were given a coat of gold paint and the cords were painted a coppery bronze. Two of the holiday makers are now at work on knotted twine window curtains of the same sort, with smaller balls to correspond. The curtains are to be all of the gold color, I believe.

A good deal of a woman's Summer leisure connects itself with screens. They shut off draughts from open windows and are invaluable in cutting off awkward corners in hastily furnished summer cottages. For July and August use there are few materials better than rough burlaps if the design is to be painted somewhat sketchily. For Summer work to be enjoyed in Winter days we have now a revival of the tapestry screen work so popular in the eighteenth century. The pretty, graceful, affected Watteau and Boucher designs will this Summer occupy the brushes of skilled amateur artists who delight in the light-hearted, pink and white gayety of Marie Antoinette's era. For women who embroider, linen, silk, sateen, satin sheeting and bolton cloth are the favored screen materials, and much more artistic work is required than served to make a "show piece" formerly. Embroidery has reached as high a plane in decorative art in this country as painting, and fancy work with no fancy in it is best hidden in the attic or left undone. Needlewomen with the requisite skill turn for subjects to lilies, goldenrod and the brilliant cardinal flower, fleur de lis and bunches of all posies rich in color. These are worked not in outline, as for [illegible], but in satin embroidery and it is possible to show great skill in the choice of stitches and in the blending of colors. It is really required to transfer the painter's method to textiles. A beautiful design shows a foundation of cream white silk canvas, on which is worked mountain laurel in soft bright pinks shading into lighter tones. The leaves are wrought out in natural colorings, with a little brown and dull red added to represent those that may be fading.

Women who do not paint or embroider should make their Summer screens of cretonne, choosing the designs which show figures in the quaint costumes of the fifteenth century. Much may be done with [illegible] and pretty effects are produced by the use of solid color thin silks in yellow and dull blue and olive tones. Where more money can be spared brocaded stuffs produce rich effects mounted in white and gold lacquer or enamel with tiny mirrors set in the frame.

The scarfs for the table this Summer should be square and should hang over the sides by the width of the border. A pretty table spread designed by a Boston artist is made of a soft green twilled cloth with a wide border of dragons, with beaks, claws and wreathing tails, done in outline in three shades of gold floss. Another spread on which no less a person than the Russian princess who has graced New York with her presence was working some days ago is of a soft sage green fine [illegible] texture with border of glowing chrysanthemums in deep yellow reds, shading in to yellow.

Cushions are made of pongee embroidered in wash silks of low tones. The fringed gentian gives a beautiful contrast of color on the natural gray pongee background. Gold braids and laces are lavished on the satin and plush cushions meant for winter luxury, and one might spend many words on exquisite daffodil patterns wrought in pale yellow silk on ivory white sateen, but more to the point at this season are the hammock and piazza, and boat cushions for rough wear. Gay sleazy cretonne is good material for these and clever women make two or three slips for every cushion so as to change them when soiled.

A brown-eyed girl up among the Catskills last Summer spent a good share of her leisure embroidering hammock cloths. The prettiest product of her needle exhibited was a strip of fine grass linen three yards long and showing branches of the clematis vine with the flowers outlined in white and blue. Another pretty novelty was of the same material worked with a conventionalized rose design. Equally useful for wraps and much less trouble are strips of bright Japanese cotton stuffs, gaily figured and needing no decoration.

Half the women of one's acquaintance are embroidering bedspreads. These are always planned to harmonize in color with the chamber furnishings. Bolton sheeting is the best material. It is not easy to embroider, being close and liable to draw, but when carefully done the sheen of the silk makes a beautiful background. A spread just completed shows apple blossoms outlined in natural colors of buds and leaves. The sides and ends are fringed and a couplet from "Marmion" furnishes a motto in the middle:

"To all, to each a fair good night,
And pleasing dreams and slumbers light."

This goes into a charming chintz bedroom. The woodwork is an olive green, the walls cream colored with gilt picture rail, the frieze pale olive, cornice, pale terra cotta and ceiling cream. The hangings are of soft-finished chintz in a Morris apple blossom pattern.

The Russian craze has affected our table linen fashions. Many women are embroidering tea-cloths, carving trays and even large dinner cloths with detached figures in the old-fashioned cross-stitch, done in two shades of red or blue. The effect is not good unless the embroidery is kept near the edges. No parts of it should be on the table. The simplest fine linen table scarfs are hemstitched on all four sides. Next these come those which have borders of drawnwork or cutwork on the ends, but plain sides. The most elaborate are a cobweb tracery of needle-work. The cutwork which Catherine de Medici learned in Venice, the drawnwork which Mary Queen of Scots used to delight in, the Gobelin work for which the design is partially colored and is finished by embroidery, are equally popular, the last named being the chief Summer novelty. Cutwork is very beautiful when applied to colored scarfs. For a pink and white lunch, for example, a scarf of pink silk has a design worked with silk floss in buttonhole stitch, and then the intervening spaces are cut out, producing a lace-like effect when laid over the white tablecloth. Napkins sometimes admit borders of drawn work, but are better simply hemstitched and embroidered in white on white, with the monogram, or better with a spray of the same flower which is dotted over the centre cloth. Doilies are the finest linen you compass, so sheer as to be cobwebs. They match the centre cloth in color. Drawn work is the prettiest decoration for them, embroidery in wash silks coming next. Tea cloths admit very intricate embroidery. A yellow cloth may be wrought with detached flowers in white well covering its surface. Blue linen with simple cutwork pattern outlined in white is effective. Carving cloths, corn napkins, &c., are interesting subjects for the industry of the Summer needle.

ELIZA PUTNAM HEATON.

THE DOINGS OF WOMEN FOLK.

Some June Gossip From the World of Feminine Affairs.

That was a wonderfully pretty breakfast and suggestive of summer table fashions which was given to Mrs. William Todd Helmuth before the City of Paris sailed for Europe on her last voyage. Everybody knows that yellow is the color of colors at the present hour. In the middle of the table was set a huge greenish bowl filled with golden marigolds. From the bowl extended to each plate a broad yellow ribbon to the end of which was fastened by a crescent shaped silver pin a cluster of yellow rosebuds. The soup plates were figured with greenish yellow sea mosses, the dinner plates were marked with yellow bands, the salad bowl and plates were a deep yellow strewned with Japanese lilies in red orange, the desert and fruit plates showed a green ground, sprinkled with buttercups and daisies, and the bone plates, olive dishes and bread plates were graced with chrysanthemums, coreopsis, dandelion and other yellow blooms in odd and attractive designs. There were branches of the yellow green-foliage of young maples wined in the chandeliers, and the candles with which the table was lit had yellow silk shades. When the ices were served they proved to be contained in large yellow roses, from which the stamens and heart petals had been cut, tied together in threes and not deprived of their own rich foliage. These ice roses were brought to table in a yellow dish representing a garden hat tied about with green ribbons, the thorny stems and fresh leaves drooping over the edges. The dinner favors were tiny hats of the same pattern filled with candied fruits and posies. The hostess wore a skirt of lettuce green silk with little pinked ruffles set about the bottom. Over this fell a skirt of pale yellow mull, embroidered with tiny sprigs of flowers in the same color. The bodice was of green velvet with surplice vest and sash of yellow mull. When the guest of the day was driven to her train at the Orange station the carriage was one bank of yellow roses.

Sorosis people gathered in numbers on the deck of the City of Paris the day that Mrs. Helmuth sailed. The lady was a candidate for the Presidency of the famous Woman's Club at its recent election and lost the office to Mrs. Ella Dietz Clymer, the successful officer having a plurality of one. Mrs. Helmuth was brought into some prominence at the time the Woman's Congress held its session in New York a year and a half ago by rescinding the invitations she had sent out for a reception to the delegates on learning that three members of African descent would necessarily be included, whereupon Mme. Demorest threw open her house, showing special courtesy to the colored women in a magnificent entertainment. Mrs. Helmuth defended her action to the more liberal club women who criticised it on the ground that her father, who was a Southerner, would have closed his doors on her had she done otherwise, and she preferred to respect the feelings of her own family in preference to those of outsiders. Whatever loss of prestige Mrs. Helmuth suffered on this occasion was more than made up by the graceful way in which she took her defeat in this heated contest for office. Jumping up with a smiling face the moment after the vote was announced to invite the club to perhaps the most elegant breakfast that has been served in a private house in New York for years. Sorosis appreciated the little situation and flocked to the steamer dock to bestow a vinaigrette on its entertainer by way of good-bye. Sorosis runs to vinaigrettes and diamond badges. When it wants to make a gift to a member it presents one or the other, or first one and then the other, the vinaigrette when a member high in favor braves a sea voyage, the badge when an officer resigns or her term of office expires. Mrs. Clymer got the vinaigrette when she went abroad five years ago, and it is supposed she will get the gold S studded with jewels when she lays the Presidential gavel down. The vinaigrette is silver, with the monogram on one side.

Laura C. Holloway's large musical club, the Seidl Society, the latest organization mothered by a woman, is finding great favor in the eyes of the sex masculine which begins to look to it to set a fashion for married women of remaining in town through the Summer with their husbands. Just previous to the big dinner with which its 400 members opened the season of Wagnerian concerts at Brighton Beach a week ago a man applied to Mrs. Holloway to be admitted as a member. The rules of the society compelled a refusal, but the gentleman was anxious to make the club a gift of money, saying that since every woman who could raise the funds deserted her family in June and was ashamed to be seen on the city streets again before fall, he thought it high time that the abandoned members of the households began to encourage every scheme which had in it the possible germ of a fashionable Summer season in town. The club badge is the letter S in silver in a sixteenth century scroll. Its headquarters at the Brighton Hotel are costly furnished and in them it possesses what no other woman's club in New York or Brooklyn has yet aspired to, a rendezvous of its own. Some of the best known women in the two cities have placed their names on its rolls, and it looks now as if the outcome of the project would be the setting aside of one near by seaside resort for the pleasure of women and children. With private cars, club parlors, ladies' [illegible] and playrooms, and with the prohibition of smoking in the music pavilion except in a little pen railed off for men in the gallery Mrs. Holloway and the ladies have Brighton Beach pretty much in their own hands. Already some women of wealth, who were packing their Saratogas have laid aside that pleasing occupation to see if the Seidl Society won't make things just as pleasant at home. Social meetings, receptions and gatherings of woman's organizations of all kinds are promised throughout the Summer.

There are strange stories going of the severity of the diet which fashionable women resort to in order to reduce their avoirdupois. Mrs. Olive Risley Seward, so the gossips say, fasted twenty days, and felt only the keenest regret when the time came for her to eat again. Mrs. Ravenhill, Katharine Kidder's young-looking grandmother, is said to contemplate an ordeal somewhat similar. Three days is the common limit of the starvation period before dieting. On the first day you are hungry, on the second day you are famished, on the third day you are faint, but if you last out the probation you care less for food afterward and get on better on the nitrogenous diet and the two meals, or the one meal a day. It is wonderful how much it takes to kill a woman.

The contest over the question, Who started the agitation for a national flower? bids fair to wax as warm as that over the authorship of "Rock Me to Sleep, Mother." An art firm which has circulars out asking for a vote as between the arbutus and the golden rod, attributes the beginning of the debate to Jean Kincaid, a Boston newspaper woman, who set the ball rolling a year ago. But I have before me a letter from Margaret B. Harvey, of Philadelphia, who claims to have written a poem called "Valley Forge Arbutus," advocating the Pilgrim's flower above two years ago. Miss Harvey says the arbutus was the first flower seen by the patriot army after the terrible winter in Valley Forge, and is more closely entwined than any other with American history. I have received a letter from Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, in which that writer advocates the choice of the magnolia. Louise Imogen Guiney believes in the fringed gentian, and Mrs. John Sherwood by the mountain laurel.

The occupation of the lace mender is assuming sudden importance. The peasant cloaks of black and cream chantilly lace which women are wearing this Summer are frail as they are beautiful, the airy draperies and wing-like sleeves requiring attention after every afternoon's promenade. The lace mender goes from door to door as regularly as the dressmaker and much more frequently. She makes an art of darning and charges such prices as are an artist's due. A dollar for a small rent, $3 or $4 an hour is about the least you can get her for, but she repairs the breaks in flounces, scarfs, draperies and cloaks so deftly that the laces remain a joy. If the lace mania continues the darner with her bobbins and balls will have a decidedly remunerative business.

MOTHER OF ICEBERGS.

A Huge Glacier Forty Miles in Length.

It Is Situated in Southeastern Alaska, and Presses Constantly Toward the Sea, Into Which Huge Masses of Ice Drop from Its Bristling Front.

Prof. Horace W. Briggs, in the Sitka Alaskan, describes the most notable of the glaciers of Southeastern Alaska. It is called the Muir, and is named from Prof. John Muir, a geologist of some reputation, since he gave the first uncolored description of it. It is forty miles long, and back on the land, in a basin of the mountains. Being reinforced by fifteen tributaries coming down the glens from different points of the compass, it swells to an icy sea twenty-five miles in diameter. Thence it moves with resistless power, bearing rocks and long lines of detritus on its billowy surface. Just before it reaches the bay it is compressed by two sentinel mountains into and is forced through a gorge one mile in width.

Emerging from this narrow gateway it moves on, at the rate of forty to sixty feet a day, to the waters whence it originally came, buttressing the bay with a perpendicular wall 800 feet high, 300 feet of ultramarine crystals tipped with purest white being above the surface, and, being pushed beyond its support in the underlying rock, a battle begins between cohesion and gravity. The latter force always prevails, and vast masses break from the glacial torrent with the combined crash of falling walls and heavy thunder, a tumble into the bay with a dash and a shock that agitates the waters miles away, making navigation perilous to craft of all sizes. The almost deafening roar made when these masses are rent away, the splashing baptism they receive in their fall and the leaping waters are lively witnesses to the birth of an iceberg, which henceforth, as an independent existence, goes on its mission of girding the shores, butting against its fellows and of scaring navigators.

While the ship was resting unmoored near the front of this icy barrier, we were startled by the sudden appearance of a mass of dark crystal, vastly larger than our own ship, shooting up from the depths and tossing our steamer as if it were an egg-shell. As the vessel careened the frightened passengers were sent whirling against her, over chairs or prostrate on the deck. This strange visitor had doubtless been broken off from the roots of the icy mountain, hundreds of feet below the surface, and hence had unexpectedly appeared upon the scene. Had it struck the ship fairly nothing but a miracle could have saved us.

Having recovered somewhat from our dumb amazement, about twenty of us were sent on shore in the captain's gig. Landing some distance below the ice wall we climbed seventy feet up a lateral moraine, crawled, shoe-deep in wet gravel, down into the valley of a glacial river, forded it, paddled through glacial mud covered with shingle just deep enough to hide the creamy pools, slipped prostrate on the ice made treacherous by a thin disguise of detritus, and barked our shins and cut our shoes on the sharp, angular blocks of granite and basalt strewn profusely along our perilous route.

Blocks of the finest marble hedged our pathway; trod on chips of jasper and chalcedony, the product of different mountains far up on the peninsula, and we passed two exquisitely beautiful bowlders of veined porphyry, weighing 200 or 300 pounds each, rounded and polished by centuries of attrition. They were of a dark purple, streaked with quartz spotlessly white, very desirable specimens for a cabinet, or for out-of-door ornamentation.

Stretched along the base of the mountains till they are only a line in the distance were the records of those gray old years in the form of moraines a hundred feet high and appearing like a range of hills.

The larger portion of this crystal river, perhaps an eighth of a mile in width, is heaved into rounded hills and beetling precipices, quite resembling the sea in a storm; while the middle and much the wider part is splintered into countless spires and needles and pinnacles, ten, twenty, thirty feet in height, and of a beautiful ultramarine at the base shaded to a dead white at the summit.

In the onward march of the glacier these pinnacles are occasionally wrenched from their seats in the solid ice beneath—they nod, then totter, and then make a plunge, and are shattered into a cloud of acicular crystals that sparkle like the frosted snow under a full moon of a winter's night, only with more of color—they are diamonds on the wing.

Again the whole surface is riven by a thousand crevices, along the bottom of which streams of clear water find their way, often broken by waterfalls that plunge further down into the dark blue abysses out of sight. These chasms are frightful gaps to one peering down a hundred feet between their turquoise walls. A slip, a frail alpenstock, a feeble grasp of the guide's rope, and gravity would close the scene without further ceremony.

The molecular structure of the glacier is continually changing, adjusting itself to the elevations and depressions of its rocky bed, and hence there is an incessant clicking and cracking, interrupted here and there by an explosion heard over every inch of the surface.

The whole scene is weird and strange in sight and sound—in the voices that rise to the air from the azure depths—fascinating because every step is perilous, majestic from its massiveness and awful because its march is irresistible.

Consider what a force in wearing away mountains and glens an icy torrent must be, one mile wide, eight hundred feet deep, and in the middle flowing sixty feet a day; it goes grinding and groaning and cracking in startling explosions, all mingled in a loud wail like that from the Titans imprisoned under Mount Ætna.

Now, let any one in fancy frame for himself this picture: Snow-capped mountains in the background, two of them, Fairweather and Crillon, more than fifteen thousand feet high, thick set with glittering peaks and clear-cut as silhouettes on a dark sky; the great glacier, child of Arctic snows, turreted and pinnacled and splintered into a thousand strange forms upon which Iris has flung the varied hues of amethyst and turquoise and sapphire; huge masses riven from the crystal river with a thundering roar, reeling and toppling into an amber sea, thickly dotted with new-born and vagrant icebergs; and all this scene glorified and transfigured by the setting sun. Looking upon this picture through the creative power of imagination one can readily conceive that the enraptured tourist, standing in the presence of the realities, would call that day spent with the Muir glacier the day of all the days he ever passed in gazing upon and listening to the wild wonders of our planet.

Good Old Texas Way.

A Texas bank president recently ran away with the funds of the bank, leaving a placard on the door reading: "Bank suspended." The depositors caught him, and having hanged him, pinned this notice on his breast: "Bank president suspended."

The True Soldier.

Colonel Hunt, of Kansas City, said one afternoon recently: "The real soldiers of the war were in the ranks, and didn't wear shoulder straps. I was a private during the first five months of the war. The private loses his identity. He has no personality. He is merely part of a great butchering machine. There is no glory for him. I heard the bullets whistling at Wilson's creek and my hair stood on end. When we charged I forgot fear, of course. When I was an officer, I had my men to look after, the orders of my superiors to execute, and the possible honor and glory of success. I left the army an officer, but I have never forgotten my experience in the ranks, and I honor the real heroes of the war, the men who stood in the ranks, actuated solely by patriotism and personal heroism. My most heroic soldier days, my most patriotically unselfish days were spent in the ranks." There is a true soldier for you.

THE BEAUTIFUL ROSE.

A Halo of Romance Crowning the Queen of Flowers.

A Charming Legend Accounting for the Origin of the Rose—Greek Myths and Mussulman Tradition—Bits of Old-World Folk-Lore.

There are several legends to account for the origin of the rose. Here, says a writer in All the Year Round, is a beautiful one: A certain Jewish maiden, Zillah, rejected the advances of a lover, Hamuel, a degraded and cruel man. In revenge he accused her of offences for which she was condemned to be burned at the stake. When brought to the spot the flames did no harm to the maiden, but consumed the false lover. "And the fyre began to burne about hire, and she made her prayers to oure Lord and anon was the fayer quenched and oute and brondes that were brennynge becomen white roses, and theise were the first roseres that ever any man saughe." The burning brands thus became red roses, the other ones white.

According to a Greek myth red roses were white ones tinged with the blood of Venus, who wounded her foot on a thorn while hastening to the aid of the dying Narcissus. According to another legend they sprang from the bath of Aphrodite. A later Christian tradition asserted that the crown of thorns was one of the rose thorn, and that the red roses sprang from the blood of Christ;

"Men saw the thorns on Jesus' brow,
But angels saw the roses."

A still different origin is given to the "queen of flowers" by Mussulman tradition. According to it white roses sprung from the sweat of the prophet Mohammed during his journey to Heaven, and yellow ones from perspiration dripping from the mane of Al Borak, his steed. It is further reported that the red flower is colored with drops of his blood, and the faithful will never allow one to lie on the ground. There is an Arab tradition that a certain King Shaddad planted a field of roses in the desert, which are still flourishing, but no man can find them.

The rose has always been an important flower in folk legends. It has several emblematic meanings. It is, to begin with, the symbol of beauty:

Whatsoe'r of beauty
Yearns and yet reposes,
Blush and bloom and sweet breath,
Took a shape in roses.

Anciently it was the emblem of silence. Eros gave to Harpocrates, god of silence, a rose to keep the secrets of Venus. On the ceilings of the banquet-rooms, to remind strangers that what was "sub-rosa" was not to be repeated, was anciently sculptured a rose.

"Red as the rose of Harpocrates."

For the same reason it was placed over confessionals in 1500. Doubtless its place on Greek and Roman tombs was given to it as the flower of silence. It was the symbol of the mystic Rosicrucians (sub-rosa crux). As diplomacy is secret, it became a national emblem. Roman soldiers bore it as an insignia on their shields. Adopted as an emblem of England, and each political faction having selected his color, the rose figured conspicuously in English history. The "wars of the roses" lasted thirty years, with the white rose as the badge of York and the red one of Lancaster.

The rose of Jericho, also called the rose of the Virgin Mary, became the symbol of resurrection. It is not really a rose, however. A tradition reported that it marked every spot where the holy family rested during the journey to Egypt.

The Syrians regarded the rose as an emblem of immortality. Chinese plant it over graves, and in the Tyrol it is said to produce sleep. Germans call the rose of Jericho the Christmas rose, and it is supposed to divine the events of the year if steeped in water Christmas Eve.

There are many other superstitions about the rose. It is said in Persia that there is a certain charmed day in which the rose has a heart of gold. Another tradition relates that there is a silver table on a certain Mount Calassy, in India, and on this table lies a silver rose that contains two beautiful women who praise God without ceasing. In the center of the rose is the triangle—the residence of God.

And when the bell hath sounded,
The rose with all the mysteries surrounded
The bell, the table, and Mount Calassy,
The holy hill itself, with all thereon,
Dissolves away.

One of Vishnu's wives is said to have sprung from a rose. In Germany the rose has been a favorite flower. It is one of those mysterious blossoms, like the "forget-me-not," that unlock treasures concealed in caves or castles. The rose was a favorite flower of Holda, the Northern Venus, and, in Christian lands, became the "Marienroschen" of the Virgin. The white rose is usually Mary's emblem. She dries her veil on a rosebush, which bears no more flowers thereafter.

It is probable that rosebuds were the larger beads in the Catholic rosary, the German rosenkrantz or rose wreath.

It is said that if a white rose blooms in autumn an early death is prognosticated, while an autumn blooming red rose signifies marriage. The red rose, it is also said, will not bloom over a grave. Rose leaves are sometimes thrown on the fire for good luck, and a rose bush may be made to bloom in autumn by pruning it St. John's Day. Here, as well as in France and Italy, it is believed that rosy cheeks will come to the lass who buries a drop of her blood under a rose bush. In Posen young women assure the fidelity of their lovers by carrying a rosebud in the breast. Rose leaves are chosen for divination in Thuringia, the maiden having several lovers scattering a leaf named after each one on the water; the leaf that sinks last is the true lover.

Charms for stopping hemorrhage are connected with the rose. One of these, used in Germany, reads thus: "In God's garden bloom three roses—blood drop, blood-stop, and blood still; blood, I pray you, cease to flow."

The rose was a potent ingredient in love philters in England and Scotland a century ago.

In the "Saemundr" Edda Brynhild is thrown into a trance from which Sigurd arouses her by a blow from the "sleepy thorn" in the hands of Odin. In the German tale of "Dornroschen," or the "Sleeping Beauty," the thorn hedge that surrounds the slumbering heroine bears only roses to the true Prince.

A Long-Felt Want Supplied.

Miss Antique (ancient maiden with modern ideas)—We had such a glorious meeting this afternoon, to organize the Anti-Male Social Club. In response to my call over fifty beautiful and charming young ladies presented themselves, and all were enthusiastic over my plan to escape from the thralldom of man. The first entertainment is to be given next Monday night, and not a man is to be allowed to enter. I am to deliver an address, Miss Highnose is to sing, the Misses Ivory are to play, Miss Totter is to give recitations, the members of the art club are to bring specimens of their work, and we are to have a perfectly delightful time. Can't you come?

A Sensible Barber.

"My wife is as white as any man's wife," says Jack Sheppard, one of the popular colored barbers of Washington city; "but," he adds, "my children have a little of my color." Jack is almost white himself, and is proud of it. He says: "My wife's father was a German, and her mother was a bright mulatto. My wife can talk and read and write German, and my two little girls and boy can talk it, too. It is funny, Sunday morning, the only morning in the week that we all breakfast together, to hear those little niggers jabbering German all around me, and I don't know what they're talking about."

"Why do you call your children 'niggers?'"

"Because that's right. So long as there is a drop of black blood showing in any of our people, we will be called 'niggers,' and I'm not fighting against that name, as so many of my people do. The negro is an unfortunate fellow, but he needn't be ashamed of his ancestry. The black people who founded our race in America were honest people, and that is more than the white people can say who are so proud of their ancestors. I'm not ashamed of the word 'nigger,' I can assure you."

It Will Prove a Failure.

Mrs. Meepeek—My dear, you will make a sad mistake if you marry Mr. Meek. He has no beard and he wears a wig.

Daughter—What difference does that make?

"Huh! You try managing a husband with no hair of his own, and you'll find out."

Miss Gotham—I adore travelling. Were you ever in Greece, Miss Lulu?

Miss Lulu (of Cincinnati)—No I never was, but papa was in that lard trust, you know.

NATIONAL.

The recent elaborately planned and enthusiastically observed Centennial of the Inauguration of the first President of the United States, the establishment in fact of our National Government, has evidently, to a considerable extent, supplanted the usual Fourth of July celebrations the present year, yet, the real worth and meaning of that time-honored anniversary day remains intact.

Although the voice of oratory, the stirring sound of music, and other customary appendages to the annual commemoration of American Independence may not be as generally demonstrative this year as we trust they will be the next, still, memory sits enthroned, and the fires of patriotism burn as of yore.

The Fourth of July is the day of days on the patriotic calendar and to it thoughts revert with magnetic force.

One hundred and thirteen years have rolled away since that grand and heart inspiring Declaration on the part of the Continental Congress gave to the day its glorious origin and character.

The principles of truth, justice and right then proclaimed to the world live unimpeached, and their achieved national results stand not only a towering monument to the wisdom and valor of the statesmen of '76, but constitute the very acme of human blessings.

Innovations have from time to time been thrust forward, and it must be regretfully admitted that the standard of political integrity has in many particulars been lowered, but, notwithstanding all such drawbacks, an effectual antidote remains in the hands of the people, who, until the principles of the Declaration become extinct and Freedom dies, are legally sovereign and popular sovereignty, vigorously asserted and intelligently administered, is the hope of the future.

The Declaration of Independence clearly and fearlessly proclaims popular sovereignty full and free, "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people."

It justly denounced Kingly and every other species of tyranny as at enmity with American Freedom.

And there exists various kinds of tyrants.

Some are brute-headed, others deceitfully garbed, but all intent upon one common aim, the mercenary spoliation of the confiding many for the emolument of the designing few.

Liberty recoils therefrom.

The Fourth of July is worthy of increasing honor, because it represents universal right and equity, to maintain which in original purity and strength is to frustrate the purpose of wrong.

The day speaks of a glorious past and pleads for a like future.

Let it be rightly honored!

Our [illegible] Contemporary.

Some time ago the genial and witty editor of the Westfield Standard, indulged in a little aphorism something after this style: "Young man! If you can't blacken your boots thoroughly, blacken the heels and let the fronts go. Don't put on false appearances. You can often read a man's character by the way he blackens his boots."

A few days after, while taking the train for New York, a fellow townsman happened to glance at the elocutionary Pearsall's editorial boots, and noticed with pain and regret, that while the fronts were duly polished, nothing had been done abaft the shaft. "Ah! what shadows we are and what shadows we pursue," as the fisherman said.

Parochial Schools.

Mr. Schoonmaker added, that besides speaking, though not officially, or as a representative of the State Board, he had broached the subject at the request of the local Board.—[illegible], July 1.

The lines quoted above may convey the impression that the Board of Education of this city, by some official action, desired the presentment of the question of "Parochial Schools" at the late Commencement of the High School. What individual members of the Board, if any, wished the question to be broached, I know not.

Mr. Schoonmaker was known to the Board to be of pleasing address, and a fluent speaker. Being a member of the State Board of Education and a resident of this city, his selection was deemed very appropriate. The subject of his address was never considered by the local Board at any of its meetings.

Personally, I dissent from many of his statements, and consider his address inappropriate and unfortunate.

The Post Office Department Listens to THE PRESS.

At the request of the Post Office Department (who were led to make it through recent publications in the columns of THE PRESS) the following has been largely signed and forwarded:

Hon. John Wanamaker, Postmaster-General:

"The undersigned, all in receipt of mail matter at the post office in New Market, Middlesex Co., N. J., respectfully express their opinion that the office should be located in the village proper, on the South side of the Lehigh Valley Railroad track. Its present location North of and adjacent to a track having neither gates nor flagmen, is dangerous to the public, and as at least seven-tenths of the mail matter received is destined for parties on the South side of the track, it is eminently necessary that the convenience and safety of a very large majority should receive consideration.

"Many of us have to cross the track for no other purpose than to obtain our mail, whilst those few residing on the North side of the track have to cross over to the village stores—no business being done on the North side where the post office is located, consequently, no inconvenience would arise to a single person by the change desired.

"We ask this upon broad business principles, without regard to party, although we may remind you that this district is largely in accord with the present administration to a very pronounced degree."

Another petition asking to allow the office to remain in its present location, has been in circulation, but the appeal made is more upon personal grounds, and some have signed it without really knowing what it was for. Some have done so declaring that had they known the facts, they would have signed for removal.

—The Lehigh Valley Railroad company has macadamized the approaches to the New Market station.

The Rev. Mr. McAll to the Plainfield Auxiliary.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—I have been requested to send you for publication the enclosed extracts from a letter lately received from Rev. R. W. McAll, that a larger circle may read his words. His letter is in response to a contribution of $50 sent by the Plainfield Auxiliary, toward the mission's present work at the Paris Exposition.

MISSION POPULAIRE EVANGELIQUE

Mrs. Augustus C. Baldwin,

DEAR MADAM:—* * * * * I wished to [illegible] a moment amidst my incessant duties, to express our high estimate of the kind Christian sympathy of yourself and the friends associated with you at Plainfield. Can you not understand how cheering it is to us to know that kind thoughts and fervent prayers are constantly engaged on our behalf, and many of those on the part of dear friends whom we have never yet had the joy of welcoming here.

Our special work in the "World's Fair" is full of interest. Each night we have two meetings in our larger temporary Hall on Avenue Rapp. On Sunday we hold a third meeting there. At the smaller Hall, Place de Trocadero, a meeting is held daily, and two on Sundays. We have constantly new congregations in these places, many of whom never before in their lives heard the tidings of Salvation by grace. Not a few come afterwards to converse with us, and express their interest and gratitude. We trust and believe that they will carry a Saviour of the Gospel back with them into the farthest corners of France. A diligent sale and extensive distribution of Bibles and Scripture portions goes on at both Halls. They are eagerly received. All this being added to our extensive regular work, we are tasked indeed. Our dear friends Mrs. [illegible] and Miss Lea from Philadelphia are here. Their visits are invaluable to us. We owe them more than can be [illegible].

Believe me, dear madam, most truly yours,
R. W. McALL.

GOSSIP FROM SCOTCH PLAINS.

I met Mr. Sykes on the street the other day; he had just returned from the Princeton Commencement, having also taken part in the reunion of the Class of '79. He told me that while there he ran across Dr. J. A. Coles, on the Campus, and that he also met Dr. Abraham Coles. The latter had been made an honorary member of Clio Hall, of which Mr. Sykes is a member. This is an honor indeed, and no small one, and in this connection it may be remarked that out of the thirty-one prizes distributed at Princeton this year Clio Hall received twenty-one. Of profound scholarship and renowned as a man of letters and a poet, Dr. Coles is well fitted to receive this unusual honor; I think it was James Russell Lowell that pronounced the Doctor's English version of "Stabat Mater" the finest in the language.

While we are on the subject of clergymen, I have a little item that may be of interest to the Methodists of Scotch Plains, and indeed to all who were living here about ten years ago. Looking over the Standard, Henry George's paper, the other day, I saw a short account of a Single-Tax meeting recently held at Staten Island. At the foot of the article it was stated that the meeting was presided over by the Rev. Pascal Harrower. Pascal Harrower? Not a long time the Methodist minister here, and long to be remembered by his own parishioners and the people of other denominations as well, a man of no small ability, and one whose departure was a real loss to the place.

The school teachers and the Trustees, and all the people who enjoyed the benefit of Mrs. Marsh's hospitality at the reception held after the school Commencement, are desirous that their thanks should be extended to her for her kindness on that occasion. To throw open one's house to such a large gathering and especially upon such a warm evening is a matter of considerable inconvenience, to say the least; Mrs. Marsh may be sure that her hospitality was appreciated.

What a lot of red tape there is when you are dealing with a railroad. A week or two ago, I was so unfortunate as to leave an umbrella on the train. I discovered the fact just as I left the car, and asked the brakeman to keep it for me until I could see him again. This would have been a very simple thing to do, and the affair would have been through in twenty-four hours. But observe. The brakeman had to obey rules and so he turned the umbrella in at Dunellen. I inquired the next morning at Jersey City, and was referred to the telegraph office. One of the men there said that he would telegraph for it and told me to call later. When I went there the next day I found that the man who had telegraphed was off with the Patrick Fogarty Association on an excursion to Harlem Flats, and no one there seemed to know very much about it; and then I did what I ought to have done in the first place and saw Station-Master Brown. He sent for the umbrella and two days later delivered it to me, but not before he had made me sign three papers, the first a receipt for the umbrella, the second a stipulation not to sue the Railroad Company for damages and the third a long indemnity bond with a big red seal, to recompense the company in case the umbrella should turn out to belong to somebody else, given in the penal sum of two dollars and a half, for which payment, well and truly to be made, I bound myself, my heirs, executors, administrators and assigns forever, firmly by these presents. Station-Master Brown always was a careful man.

The Women's Exchange got wind of the affair somehow or other and I was waited upon by a Committee of three ladies the next day to know if the umbrella was for sale. A sub-Committee was appointed to make an examination and appraisement and they ended by asking to take the umbrella for three days on trial. It happened to rain the next day and the next day [illegible] and the Committee seemed to be satisfied; they offered ninety-four cents, half cash and the balance in striped candy and tooth powder. I will say in confidence that I bought the umbrella last winter at Macy's during a great bankrupt sale—entire stock must be sold in thirty days regardless of cost, goods given away—and paid a dollar and seventeen cents. So I informed the Committee, politely but firmly, that one dollar and ten cents was the lowest price that I could possibly take.

They are going to hold a special meeting of the Directors, when the question will be considered and acted upon.

SUBURBAN SAUNTERER.

P. S. I have just received the following note which explains itself.

OFFICE OF THE WOMEN'S EXCHANGE,
NO. 7 TEMPERANCE BUILDING.
SCOTCH PLAINS, June 27, 1889.

Mr. Suburban Saunterer,

DEAR SIR:—At a special meeting of the Board of Directors held this day, at Temperance Hall, it was resolved that the Umbrella Committee be instructed to offer you for your umbrella the sum of ninety-eight (98) cents. This is our final price, and can not be increased.

Yours very truly,
THE WOMEN'S EXCHANGE.

P. S. If you won't take ninety-eight, please [illegible] with [illegible] before you sell it to anyone else.

—In consequence of a change in the time table of the Central Railroad, the afternoon New York mail which has heretofore been closed at 5:30 P. M., will hereafter close at 5:20 P. M.

PLAINFIELD PUBLIC SCHOOLS HOLD THEIR ANNUAL COMMENCEMENT.

One of the Finest Classes Ever Graduated—The Valedictory and the Speeches—Winners of Awards—A Presentation by the Class of '78—Music Hall Crowded.

EVERY seat was occupied and the walls were lined at the Nineteenth Annual Commencement of the Plainfield Public Schools which was held last Thursday, and an audience gathered in Music Hall that exceeded in numbers even those of past occasions.

The stage picture was, as usual, a very pretty one. Besides the members of the graduating and training classes grouped together there, the Principal, Miss Bulkley, Mr. Lincoln Goodrich the Senior Class teacher, the Rev. C. L. Goodrich, President Jacob Kirkner and Secretary L. F. Wadsworth, of the Board of Education, and the Hon. F. X. Schoonmaker, also occupied seats on the stage.

The distinctive features of the occasion were the Valedictory of Miss Osborne, the address of Mr. Schoonmaker, and the graduation of Miss Mitchell, daughter of the colored pastor of Mt. Olive church. Miss Osborne's composition was well worth its prominence. It was the work of a young woman whose scholarship and popularity have never been excelled in the Plainfield schools. Miss Mitchell received a most flattering reception from the audience. Her essay on the advancement of her race was listened to intently throughout, and loudly applauded. Her dress was not exceeded in beauty and taste by any of her class mates.

Of the other essays, but few could be heard. Every word of Mr. Holmes' essay on Fanaticism, however, was audible, and it was one of the half-dozen specially good ones. Miss Runyon's was another. Every member of the class was loaded with bunches and baskets of flowers.

The following was the order of exercises, the music of which was rendered by a string-orchestra from Cappa's N. Y., Seventh Reg't Band:

Overture, Fantasiequale.........Suppe
Whittier.........Louise D. Runyon
Uses of History.........Teresa Genevieve Keenan
Mountains.........Lyle Wellington Morehouse
O How Kindly Hast Thou Led Me.........Beethoven

Education for the Home.........Laura D. Wenzel

In introducing the speaker of the evening, President Kirkner said: "There is no doubt that we have in Plainfield the best schools in the State—there is no question about that. But I also believe that we have one of the best members of the State Board of Education, as a resident of our city. We are proud of our schools and we may be proud of Mr. Schoonmaker who will now address you."

Because of recent sickness, Mr. Schoonmaker delivered his address, sitting, but it was just as full of fire and lost none of its effect. It was probably the most able speech that has been delivered upon a like occasion in this city, at least. In a pleasing and instructive way the speaker compared the past times and the present, and asserted, "I have heard more good oratory and sound sentiments within a few minutes this evening, than in as many years when I was a boy."

But more special interest in the address was occasioned by the speaker's introduction of an emphatic protest against parochial schools, and his scheme for their abolishment. He said that other states had endeavored to get rid of them and had failed, but it was proposed to bring a different view of the matter before the Legislature of New Jersey, next Winter, and as such view was presented that evening for the first time in public, he intended it should be known all over the country as the "Plainfield Idea."

"These schools are a menace," he said, "and the fact that Father McGlynn was driven out of a parish of 30,000 souls who loved him, because he would not establish a parochial school, proves that the opposition of these schools is to be persisted in. It is not a question of religion, for if such the State could not interfere, but when hundreds of children are withdrawn from the public schools and taught that the head of the church is a Monarch in Italy, then the State shall rise up against a Papacy claiming temporal power, and demand that its people shall be educated only that their first duty is to it, the State. These parochial schools are started by the priests because the Propaganda at Rome command them to, and they are bound to obey every command that is not illegal. Then let us make it illegal to establish schools for the avowed purpose of taking away from the public schools children who would otherwise attend those schools, and the question is solved."

At the close of this address, Mr. Howard S. Runyon, President of the Class of '78, made the presentation in behalf of his class of a picture to the school. He said:

"MR. PRESIDENT—It is my pleasant duty in behalf of the Class of '78 to express our sincere regard for the Plainfield Public School. In the years which have elapsed since our graduation, we have not lost interest in the school, but they have rather taught us how much we owe our Alma Mater. We desire that you will accept this picture as a token of our regard for the past and sympathy with you in the present work. La Via Appia has been selected as historically appropriate to hang upon the Chapel walls. We hope you will receive it in the spirit it is given. The laurel wreath placed upon the brow of the victor has little intrinsic value, but as a token it is significant. This is the token of our desire to co-operate with you in the educational work here."

President Kirkner accepted the gift with an expression of appreciation and thanks on behalf of the Board.

The presentation of rewards was made by Judge L. F. Wadsworth, Secretary of the Board of Education, assisted by post-graduate Thomson N. Horn, of the United States Military Academy at West Point.

The prizes for best Penmanship were awarded by the committee—Messrs. J. Evarts Tracy, S. A. Ginna and W. M. Smith—to Miss Lillian D. Garretson; and for greatest improvement to Miss Jennie Langer.

The first prize in Mathematics, $15 in gold, was awarded the valedictorian, Miss Ella U. Osborne; and the second prize, $10 in gold, was awarded Miss Teresa G. Keenan.

The committee on English Composition—the Rev. J. P. Taylor and Messrs S. P. Huntington and H. P. Talmage—awarded the first prize, eleven volumes of Shakespeare's works, to Miss Caroline Fitz Randolph, and the second prize to William W. Coriell. Honorable mention was made of the compositions of Edward J. Patterson, Fred A. Dabold and Eleanor E. Davis.

The first and second prizes for excellence in U. S. History, were awarded Miss Helen T. French and Mr. Arthur H. Serrell; while honorable mention was made of the standing of Miss Ariadne Gilbert, Miss Athalia S. Langdon, Miss Viola Conklin, and Messrs S. Clinton Crane and J. Newton Goddard.

The prize for Spelling also went to Miss Helen T. French, and honorable mention was made of Miss Florence L. Kyte.

The first prize for Languages was awarded Miss Teresa G. Keenan for excellence in Latin; and the second to Mr. Edward C. Petrie, for Greek. Honorable mention was made of Miss Phebe E. Mills Latin.

After the presentation of diplomas to the graduates, by President Kirkner, the class remained standing while the Rev. C. L. Goodrich addressed them. He said, "I am glad to be called on this evening to congratulate you upon your receiving of those diplomas, not because of just what is signified by them, and not only because of the knowledge you must have attained before receiving them, but because of their expression of character developed. Year after year you have been working to attain them; while others have dropped out you have kept on to the completion of your purpose; and I congratulate you on having that in your character that can aim at a good end and work patiently and persistently until you reach it. It is now accomplished, but continue to keep up a purposeful life. If you want to be noble, get hold of a great purpose and strive to attain it. Everything depends upon the energy with which you lay hold of your opportunities. Don't sigh for vain chances beyond your reach, but with courage and purpose seize those that God puts in your way."

In presenting diplomas to Miss Eleanor G. Beal, Miss Abbie M Wilson and Miss Lucia N. Ward—the first graduates from the Training Class—President Kirkner said: "Three years ago you stood here as graduates from the Senior class of the High School, and now you stand here after three years of the best instruction your honored principal can give you. You have labored faithfully and well, and as an appreciation of your success, the Board has appointed each of you a teacher in the primary department of the schools for the ensuing year. It has always been our purpose to have our best teachers in the primary, because if your foundation is not complete, and firm, and of the best material, your super-structure will fall to pieces. Consequently, your appointment there is all the greater honor, but the Board believes you well fitted for the positions, and I am personally satisfied that our realization will fully equal our anticipation."

And so ended another commencement of the public schools of Plainfield.

THE SIXTH ANNUAL COMMENCEMENT.

The Graduating Class, Numbering Twenty-five Pupils. Present an Interesting Programme in Warren Mission Chapel.

CLOSING scenes were enacted in the North Plainfield public school on Thursday of last week, the Sixth Annual Commencement exercises took place in Warren Mission Chapel. The humidity of the weather did not serve to materially decrease the attendance and long before eight o'clock, the hour announced for opening the exercises, several hundred people were wedged in a group in front of the door leading to the chapel, and many more held their position on the sidewalk, waiting for an opportunity to gain admission to the place. When the doors did open at 7:30 o'clock, the rush was really terrible, and several ladies were heard to exclaim that they would never again attend the graduating exercises if they had to pass through such an ordeal. The outside temperature was extremely hot, and inside the chapel it was even worse, although all the doors and windows were open. Principal Boss and his corps of courteous ushers exerted themselves to comfortably seat the multitude, but when the exercises began there were many standing—and so they remained throughout the procedure.

At a little after eight o'clock the sliding doors were drawn, disclosing about 150 of the pupils in the intermediate department arranged in tiers, by Miss Perdue, the Vice Principal, in the rear of the stage proper. The girls were dressed in white and the boys in their "best." The floral decorations about the platform were extremely modest at the beginning of the exercises, but at the close the platform was literally banked with baskets and bouquets of choice cut flowers, the gifts of relatives and friends of the graduates. These gifts were arranged in a semi-circle on the front of the stage, and were admired by many at the close of the exercises.

Principal Boss presided, and with him on the platform were Dr. H. K. Carroll, James McGee and Geo. F. Brown, the school trustees, and Miss Carrie E. Randolph, the accompanist. The members of the graduating class, twenty-five in number, marched in and occupied seats on the stage, at the left.

The programme was inaugurated by the school singing: "The Song of the Mountaineers," and was according to the following

Presentation of diplomas by President of Board of Education.
Music—The Magic Flute.........School.

As will be seen by the foregoing programme the exercises were varied, but each and every number on the lengthy programme was acceptably and very creditably rendered. Master Lambert Bodine declaimed on the subject "Washington." He told of the many great and noble deeds of the father of this country, adding that truth places his name at the head of the Nation at the close of a century.

Miss Bertha E. Needham recited "Ben Hazzard's Guests," in a pleasing manner, and Miss Alice J. Carroll read the first essay, on "Roads." The young lady very forcibly pictured out the various roads through which man passes during his existence. The roads to success and ruin, to happiness and misery, to Heaven and to Jericho, are perhaps the most traveled. These roads are not taken deliberately. When a traveler is in doubt he makes inquiry, and the result of the choice will depend largely upon the quality of the advice given him. The road to marriage, the essayist said, is too often the road to divorce. The first and worst road recorded was that leading out of Eden and traveled by Adam and Eve. If the road traveled by Adam was the worst, certainly the modern roads constructed by MacAdam are of a superior quality. The Romans were the first to show their appreciation of roads, and as years have gone by wonderful progress has been made in their construction.

Many interesting facts are associated with roads. It was the "sunken road" at Waterloo, into which Napoleon's troops fell that saved Europe from the hand of domineering France. Along Giltspur street in London, passes the unhappy criminals on their way to Smithfield.

Russia has the "great Siberian road," the very stones of which cry out at the awful cruelty with which her citizens have been driven into exile and to death. In our country, what road is dearer to every patriot than that on which Faneuil Hall, the "Cradle of Liberty," stands?

In our quest of learning during the past years, we have found out the truth of the saying: "There is no royal road to knowledge." It is not like gliding over a smooth road in a luxurious palace car, but rather like climbing a steep mountain, where one has many slips and falls. We have now reached a point from which we can look back over the past years and review the path by which we ascend. We must not linger, however, for the road winds on and the summit is still far above us.

"Masters of the Situation" was the subject of a declamation by Master John G. McLaughlin. "Today," he said, "is master of the situation; to-morrow is an impostor. Principles, not men, are imperishable."

The scholars sang "Anchored," after which Miss Ella W. Gardner recited pleasantly "Patient Mercy Jones," and Master Paul H. Loizeaux very ably told, in his declamation, of "The Last Charge of Ney." The young man's delivery was clear and distinct, and his gestures were particularly good. "The Hat" was the subject of Miss Maggie B. Cory's essay. The production was worthy of its publication in full, but space will not permit it. The young lady whose delivery was just droll enough to suit the subject, declared that in early days our grandparents wore hats to shield their brains. As the hats of modern times are not of a very protective nature it is concluded that either the cranial organ has become so strong as to need no protection, or there is none to protect. The paper closed with the words: "We need hats, we enjoy hats, we love hats and blessed be hats, if there be not too much of them."

Master Charles Haseltine comically delineated the negro fisherman, on a "Sunday Fishin'," followed by the Boys' Chorus singing "My Heart's in The Highlands."

The next number on the programme was a declamation by Master Philip B. Wells, who appeared in knickerbockers and black stockings. The young man gave a selection from Lowell's "Fable for Critics." He was followed by a recitation entitled "Don," by Miss Minnie M. Arnold. The production was in rhyme and the young lady showed no trace of embarrassment during its delivery. Her allusion to faithful "Don's" rescue of a child from drowning, was particularly affecting.

After the school sang "Joyous Entry," little Miss Grace Overton, dressed prettily in blue, recited "The Little Princess." The expression on the child's face betokened perfect composure and her delivery was excellent. At the close of her recitation she was accorded loud and continued applause.

Miss Eleanor Tennant Morrison recited in a pleasant strain "How the Women Went from Dover," followed by Walter Place's declamation on "The Goose." It was a good selection as to matter, and as an elocutionary effort it was one of the best of the evening.

"The Little Midshipmite" was sung by the boy chorus, Master Herbert Schutt rendering the Solo parts in fine style. Miss Marion Barcroft Nevius' recitation, "The Legend of St. Christopher" was a commendable production, and showed the young lady's eloquence to good advantage. "Among the Hills" was the subject of Miss Mary F. Thompson's essay. The paper showed care and thought in its construction and its delivery was admirable.

Dr. H. K. Carroll, President of the Board of Trustees, then addressed the graduates in a few congratulatory remarks. Said he: "Young ladies and young gentlemen you have been working ten years for these diplomas, and in view of the extreme heat to-night I am not going to keep them from you much longer. Your school course has been very satisfactory to the teachers and trustees. I now congratulate you upon your success during these years of school life." The Doctor then presented each of the graduates with a diploma.

The school sang "The Magic Flute," and the audience dispersed thus bringing to a successful close the sixth annual commencement of the North Plainfield public school.

Among those who ranked first in the class during the year were: Miss Maggie B. Cory, Miss Eleanor T. Morrison and Miss Marion B. Nevius. Those who ranked second were Miss Nellie L. Van Winkle, Miss Mary F. Thompson and Miss Alice J. Carroll.

The graduating class was as follows: Marion Barcroft Nevius, Alice Jennings Carroll, Nellie L. Van Winkle, Maggie B. Cory, Minnie M. Arnold, John G. McLaughlin, Josephine W. Breck, Lewis R. Bird, James Hurley, Walter S. Place, Mary F. Thompson, Mary B. Wells, Philip B. Wells, Lizzie Sheppard, Bertha E. Needham, Augusta Winckler, Ida M. Lewis, Francis A. Grant, Maggie Winckler, Paul H. Loizeaux, Lambert Bodine, Louise H. Loizeaux, Eleanor Tennant Morrison, Margaret Shepherd, Ella W. Gardner.

The class motto is "Never Say Fail."

Westfield's Commencement.

*The annual commencement of the West*field High school was held in Arcanum Hall Thursday afternoon, as stated in THE PRESS of day before. The Salutatory was delivered by Carrie Harding Beebe and the Valedictory by Edwin Alexander Francis, both ranking the same in the class. Prof. Francis presided.

The diplomas were presented by E. L. Embree, President of the Board, and the address to the graduating class was delivered by Chauncey B. Ripley, LL. D. The motto of the class is Palma Non Sine Pulvere. The entire programme was as follows:

Opening prayer.

Closing Exercises in the Public Schools.

The Public Schools in this city and in North Plainfield, closed with appropriate exercises Thursday. At the High School exercises opened with Scripture reading and prayer, followed by singing and an address by the Principal, Miss Bulkley.

At the Washington School building, the exercises were more extended, and included, singing, recitations and addresses. A solo by Master John Bartindale was well rendered. A flag drill by twelve girls, each with a wand, was creditably performed, and was a very pretty sight. Addresses of a patriotic nature were delivered by Judge L. F. Wadsworth and Judge Harper, after which the pupils marched out into the yard, and witnessed the unfurling of a handsome flag.

Another Ornament to Plainfield.

The building that Mr. E. C. Mulford is erecting at 41 and 43 North avenue, opposite the station, is another ornament to the street besides being one of the most commodious and complete business and apartment buildings in the city.

It is from plans by Mr. W. B. Clum, and covers an area of about 1,500 square feet. The front is of Philadelphia brick and terra cotta—very ornamental but in thorough good taste. The basements are large, airy and well lighted. Two stores will be included in the ground floor, while the second and third stories will be fitted up as flats, with one suite of apartments on each floor.

These flats will have bathrooms, with running water at all times; a parlor and and sitting room on the front; and bedrooms, dining room and kitchen, thoroughly ventilated, lighted with gas and electricity, and with open fire places. They will be ready for occupancy by September.

MRS. ILLSLEY GETS HER VINDICATION.

In June 1888, Mrs. Mary R. Illsley of Scotch Plains, began a suit against her husband Henry Illsley, the proprietor of DeBaud's Hotel, for absolute divorce. A few weeks later she filed her petition for temporary alimony and counsel fee.

Then began the liveliest kind of litigation which has furnished much food for gossip at the "Plains," where Mr. Illsley still keeps his hotel, and for absurdly inaccurate reports in the newspapers of New York and Jersey City.

The charge brought by Mrs. Illsley against her husband was infidelity, the other party incriminated being a very handsome woman well-known in this city. Mr. Illsley contested every point, but when his various appeals reached the Chancellor, the wife was invariably successful. Mr. Illsley was compelled even to pay the wife's lawyer, besides alimony and costs.

He retaliated by bringing a cross-suit against his wife charging numerous breaches of her marriage vows. The fight waxed hotter, and presently a third divorce suit was begun it is said at Mr. Illsley's instigation, by Mrs. Shackleton against her husband on which another charge was made against Mrs. Illsley.

Nothing daunted, the wife kept up her fight and Monday she won. The Chan*cellor granted her an absolute divorce* from her husband, and also permanent alimony.

The wife was represented by Craig A. Marsh. The husband had Jackson & Codington and Henry B. Cook, Esq. The result is claimed by Mrs. Illsley as a complete vindication from all the charges against her, since there was not one word testified against her character—the position of defendant as stated by his Counsel in Court, being that it was not necessary for the husband to offer any evidence because the wife had failed to make out any case whatever.

The Chancellor, however, as stated, held otherwise, and declared himself entirely satisfied "that Mrs. Illsley was entitled to the divorce she now has obtained."

THE DIVORCE HE LONGS FOR MAY NOT COME.

Dr. Charles F. Stillman of New York, son of the late Dr. Charles H. Stillman of this city, admits that the published story that he and Miss Mabel Schaus, the daughter of Wm. Schaus, of No. 30 East Thirty-eighth street, a retired importer of pictures, are living together in the Florence flats in East Eighteenth street, New York, as husband and wife, is true.

Dr. Stillman, who has occupied a prominent position in his profession in that city, was married in 1878 to his second cousin, Miss Harriet E. Greenman, at Mystic, Conn. The marriage proved to be an unhappy one and domestic differences became so frequent that Mrs. Stillman announced her intention of getting a divorce. About this time, the husband met Miss Schaus at a party given by Miss Benson who was recently married to Mr. Albert Winter of this city, as told in THE PRESS, and they at once fell in love with each other although she knew that Dr. Stillman was married.

They continued to see each other with Mr. Schaus's consent, and finally became engaged to be married, the ceremony to take place as soon as Mrs. Stillman secured her divorce. This, however, Mrs. Stillman made no attempt to do, and her husband's marked intimacy with Miss Schaus, subjected the latter to much harsh treatment from her father and sister. This grew so unbearable, Miss Schaus says, that finally she left home, to go to Cincinnati, where she intended to earn her living by teaching music. Dr. Stillman followed her to this place and they determined to cast aside all regard for the opinions of the world, and have since lived together, waiting for Mrs. Stillman to get a divorce so that they can be legally married.

Dr. Stillman has for some years been Medical Examiner of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, but his resignation was asked on account of the scandal. He is a member of the Lotos, Lambs', Union League and New York Yacht Clubs. He has sacrificed friends, position and prospects for naught. It is charitable to suppose that he knows not what he does.

Mrs. Stillman is with her mother-in-law in the Stillman homestead. She has with her the child of her ill-starred union, a beautiful boy named after his uncle, Councilman J. K. Myers. She is to some extent comforted in the possession of the deep affection and high esteem of her husband's entire family. Without father, mother, brother or sister to turn to, she is supported by the sincere sympathy of everyone who is honored with her friendship.

—The scholars in Hope chapel Sunday school, will go on an excursion to Highland Beach on Wednesday, July 17.

Friends' First-Day School Picnic.

The Friends' First-day school having taken its usual Summer recess of two months, an entertainment was given the scholars Monday afternoon, which proved to be a highly enjoyable affair.

The programme was to utilize the commodious grounds around the Peace street meeting house for the children's benefit, but the rain prevented, and, consequently, the exercises were held within instead of without the venerable edifice. They consisted of short recitations, readings and text responses, conducted by ex-Judge Harper, Superintendent of the School. Aaron M. Powell delivered a very pleasant address. Refreshments of the best quality and in great abundance followed and happiness shone in every face. The classes were all fully represented.

A number of interested Friends were present, among them being Mary Jane Field, Anna Williamson, Samuel B. Underhill and wife, John Dietrich and wife, Aaron M. Powell and wife, Rachel Bogert, Catherine Webster and Louisa Clifton.

The First-day school will re-open the first First-day in the Ninth month, being September 1.

At a regular meeting of the Board of Education held Monday evening, President Kirkner, Secretary Wadsworth, and Trustees Murray and Babcock were present; also Principal Bulkley, Senior Teacher Goodrich, and Clerk Clark.

Only three bids were received for furnishing 23½ tons of coal for use in the schools during the coming Winter. Mr. Murray stated that as every dealer had been given an opportunity to bid, yet had taken no interest being bound by their combination, he would move that the contract be awarded to the same person who had furnished the coal last year. This was carried, and the price will be $5.25 a ton.

Miss Bulkley reported that $1,212 had been received in payment of the tuition of scholars living outside the school district and that $31.50 was due from the same source. It covered tuition in all grades. These non-residents, she stated, were only admitted in rooms where there were vacant seats, and in no case interfered with those more entitled to the school advantages.

A question having been brought up, it was decided by the Board unanimously, that the children of non-residents must pay for their tuition in the public schools, even if those children were boarding, living with relatives, or keeping house themselves within the city limits.

The customary annual inspection of the schools, to see what repairs are needed so that they may be done during vacation, will be made by Messrs Kirkner, Wadsworth and Murray, Saturday afternoon.

[illegible] and Respect.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union at their business meeting held on Tuesday adopted unanimously the following resolution:

Resolved, That we learned with profound and heartfelt sorrow the death of Mrs. Hayes; that we shall ever cherish gratefully the memory of her noble, praiseworthy example as the wife of the Chief Magistrate of the Nation, in heroically upholding the standard of total abstinence, and in banishing wine and all intoxicants from the official and all other entertainments of the White House; and in giving, as a representative of a rare and noble Christian womanhood, her unfailing sympathy to everything pure, ennobling and good.

To Cost $16,000 and be Done Before Christmas.

The contracts for the extension and alterations of the Chapel and Sunday school rooms of the Crescent Avenue church were awarded Saturday evening by the committee of the Trustees including Mr. John W. Murray and Mr. J. K. Myers.

Mr. I. W. Pa[illegible] is to do the mason work, Mr. John [illegible], the carpentering, and Messrs W[illegible] & Buckle, the painting. The total cost will be $16,000. Mr. Oscar S. Teale is the architect. It is proposed to have the work completed by Dec. 1. Mr. Murray told the contractors that the children must celebrate next Christmas in their new rooms.

A Mid-Ocean Surprise for Their Pastor.

The Rev. Mr. Schenck, pastor of the Trinity Reformed church, sailed on Tuesday, at seven o'clock, on the Steamer Arizona, for Liverpool. The Consistory of the church have granted him a three months' vacation, most of which he will spend on the Continent. A number of his congregation were present to see him off.

When the steamer reaches mid-ocean, Mr. Schenck will be handed a mail pouch of black satin, tied at the mouth with a heavy gold cord, and lettered in gold:

AR[illegible] JULY 2, 1889.
BON VOYAGE!
Trinity Church, Pl[illegible]

This pouch contains about fifty letters from Mr. Schenck's parishioners and friends. They will be both a great surprise and pleasure to him. The idea originated with Mrs. Wm. A. Woodruff, and the pouch was made and lettered by Mrs. Charles F. Leggett.

To Prevent Cruelty to Animals.

A regular business meeting of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals was held in the office of the Chief of Police, last evening, with President Murphy in the chair. There was a large representation of the members present. The President appointed the following persons as members of the Executive Committee: Messrs Julian Scott, W. J. Leonard, T. J. Carey, F. S. C., and will devote his time and talents hereafter to newspaper work for which he has already proven himself particularly gifted.

An Anniversary and a Parting.

Sunday was the second anniversary of the Rev Cornelius Schenck's installation as pastor of Trinity Reformed church. The exclusive announcement in The Press of appropriate services for the occasion, drew a large congregation.

After preaching an able sermon from Rom. I, 16, Mr. Schenck gave a brief history of the church, the Sunday school, the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor and the Ladies Aid Society, for the past year. Figures were given as to the amount of money raised for the various purposes of charitable and church work, and also the amount paid towards the liquidation of the church debt. All those reports showed a steady growth in every way, and evidenced a flourishing and encouraging condition. There was singing by a male trio—Messrs J. D. Moore, H. J. Martin and F. R. Cather.

At the evening service, another large congregation assembled. The pastor preached from Titus II, part of the twelfth verse—"We should live soberly, righteously and godly, in the present World." The sermon was filled with wise and sound advice as to how to live.

After the sermon Mr. Schenck simply announced his intended departure for Europe. He made no long farewell speech. Just before the benediction—the congregation standing—the trio sang, "God be With You till We Meet Again." There were few dry eyes in the congregation. A general leave-taking occurred at the church door.

TRINITY COMMANDERY CONSTITUTED.

The ceremonies attending the constituting of Trinity Commandery, No. 17 Knights Templar of this city, took place in Anchor Lodge room, June 26, over eighty of the Sir Knights, including the officers of the Grand Commandery of New Jersey being in attendance. The new Commandery was constituted with a membership of thirty-seven.

The Commandery was constituted by Sir Albert D. Winfield of Paterson, Grand Commander, assisted by the following grand officers: L. L. Grear, D. G. C., of Passaic Bridge; Isaac S. Roberts, P. G. C., Lambertville; J. E. Fulper, G.C.G., of Washington; Thomas Codson, Grand Prelate of Newark; W. W. Hulfish, G. S. W., of Newark; Warren Dobbs, G. J. W., of Jersey City; I. C. Githens, P. G. C., of Camden; James McCain, Grand Standard Bearer, of Trenton; Edward Mills, Grand Steward Bearer, of Camden; Robert Dingwell, Grand Warden, of Newark, and J. E. Rowe, Grand Marshal, of Newark.

At the conclusion of the ceremony, R. E. Sir Albert D. Winfield, G. C., assisted by Em. Sir J. E. Rowe, Grand Marshal, installed the following officers:

Commander—Wm. H. Sebring.
G. G.—C. M. Goddard.
Prelate—W. L. Gavett.
S. W.—F. O. Herring.
J. W.—R. F. Cornell.
Treasurer—O. T. Waring.
Recorder—T. A. Rogers.
Standard Bearer—J. Dengler.
Sword Bearer—J. B. Probasco.
Warden—John Ch[illegible].
Organist—E. Wolzmann.

Sentinel—J. D. TenEyck.

After the installation of officers Eminent Sir J. S. Farrand on behalf of St. John's Commandery No. 9 of Elizabeth presented an elegant Bible to Trinity Commandery, and Eminent Commander Wm. H. Sebring acknowledged the receipt of the same.

The Commandery then closed and the Sir Knights repaired to the banqueting room in the Republican headquarters on East Front street, where a sumptuous collation was served by Stevenson, during which speech-making was a prominent feature.

Large delegations were present from Coeur de Lion Commandery, No. 6, K. T., of New Brunswick, Josiah Tice Eminent Commander, also from St. John's Commandery, No. 9, of Elizabeth, J. S. Farrand Eminent Commander; Pilgrim Commandery, No. 16, of Hoboken, R. H. Livingston Eminent Commander; Damascus Commandery, No. 5, of Newark and Palestine Commandery, No. 4, of Trenton.

Melita Commandery, No. 13, of Paterson, was represented by Eminent Commander, W. J. Lockwood and Sir Knights Pidget and Parsons. The latter presented Sir Knight E. P. Thorn of this city with a badge of Malta Commandery.

—The new block system in the Central Railroad yards at Communipaw has not yet proved a success, as it failed to provide for the drilling of arriving trains after they had reached the depot shed. The inventor of the system says he can remedy the defect, and in the meantime the switches will be worked by hand as was formerly done.

Y. M. C. A. Camp.

The following boys have decided to go into the Y. M. C. A. Boys Camp at Lake Wawayanda, July 2 to 16: Vincent Rockwell, Bruce Beale, George Ryder and Frank French. Messrs William Rockwell and Chas. F. Powlison, of this city, have highly endorsed the Camp.

Full information can be obtained at the Y. M. C. A. rooms.

CRESCENTS WIN AGAIN.

A thousand people filled the grand stands, the bleaching boards and the outfield of the LaGrande avenue ball grounds, Saturday afternoon, expecting to see the Crescents fight hard to save themselves from defeat at the hands of the Miller Athletic Club nine of Newark. It was told that the visitors had easily beaten the 10th Warders, of Newark, who jumped on the Crescents a few weeks ago with a score of 11 to 3.

But as The Press said last Monday, the Crescents have "struck a winning gait." Nine runs in the first inning, and five of them earned, was Saturday's record. As man after man went to the bat and lined out a base hit, and Cadmus made a home run on a ball that he lost in the crowd, the visiting team plunged up to their chins in the soup and for the remaining eight innings of the game floundered about in as yellow a game of ball as was ever seen.

The sympathy of the crowd was with the visitors. Whenever they did make an effort, they were loudly applauded. They were a set of gentlemen, handsomely dressed, playing in consummate hard luck. The home team were also a set of gentlemen, but there the similarity ceases. They were dressed as usual in a ragged and dirty lot of misfit shirts, trousers and stockings, and as to luck—if they had been whitewashed eight innings in succession, they could not have lost the game.

Curlis pitched a great game, striking out thirteen, including every man of the Millers except H. Briscoe and H. Ditmars. But he cannot guard the bases. A runner from first can get such a start that it is almost an impossibility for any catcher to cut him off at second. Certainly Haydon cannot throw down quick enough, and it will probably be necessary to put the "Only Dave" behind the bat when Curlis is in the box.

There was nothing in the individual playing of the Crescents, to call for special mention. The game was won at the start, and thereafter no cause for brilliant effort arose. No ball could get through the stone wall behind the pitcher—McMurray, Condon, Cadmus and Lee—and only two balls went over it. One of these Demarest made a fine effort and got, the other McLaughlin unbecomingly missed.

The score was:

FUNERAL OF HERBERT W. PECK.

Every seat in Trinity Reformed church was occupied, June 26, at five o'clock, upon the occasion of the funeral of Herbert Winthrop Peck. The unusually large attendance proved the esteem in which he is held by the community, and their appreciation of the loss they had sustained and their sympathy with the bereaved parents.

The doleful and oppressive atmosphere that is unjustly supposed to be a proper and a necessary part of like gatherings, was absent. Intimate friends of the dead man, wearing white Japonicas in their coats, acted as ushers, and through the wide open doors and windows the bright sun and pleasant breezes entered and filled the large church with brightness and comfort. By request of the family, there was no dismal tolling of the bell.

The Rev. Cornelius Schenck and the Rev. A. V. V. Raymond, D. D., met the funeral cortege at the door of the church, as it came from the house, and preceded the pall bearers with the remains, up the centre aisle to the pulpit. The parents of the deceased and intimate family friends, followed and occupied the pews in the front that had been reserved for them. The casket was loaded with magnificent floral tokens of love and admiration, including a massive bank of flowers from the Y's.

Mr. Arthur L. Titsworth presided at the organ and played with beautiful effect an appropriate processional. There was singing during the services by a quartette of male voices—Messrs Elmer E. Runyon, David E. Titsworth, Morris C. VanArsdale and Arthur L. Titsworth. The pall bearers were: Messrs Louis Walz, Frank Newman, Tiemann Horn, Neil Bristol, John Woodruff and Mortimer Day. The ushers were: Messrs Frank Martin, Fred Yates, Daniel Adams, Frank Clawson and Clarence Murphy of this city, and Messrs Sebert and Allen of New York.

The Rev. Mr. Schenck spoke first, taking his conception of the occasion from John's words: "Blessed are they who are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb." His address was a cheering one, though most affecting. "This is not a time," he said, "when we should feel miserable, unhappy, unfortunate or ill fated. This is rather a time for congratulation. This is not the ending of a life, but the beginning of it. It is not darkness that has come upon us, but sunshine. It is not the cutting off of all this young man's brilliant prospects—it is the realization of every ambition. It is the beginning of a rest that shall never be disturbed, and of a song without an end.

"There is left behind a blessed record, and a sweet and tender memory, we shall always cherish. Herbert Peck furnished for you and for me, an example we may well seek to emulate. He has shown how one can be manly and yet be a Christian—how it is consistent to be a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ and yet be a man."

The Rev. Dr. Raymond, who as the former pastor of the church had received Herbert Peck into its membership, followed with a sympathetic and compassionate talk, full of just eulogy of the dead. "I am here," he began, "not as a minister but as a friend, to talk over together among us the experiences we have had with him who has just left us for a little while. * * * I never knew in all my life a purer hearted young man than Herbert Peck. He had not one unholy ambition, nor a single feeling that was mean. The Father has let the light of this life in upon us just long enough to leave its impression on those who will be influenced by it."

The remains encased in a casket of embossed white velvet, were deposited in the receiving vault at Hillside Cemetery, to be privately interred, later.

Sale of Real Estate.

The Press wishes to call attention to the advertisement in today's columns of the public sale on Saturday. The property is located virtually in the heart of our city, and its prospective value must be great. As it is a public sale it will test the value of Plainfield property. A word to the wise is sufficient.

The Rev. Mr. Schenck Will Go to Europe.

"Three months' vacation for our pastor," was voted by the consistory of Trinity Reformed church, at a meeting June 26, and the Rev. Mr. Schenck sailed Tuesday morning of this week, at seven o'clock, on the SS. "Arizona."

He will be accompanied by the prayers for his health and safety, and the heartfelt wishes for his enjoyment, of the whole congregation and his hosts of friends among the people of Plainfield. The tour will be through Liverpool, London, Belgium, The Rhine, Germany, Austria, Italy, Switzerland, France, England and Scotland.

Mrs. Schenck will not accompany him, but will spend part of the time in Plainfield and the remainder with her mother at Philadelphia, her former home.

CITY COUNCIL MEETING.

The regular monthly meeting of the City Council for July, took place on Monday. The roll call showed the following members present. President Dumont and Messrs Erickson, Dunham, Jenkins, Marsh and Myers—6. The minutes of the last meetings, regular and adjourned, were read and approved, and at 8:30 o'clock the regular order of business was taken up.

PETITIONS AND COMMUNICATIONS.

Under the above heading sundry applications were received for hack and peddlers' licenses. They were referred and subsequently granted.

From Mrs. A. P. Smith and others asking for an electric light on the North side of LaGrande avenue, South of Woodland avenue. Referred to the Committee on Public Lights.

Mr. J. P. Taylor petitioned the Council for permission to remove a one-story frame building from its present position on North avenue, to a vacant lot a few feet West. Referred and later granted.

The Electric Light Company communicated with the Council calling attention to the fact that the low branches on the trees interfere with the street lighting. Referred to the Street Committee with power. A petition for a crosswalk at Peace and Second streets, took the same course.

The Hall Electric Pump Company communicated the fact that said company had been incorporated under the State law, and it was the intention of the company to distribute electricity for business purposes. The company asked the Council to designate the streets through which it could run its poles. Referred to the Street Committee.

Mr. Wallace Vail called attention, in a communication, to the matter of nude bathing at the Clinton avenue bridge. Referred to the Police Committee.

Claims were presented and referred as follows, among them being the usual batch of poor claims, and the Finance Committee was authorized to act as the Auditing Committee:

Miscellaneous—E. M. Shafer, $4 20; James Clark, $105, M. M. Dunham, agt., $23 50, S. O. Doane, $13 28, C. H. Rugg, $4 30, Job Male, $18 43, Electric Light Co., $673 41, G. M. Titsworth, $114, Mrs. David Jones, $12, J. R. Naylor, $22; Times Printing and Publishing Co., $42 85, T. J. Carey $90, Chas. Giese, $60, T. McCue, $60, P. J. Flannigan, $60, C. H. Rugg, $4 94, G. W. Grant, $60, P. Lynch, $61 25, M. C. Bird, $62 50, Schwed Bros., $85, Chas. H. Hand, $12 50.

Fire Department—S. O. Doane, $110, and $61 04, J. C. Pope, agt., $68 75, A. M. Griffen, $86 25, Chas. F. Glaentzer, $10, Engine Co., No. 2, $25, Wm. Rickey, $5, C. E. Johnson, $1,850, C. H. Rugg, $22, Eugene A. Laine, $18 75, Wm. Gratton, $6, Plainfield Gas Light Co., $6 30, T. O. Doane, $41 66, Jos. Cooney, $13 33, Jones & Co., $7.

The Board of Engineers recommended for confirmation the name of Henry Hanrahan as a duly elected member of Zephyr Hook and Ladder Co., also J. A. Craig as a member of No. 2 Engine Company. The nominations were confirmed.

The monthly report of the treasurer was received and filed.

Corporation Counsel Marsh sent in a communication, stating that he was unable to give his attention to the matter of preparing a report with reference to the legality of a claim of T. W. Morrison for illegal advertising, until that afternoon, and consequently the report was not ready to be submitted. He was requested to file a report with the clerk.

The Finance Committee, returned with the Committee's disapproval, the plans and specifications submitted by Chas. H. Hand at a former meeting, with reference to fitting up a Council Chamber in his new building now in course of erection on West Second street.

Mr. Erickson returned the petition sent in at a former meeting, asking for the establishment of a building line on West Second street. The matter was referred to the Corporation Counsel.

The above petition of the LaGrande avenue property owners, asking for an electric light was returned. Mr. Erickson stated the reason for not granting this and similar petitions. He said that the appropriation for street lighting was $[illegible],000 and about $8,100 had already been expended. In other words the appropriation is exhausted.

Mr. Erickson, from the Water Committee, presented the corrected plans and specifications relating to water works. The document was received and filed.

Upon motion of Mr. Marsh, $500 was appropriated for street repairs.

The date for issuing warrants for the collection of 1887 taxes was changed from July 3d to the 9th instant.

Mr. Myers moved to reconsider the resolution passed June 3d, fixing the compensation of the delinquent tax collector. He substituted a resolution which prevailed, fixing the compensation as follows: For all taxes prior to 1887, ten per cent.; for '87 and '88 taxes collected, five per cent., the above rates to be in addition to the legal fees of 36 cents per name.

Mr. Marsh called up the sidewalk ordinance. It was read for the third time and tabled.

The vault and cistern ordinance was called up and adopted on its final passage.

A resolution by Mr. Myers to the effect that notes be executed for the following sums, in anticipation of taxes, prevailed: $2,000 to be deposited to the credit of the general fund; $2,000 to the Fire Department fund, and $500 to the poor fund.

Mr. Marsh stated that a notice had been formally served upon Mr. M. Murray requesting him to lay a walk in front of his property, No. 45 West Fifth street, but the request was not complied with. He offered a resolution to the effect that a stone walk, of blue stone flagging, four feet in width, be laid in front of said premises, under the direction of the Street Commissioner, and that the Council enforce the payment of the same. The resolution was adopted.

The Auditing Committee reported on the claims sent in during the evening, and they were ordered paid by warrants. Council then adjourned.

Netherwood's Fourth.

The Fourth of July celebration at The Netherwood, Thursday, will surpass former occasions of the kind.

There will be a band concert in the afternoon, a big display of fireworks in the evening, and a full dress ball at night, followed by a supper.

The public is as usual welcome to listen to the band and see the pyrotechnics, but the ball and supper are for the Hotel's guests and their friends.

Wedding Bells.

At the residence of the bride's parents, on West Front street, at 7:30 o'clock, on June 26, occurred the marriage of Miss L. Alice Hoffman and Mr. James L. Love, Rev. J. B. Cleaver officiating. About seventy-five of the relatives and intimate friends of the bride and groom were present. A reception followed, after which the newly-married couple started on their wedding trip to Philadelphia, Washington and other points of interest. The gifts were numerous and costly.

Saturday's Trotting.

On account of the extreme heat, there were but two races at the Gentlemen's Driving Park track on Saturday afternoon. The first was between John Hayes' "Andy," Nate Robbins' "Metuchen Boy" and a gray mare owned by Chas. Brower. "Andy" won two straight heats in 2.51½ and 2.53.

The next race was between Wm. Van Sickle's "Sag Wah" and John Osborn's "Mercenear." The former horse won both heats. Time 2.55 and 2.53.

President French Almost a Victim of Arson.

What is believed to be a bold attempt to set fire to the Knickerbocker Conservatory, 34 W. Fourteenth street, New York, was discovered shortly after 1 o'clock Friday morning, and one of the managers of the concern was pulled out of bed and arrested on suspicion of knowing something about the matter.

The building is a four-story brick structure with sandstone trimmings. The first floor is occupied by French & Boughton, children's outfitters, of which firm, Mr. John H. French, of this city, President of the Reform Club, is the senior, and Mr. Arthur Boughton, formerly of Plainfield, is the junior partner.

"Smokestack's" Fate.

It was reported Friday that Edward Hoover, a well-known character about here, had fallen from a chimney 160 feet high, that he was painting in Trenton, and was instantly killed.

Hoover is best known by his general title of "Smokestack." He has climbed for painting or other purposes, about all the highest chimneys and steeples in this city, Elizabeth, Bound Brook, Somerville and elsewhere in the vicinity. Whenever there is any height to climb that no one else dares to attempt, Hoover is sent for. He has never been bluffed by anything that points towards the sky, and as The Press has been expecting any day to record the breaking of his neck, it seems probable that the story from Trenton is true, although there is no authentic information received.

Reform Club Meeting.

Reform Hall was filled Sunday evening with an attentive and appreciative audience. Vice President Harper occupied the chair, Rev. J. B. Cleaver conducted the devotional services, and Mr. Vanderbeek led the music.

The speaker for the evening was Mr. Wm. E. Hall, editor of the New York Christian.

Mr. Hall is of Southern birth and his style of speaking is consequently fluent and fervent, at times exceedingly eloquent, and interspersed throughout with effective and well recited incidents. Close attention was given from the beginning to the close of his splendid address.

He denounced the Demi-john as the holder and dispenser of poison, and his minute description of the man John and the terrible evils wrought upon him by the liquor poison was very touching. Mr. Hall is no believer in licenses, high or low, and he would shiver all Demi-johns into a thousand fragments.

The Tournament a Success.

The second tennis tournament in aid of the Y's contribution to the fund for the Y. M. C. A., building, was a complete success in every way, Saturday afternoon, on the Central avenue courts. About 200 were present and the sum of $50 will probably be realized.

The first set was won in two straight, by Miss Minnie E. Wood and Mr. C. L. Goodrich, against Miss Flora Petrie and Mr. A. R. Pitts.

Miss Lillian Newman and Mr. W. R. Richards, beat Miss Julia Ketcham and Mr. S. St. J. McCutchen.

Miss Kate Kimball and Mr. David Wotherspoon, beat Miss Mary French and Mr. L. B. Goodrich.

Miss Newman and Mr. Richards, beat Miss Wood and Mr. Goodrich a set, but an accident to Mr. Richards closed the competition between these pairs.

The finals were then played, and a most exciting contest resulted. Miss Kimball and Mr. Wotherspoon were pitted against Miss Wood and Mr. Goodrich. Mr. Wotherspoon had finished second in the recent tournament in Elizabeth, and Miss Wood had won the local match for singles on the Rushmore courts, Saturday, June 8.

She and her partner won the first set by the close score of 6-5. After an exciting battle, however, Miss Kimball and Mr. Wotherspoon won the last two sets, 6-5 and 6-4.

—There was no sale, Saturday, of the property on Grove street back of the Baptist church on which stand the unfinished brick houses. A bid of $2,900 was made on a piece of the property 50 by 155 feet fronting on Prospect place, but it is improbable that it was a genuine bid.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER
THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Why Should I Go to Montana?

Great Reservation. Because 18,000,000 acres of free Government land, with a delightful climate, and equally suited for general farming and stock raising, have just been opened to the homeseeker, in the Milk River Valley and near Benton and Great Falls.

Stock Raising. Because the favorable climate and superior grasses of Montana make it the natural home of horses, cattle, sheep and other domestic animals; and because Winter feeding is not required, as stock grazes at large the year around.

General Farming. Because its rich soil and abundant Summer rains produce wheat, oats, rye, barley and the grasses and vegetables of a quality, size and yield unsurpassed.

Mining. Because Montana produces more of the precious metals than any other state or territory, and abundant opportunities remain to secure valuable properties at nominal cost.

Immigration. Because the Great Reservation is the meeting point of settlers from the Pacific Coast and from the Eastern States, and is the only extensive tract of good land left, suitable for settlement.

Business. Because the rapidly growing towns along the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. offer splendid opportunities to engage in business.

Manufacturer. Because the 1,000,000 horse-power water-power at Great Falls, the extensive coal veins, the wool, mineral and grain raising resources of Montana, offer exceptional opportunities to the manufacturer.

Tourist. Because the canon of the Gates of the Mountains, the Great Falls of the Missouri, the Giant Fountain and Continental Divide offer the most sublime and diversified scenery to be found on the Continent. Take a Summer tour.

Why Travel by the St. P., M. & M.? Because only by it can you travel through the largest body of free land left for settlement. Because it reaches the Great Falls, with the largest water-power on the Continent. Because it reaches Helena, the richest city of its size in the world; and because it is the shortest and best route to Butte, the largest mining camp on earth. Special tourists' and homeseekers' rates. Daily trains through solid to Montana. Choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. Find out all about it by writing for "The Great Reservation," and "Tourists' Summer Guide." For further information, rates, maps, etc., apply to F. I. WHITNEY, G. P. & T. THREE KINDS!

I know
The past, and thence I will essay to glean
A warning for the future, so that man
May profit by his errors, and derive
Experience from his folly.—Shelley.

Three kinds of men start out to buy Clothing. The foolish man is hauled in by a bait and buys cheap shoddy clothing from the "hurrah" fake.

Then comes the thoughtless man, who wends his way to the fashionable tailor, gets a good suit, but pays a very big price for the same.

The wise man deals with some reputable manufacturer of Clothing and secures garments fully equal to those made to order at about half custom prices. Thus the wise man gets his Clothing, with quality and workmanship thrown in, as cheap as the foolish man his miserable trash. An unusually large number of wise men are being attracted to our store this Spring. Whether it's a case of "once bitten twice shy" or not, we don't know, but certainly their patronage of us does credit to their good judgment, and we don't think, once having traded here they'll be caught by clap-trap again. We know what we sell. We make it, and neither time, effort or money is spared to produce garments that will do us credit and still further establish our reputation. It's a selfish interest we take, we'll admit, but the effect is the same. It's there, and it pays both you and us.

PURCHASE A HOME.

The Personal Independence That Is Inculcated by Housekeeping.

"Will it be wise?"

"Yes," replied the elderly man, "it will be wise for you, because, if you try, you will persevere."

I agree, adds a writer in the New York Weekly. And working-men, clerks and others of moderate incomes, let me tell you why, prefacing it with the remark that I have consulted with some of the best advisers that I could find, during several weeks past.

A home for which you agree to pay a moderate price to-day, if wisely located near a large or small city, is sure to increase in value on your hands. [illegible] across the plains. There, on the well-kept mounds, repose the flowers that loving hands keep fresh, flowers that grew from the soil of your own home lot, flowers whose roots the living children plant in May, whose petals they cull for the dead children in July. Near by the church yard here, the familiar place in the old sanctuary, where your boy first slept through services, whither the same whitehaired boy returns in after years to sit beside your gray hairs.

Owning your own house your neighbors have learned to love you by the memory of scores of dinners at your table, year after year. You have watched with their sick, as they have with yours, you have been to their weddings, as they to yours. The house is you; it grows to look like you; it is your monument of years of tastes peculiarly your own.

I wish you well of your struggle, reader. God help you to pay off the last cent of the mortgage. I can not see your face, but I encourage you. Be patient, be strong. You will succeed at last.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

From an Address by Charles R. Miller, Editor of the New York Times.

I am convinced that the shortest way to reform the newspapers is to push on to a prompt conclusion the regeneration of man. If those newspapers that are least scrupulous as to the kind of matter they print are seen to be the most widely circulated, that is a proof that the class in the community which has lax taste in respect to its reading is the most numerous class. It is an easy matter in any large city to give large circulation to a newspaper. You have merely to dismiss all scruples, all taste, all decency; print all the scandals that a large and active corps of detective reporters can unearth; let your pages reek of crime and lewdness and cheap sensations, and so long as the Society for the Prevention of Crime keeps its hands off, the bounding circulation of your newspaper will keep your affidavit-maker at the full stretch of his powers. Not many years ago a newspaper was founded in New York upon a novel and ingenious theory. "I am convinced," said its founder and editor, "that there are fools enough in this city to support handsomely a newspaper carefully edited to their tastes and capacities." He made the venture, and found readily that "handsome support" which he had so shrewdly foreseen, and for which he so skillfully catered. When we add to the number of "fools" the much greater number of persons of morbid or positively vicious tastes, not all of whom by any means are poor in estate or low in social position, we get a pretty formidable total, [illegible] those publications which appeal more directly by their character and cleanliness to the thoughtful, wholesome-minded part of the community have considerably less than half the whole field for their domain. No doubt this is a deplorable state of things. The reformers and the missionaries should look to it. But the proprietors and managers of newspapers not given up to sensations and scandals have a right to make their protest heard against the indiscriminating censure who consign all newspapers alike to the brand of the common hangman. No man or woman in this country is constrained otherwise than by personal tastes to read vicious and frivolous newspapers. There are newspapers enough of all shades of party opinion, Republican, Democratic, Prohibition and mugwump, that are published for virtuous and intelligent men and women. It is not the fault of their editors and publishers, nor is it chargeable to the wickedness of the press as a whole, if so large a part of the community turns with a shameful craving to newspapers which the virtuous and intelligent regard with disgust. Some part of the castigation visited upon the licentious press might with propriety be transferred to the backs of those who are daily guilty of the voluntary debasement of reading it. Depend upon it, you can not reform the press by preaching at it. Abolish vulgarity, brutality, ignorance and vice, and then you may have the delight of seeing the sensation-mongering, scandal-purveying editor on his way to the poor-house.

BRAVER THAN MEN.

Women Endure Pain Much Better and Face Death with More Calmness.

In the course of a recent interview Dr. Shrady, the editor of the Medical Record, and one of the physicians who attended General Grant in his last illness, was asked whether his experience as a medical man had led him to believe that death is painless.

"Speaking generally," said he, "the death agony is very rarely attended by pain, because the system is always prepared for death by a weakening of the vital forces, by the circulation of impure blood through the brain and by the blunting of the nerves. Of course, some people have more pain than others, and this is largely determined by temperament.

"A nervous man—all other things being equal—suffers more pain than a man who has enjoyed robust health, because the nervous man's sensibilities are stronger, but the pain of death is more in the anticipation of it than in the reality. The instinct for life is stronger in man, and the teachings of the present day, as well as the writings of our scientists, do not make the majority of men any the more ready to relinquish life.

"Men of education face death with greater fortitude than men who are not educated. Philosophy has a great deal to do with the art of dying, although the Christian religion has been a great comfort to the human race in preparing the way for death and in giving hope of a life hereafter, amounting in some cases almost to a realization of a better country beyond the line of time.

"Women are almost always pluckier than men. They endure pain much better. Have you ever observed how irritable a man is who is suffering from toothache or neuralgia, but a woman will often suffer without a murmur. All other things being equal a woman will face death with more calmness and fortitude than a man, which may be partly accounted for from the fact that the instinct for life is stronger in a man, and his habits and surroundings have trained him not to give in so easily."

ANCIENT MIDASES.

The Millionaires of Our Day Paupers by Comparison with Them.

Our modern millionaires, rich though they may seem to us, are mere paupers when compared in wealth to the Midases of old, says the New York Truth. Neither Jay Gould, Vanderbilt, the Duke of Westminster, Astor, Rhinelander nor Rothschild owns a tithe of the vast hoards possessed by the ancients, the misuse of which preceded the downfall of the Roman State. Tiberius, the second Emperor of Rome, left to Caligula a sum of money in hard cash equivalent to $120,125,000, which, if history is to be believed, the latter gentleman spent in one year of royal and unbounded spree. Cæsar began life owing [illegible] and before he ended it had got through [illegible] of public treasure. Not the greatest of our boodlers ever even dreamt of such omnivorous embezzlement. Crœsus had a nice little nest egg, [illegible], besides real estate and slaves beyond counting. [illegible]

Cramps in the Legs.

There are two old superstitions about cramps that seize the legs and start a man out of his bed quicker than any thing else. One is to stick a jack-knife in the head-board of the bed on retiring for the night, and the other is to arrange the slippers very carefully, bottom up, at the foot of the bed.

SOME QUEER FISHES.

Singular Exhibitions of Breathing Habits and Climbing Propensities.

Taking first the Ophiocephalus tribe, or "snake-headed" fishes, found in the Indian region, we meet with singular exhibitions of breathing habits, writes Dr. Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E., F.L.S., in Once a Week. It is known of these fishes that they can survive long periods of dryness, living as they do in the semi-fluid mud of rivers and lakes. Often they may be found lying dormant beneath the "hard-baked crust of the bottom of a tank, from which every drop of water has disappeared." Now, in these fishes it is clear breathing must be largely suspended, and life goes on at very low pressure, so to speak; but so long as the mud is soft enough, these fishes can be seen to rise to the surface at intervals to gulp in air. That is to say, when hard pressed for water, these fishes have developed a habit of using air taken directly from the atmosphere for the purpose of purifying their blood—a function naturally carried on by their gills. They have converted themselves, for the time being, into land-animals. Nor is this all. These "snake-headed" fishes of India, while enjoying their ordinary life in the water, are also seen to gulp down air from the atmosphere. Dr. Day tells us that this habit is to be regularly observed in these fishes. He adds the interesting observation that if a net be suspended below the surface of the water of the vessel in which they are contained, so as to prevent the fishes from rising to the top of the water to breathe in the air, they will actually perish and die by suffocation. So that just as ordinary fishes die suffocated out of the water, these fishes perish from a like cause if they are kept in the water.

Another and nearly related division of fishes includes the climbing perch of India and its neighbors. In 1797, one Daldorf, in a paper read before the Linnæan Society of London, detailed the fact that he had captured a climbing-perch (or Anabas) while the fish was climbing a palm-tree growing near a pond. The fish had attained a height of five feet above the water, and was proceeding to a higher level still. By aid of the spines in front of its gill-covers, it held on to the tree's bark. It then bent its tail, and inserted into the bark its hinder tail-spines. Thus fixing the hinder part of the body as a kind of fulcrum or support, the fish then released its head, and made further ascent by straightening its body. In the Malay tongue the fish has been named the "tree-climber," and it is known to walk, or rather to waddle, over the land in search of fresh ponds and pools. The gills are kept moist in its land-journeys by a peculiar arrangement of the bones of the head. These bones are greatly twisted and contorted, and serve apparently either to retain moisture for the gills, or to hold a supply of air sufficient for the breathing operations of the fish.

But excelling in interest, even the curious fishes just named, we find the Lepidosiren, or mud-fish, of the Amazon and Gambia rivers, and the Ceratodus, or "Barramunda," of the rivers of Queensland. In most ordinary fishes, such as the cod, salmon, herring, etc., an organ called the air-bladder, swimming-bladder, or sound exists. [illegible]

[illegible] vestiments, and existing thus inside a veritable ball of dry clay, whence they are released by steeping the clay in tepid water. In this state it is evident the breathing must be of a strictly atmospheric type. There can be no use for gills in a fish while it is spending part of its life in a dried and desiccated state.

Hence, the lung-like air-bladder must perform all the functions of breathing, the gills resuming their duties, doubtless, when the wet season dissolves the clay and when the fish returns to its native waters. We witness in such a case the stages by which the type of water life can be, and probably has been, modified into the type of land life! Anyone who sees a frog begin life as a tadpole, breathing with gills, and ending its existence as an air-breathing frog, may think of the mud fishes, and note how lower life often successfully aspires to attain a higher stage of existence.

Uncle Medill and the Reporter.

They tell in Chicago a story about Uncle Joseph Medill, the owner of the Chicago Tribune, and a new reporter of that paper. The reporter was sent the other evening to write up a reception. He got along all right until he met a fine-looking gray-bearded old gentleman, the center of a group of ladies and gentlemen. As is customary, apparently in Chicago, the reporter entered the group and got the names of those present, but when he asked for the old gentleman's name he was answered by a loud and exasperating: "Eh?" "I should like your name, please." "Eh! What! Speak louder!" yelled the old gentleman, putting his hand to his ear. The reporter filled his lungs with air and then yelled: "I am a reporter, and would like your name!" "Oh, reporter, eh! What paper?" "The Tribune; will you please give me your name?" Theold man looked at the young man kindly, stroked his beard, and said, quietly: "Joseph Medill."

Job's Abused Wife.

Job was a wonderfully afflicted man, but as a partial compensation for it, he has had the sympathy of the human race for 4,000 years. But it has not been so with Job's wife. Nobody has ever spoken a kind word of her. [illegible]

Rheumatism and Neuralgia

These twin diseases cause untold suffering. Doctors admit that they are difficult to cure—so do their patients. Paine's Celery Compound has permanently cured the worst cases of rheumatism and neuralgia—so say those who have used it.

"Having been troubled with rheumatism [illegible] I was almost unable to get around, and was very often confined to my bed for weeks at a time. I used only one bottle of Paine's Celery Compound, and was perfectly cured. I can now jump around, and feel as lively as a boy." FRANK CARROLL, [illegible], Nevada.

"Paine's Celery Compound has been a God-send to me. For the past two years I have suffered with neuralgia of the heart, doctor after doctor failing to cure me. I have now taken nearly four bottles of the Compound, and am free from the complaint. I feel very grateful to you." CHAS. H. LEWIS, Central Village, Ct.

Paine's Celery Compound

"I have been greatly afflicted with acute rheumatism, and could find no relief until I used Paine's Celery Compound. After using six bottles of this medicine I am now cured of rheumatic troubles."
SAMUEL HUTCHINSON, So. Cornish, N. H.

Effects Lasting Cures.

Paine's Celery Compound has performed many other cures as marvelous as these,—copies of letters sent to any address. Pleasant to take, does not disturb, but aids digestion, and entirely vegetable; a child can take it. What's the use of suffering longer with rheumatism or neuralgia?

BESSIE.

Before him rolled the broad expanse of his rich lands that brought him, each year, more wealth than would gratify his every wish.

Yet gloom sat heavy upon his brow, and the finger-marks of care were plain across his fine forehead. Sisters or brothers he had never known, mother and father were long since dead. He was alone in the world, alone amidst the innumerable who were proud to call him friend or acquaintance; alone, with no confidant, no single soul to receive the words that relieved the pent-up yearnings and emotions of his heart, save Bessie, his loving, true, ever-patient Bessie, his alone, to whom he was a god.

To her only did he pour out his most secret thoughts, his wildest imaginings; tortures of the inquisition, he knew, could not wring from her one word of betrayal of his trusts.

From a shadowed nook long she watched him, then stole silently and, resting at his feet, laid her beautiful head upon his knee and raised her beautiful eyes to read in his own the secrets of his soul.

With lightness of an angel's touch his great, brown hand fell upon her nut-brown hair, lovingly it lingered among the soft, short curls, his brow cleared, his gaze became soft, tender, as it rested upon her, and a sigh of relief told how thankfully he recognized the bond of love between them, how willingly he resigned himself to its power.

Long they thus remained, silent, yet in full communion. But Thurlow was a creature of moods, of strange, sudden, wild impulses. At times he seemed unable to resist the terrible outbursts of passion that swayed him, soul and body; the slightest, seemingly the most insignificant action of those under his control—and he considered all who acknowledged him as master to be under his supreme authority—the most trivial movement of one of these would render him frantic and terrible. In his wrath he would visit his anger on the innocent, unsuspecting victim with the heartless cruelty of a Nero.

No calm followed these storms, for waves of unchecked, soul-searching remorse would toss the unhappy man upon the sea of self-accusation and restless penitence, while the "pride that would not down" part of his unourbed nature rendered it almost impossible for him to make the least exhibition of sorrow for the ills he had so ruthlessly inflicted.

"The heart knoweth its own bitterness," and no human creature ever dreamed of the agony this man endured when his passion had spent its force.

But to the lovely and loving Bessie he was tenderness itself, not invariably, alas! still, her gentleness, her obedience, her beauty shielded her from many of the storms that beat upon the heads of others.

It would be hard to tell, puzzling even to conjecture, what demon of ill found its way into the atmosphere of peaceful quiet that surrounded these two as they sat together in the twilight.

Spite of the good angel that seemed to hover over them, the demon forced its way.

What it was, Thurlow could never recall to his dying day. Some slight movement on her part that disturbed the tenor of his thought, perhaps; it might have been only a turn of her head or a wandering glance of her eyes that conveyed to him the idea that her heart longed for another resting-place. Let it be what it might, the spark was struck, the train was fired, and, like a flash, his anger was ablaze.

He sprang to his feet, his eyes flashed with rage, his lips trembled with passion. One word, only one word, he uttered, a deep, stern, unanswerable "Go!" and with rigid, upright figure he stood, his arm extended and his hand pointing out into the fast-gathering darkness.

"Go!"

And she, Bessie, the gentle, uncomplaining, ever-obedient Bessie, hardly yet recovered from the shock his sudden uprise had given her, with slow, lingering steps, cowed and shrinking, trembling and dazed, in ignorance of what had caused offense, with eyes that each moment turned in mute appeal, and longing looks of prayerful petitions for forgiveness, she went forth.

GLOOM SAT HEAVY ON HIS BROW.

Out and away into the gloom, into the blackness of night that was as midday to the ebon that closed in upon her soul. He, the tyrant, still burning with the fire of unbridled wrath, watched her, with seeming unconcern, even with seeming pleasure, until no slightest semblance of her beautiful form was discernible; then with swift, long strides he turned and entered the house, sought his lonely chamber and cast himself upon his bed.

Long, long, were the hours during which he vainly sought to find oblivion in sleep. That precious gift came not to carry him into the land of forgetfulness. Instead, beating upon his brain and heart, there came the loud knockings of compunction and self-upbraiding for the vile, unmanly act into which he had suffered himself to be betrayed.

When, worn with tossing, he finally drifted into the realm of dreams, no bright visions refreshed him; the haunting spirit of unrest was still in possession and he groaned in his sleep.

The gray, cold shafts of dawning morn that darted through the lattice of his windows reached his wide-open eyes as he lay, all unrefreshed by the fitful slumber, struggling with the pride that fought against the claims of his awakened conscience.

He could recall that even to his dulled senses the beating of rain and rushing sounds of winds had told of a suddenly risen, fierce, wild storm that had swirled through the night-hours.

He forced himself to reject the thought that mayhap Bessie had wandered into the unsheltered open, heedless of a place of rest, fearing or not caring to return to the home from which she had been so harshly driven, refusing to occupy any of the many places awaiting her for repose, if banished from the chamber of her lord. He argued that of a certainty she had hidden her grief in some distant apartment of the great mansion.

But rest he could not; hastily arising at last he donned the clothing he had cast from him on retiring and with stealthy steps searched through his silent home.

Bessie was not there.

Quickening his steps he descended the broad staircase, snatched a hat from the deer-antlers in the hall and wandered out among the still dripping trees.

Broken branches, great limbs rudely wrenched from lordly stems, bestrewed his path, giving mute testimony of the furious elements that had raged through the darkness.

On and on he wandered, instinctively following the path so often marked by the careless tread of his feet with dear Bessie close by his side. His eyes wandered restlessly.

What sound was that? A groan! It was not a cry, 'twas too faint to be called by that name; it was a murmur of distress, a moan of pain, as of one stricken to death—and that death near, very near at hand.

A terrible, sickening fear struck like a dagger-thrust through Thurlow's heart. The agony of one moment of that time was punishment indeed for his ill doing.

Two bounds brought him close to the underbrush that surrounded a long-unused summer house. Parting the matted branches he peered through the semi-darkness caused by the wild shrubbery and overgrown trees, and he saw—!

One glance! but it was enough. Through his misery he recognized how powerless he was to save, even to relieve, and he recoiled even from the thought of meeting once more those terribly beautiful eyes.

"HURRY TO THE OLD SUMMER HOUSE."

With speed of the wind he hurried back, the servants were just beginning their daily round of duty. His quick, sharp commands at once brought the most reliable of the men before him.

Disguising with an effort the pain that throbbed within him, to all appearances the cool, wise master, he gave his orders.

"James, William, Joe; take axes with you and hurry to the old summer house. Bessie," and as he uttered the familiar name of his dear one, his voice seemed tender, "Bessie was wandering there in the storm last night, the two old magnolia trees were blown down and she is crushed beneath them."

He paused; the men, with sorrow-stricken faces, looked their intense grief, but too well knew the man to offer words of consolation.

A moment, and they were about to hasten on their errand of mercy.

Thurlow stopped them. "One of you," he said, "take a gun with you; load with ball. She is injured beyond help; it will be an act of mercy to put her at once out of her misery. Do not touch her head; shoot her through the heart; I want to have her stuffed."

Then he turned his back on them and strode away to his lonely, lonely home.

She, Bessie, was the prize pointer dog of the Southern States, and had cost Tom Thurlow nine hundred dollars to import.

Hence this anguish! hence these tears!

FISHING ON THE PIER.

Thousands of People on the Piers—Superstitions of Anglers—How and What the Perch Bites—The Crab as Bait and Its Peculiarities—Winter Fishing—Origin of the Perch in the Lakes—Bass and Perch Compared—Eels in Disgrace.

[Special Chicago Correspondence.]

There are thousands of little piers along Lake Michigan which were built for breakwaters for the protection of the land. Whatever the original intention of the builders, these piers have been generally monopolized by fishermen and fisherwomen who love the perch. The most conspicuous fishing-ground, of course, is the Government breakwater at Chicago, and on many a day it presents a double broadside of people angling for his perchship. The cutting about the Government pier is a convenient haunt for this fish. At either end of it are channels of moving water. The bottom is sandy and clean and the perch loves cleanliness and pure water. Food for the perch on such grounds is naturally plentiful, as it is favorable for the minnows and fry of many species of fish of which the perch is particularly fond. But as it may seem, the perch makes no distinction, and after leaving its young fry to their fate, eats them with the same relish as it does the young of any other species. The barbarian is not the only cannibal; the principle is everywhere prevalent that big fish eat the little ones.

It is strange how the stuff and nonsense of the fishermen who sell poles and sell minnows on the pier is generally believed. These weather-beaten mariners assure us that the direction of the wind determines whether perch will or will not bite. For instance, if the wind is blowing from the southeast or east we are told that the perch will not bite. When asked for a reason, the Waltonian replies that either there is none or else he will say that the perch is an eccentric animal, and has chronic objections to such winds. The fact is, the perch have to eat every day, no matter where the wind comes from. If the wind blows from either of the directions mentioned the water is roiled on this side of the lake and the perch goes across or out into the clear water. As has been stated, he is a cleanly fish and will not tolerate any thing but pure water. The direction of the wind therefore only determines whether he will bite or not in the sense that it indicates the condition of the water. There were less perch caught last season than any other for years, and again the old mariner on the pier put on a gloomy face and repeated the worn-out talk to the effect that the fish had been caught out by the overplus of anglers and had no chance to propagate.

It is true that comparatively few perch were caught last summer from the Government pier. This was simply because east and southeast winds prevailed, driving the fish into the pure water across the lake. At St. Joseph perch appeared by the million, and the market there was glutted with them.

The perch is not a difficult animal to lure with the hook. His nature is trusting, and he believes every thing and every body honest. All of his experiences on this continent since the advent of the white man have availed him nothing. He nibbles the hook with the same belief in its virtue as his ancestors did four hundred years ago.

THE LONE FISHERMAN.

He acquires no hereditary warnings or suspicions. This may be due to the fact that he propagates so rapidly that nature has no time to adapt him to environment and the rapid progress of the age. Go over to the pier, rent a pole for a dime of any one of the numerous furnishers there, buy a dozen minnows for another dime, and, if the water is clear, I'll warrant a perch will bite before you are ready, no matter how conspicuously the hook shows.

The perch, among other things, is lazy. He would rather take the poor little minnow writhing in death agonies on your hook than chase the swarm of free ones which may be hovering all around him. The furnisher, if you ask him, will bait your hook. He will take a minnow and run a hook through it just above the tail. Then he will run it through again from the other side just below the gills. The minnow is then fast, but the hook shows in two places. If you were angling for black bass in the rapids of some river this would never do. You would have to remove the sinker so that the minnow could swim about and attract attention. In order to convince the bass that there was a square deal and no trap and to enable the minnow to live and swim, you insert the hook through the tip of his bills, running it through his lower bill and out through the upper one. Then the minnow would have full use of his body and tail to swim with. You have to cast him gently so as not to kill him. If he died you would have to put on a live and lively one. The bass will not take a dead minnow. Not so with the perch. He will take a minnow dead or alive, swimming or helpless, and ask no questions.

The bait for the perch is usually a matter of indifference. When minnows are plenty it is better to bait with them. Grasshoppers, worms, fresh meat, etc., are good bait for them. There is some question, however, on the subject of crabs. The old fishermen claim that the perch will not take crabs, that they are only good for "sheepsheads," and this specie in fresh water are not good to eat. Crabs abound by the millions among the miles of rocks forming the Government piers. How they got there is said to be a question, but is it one. They crowd fearlessly all over the bottom of the lake in reasonably shallow water. They are partial to rocks, underneath which they live and breed. When the rocks were placed in the lake to make breakwaters the crabs were not long in finding it out. They doubtless migrated there in numbers and bred fearfully and wonderfully underneath the great blocks of granite. They have a friendly habit of crawling up to the surface for food of any kind which may fall in. When any thing falls in the water they jump out from their hiding-places and grasp it in their tentacles. To catch crabs, all one has to do is to lower the fish-line on which a minnow or other bait is placed into the shallow water which percolates among the rocks of the piers.

A crab will grab the bait in his claws and absolutely hang on while you draw up the line. Whatever the fishermen may say these fellows make good bait for perch. With all their limbs on the perch are afraid of the crabs, as their squeeze of the interior of the fish is not desirable. Then they have a way of extending their tentacles so that only a large-mouthed fish like the sheepshead can swallow them. They have a way also of escaping under rocks and in the sands which disgusts the lazy perch. Now, to make bait of them, pull out the tentacles, and when the perch sees the enemy helpless he will grab and swallow him with a vengeance.

Doubtless the best perch fishing along these shores might be had in winter. There is a peculiar state of things here at that season. When the ice covers the lake its great pressure necessarily forces the air out of the water to a large extent. Fishes are in need of air as much as mankind is of water. If one could look into an air hole in winter he would see thousands of fishes near the surface acting as if they were having a great battle to breathe. They are.

They have come up to the surface for air. If it were possible to drop a hook and line into an air hole the fish would bite with great rapidity.

BUYING MINNOWS.

It is a well-known fact that if a hole is cut in the ice, fishes will come to the surface, and if it should thunder and lightning, will jump out on the ice. This phenomenon has been witnessed on the St. Lawrence river so often as to become an established fact in science. The fishermen of the upper lakes and the straits take advantage of this trait of the fish to spear them all winter as they come up to the surface where holes have been cut through the ice. The moral is obvious. There can be no doubt that fine sport might be enjoyed along the piers here in winter wherever the water happens to be free.

The flesh of the perch here is hard and well-flavored. In the rivers and still lakes at this time of year it usually contains grubs and parasites. Our perch is a bony fellow and that spoils any great demand for him. He has only one use, and that is for frying.

Some chefs know how to extract the skeleton and make a very edible dish of him. The finest perch known is found in Lake St. Clair. The variety found there is much thicker than is found elsewhere, more rotund and the bands of yellow are of stronger color. But, strangely enough, the St. Clair perch has only a backbone, or vertebra, like the bull-head. When these fellows are fried the epicurean draws out the vertebrae and eats the delicious flesh without fear of swallowing a bone. How do you account for it? Why, the St. Clair perch climbed the Niagara Falls from the lower lakes, possibly, and lost those small bones which make his fellows in other regions a semi-nuisance. The Lake Michigan perch had another origin. He entered this lake from the Mississippi in prehistoric times, when the waters of Michigan swept out through South Chicago. He never exerted himself enough to lose any bones.

The United States Fish Commission has committed an error which, were it not for the high standing of that body, would be supposed to have emanated from the madhouse. Some years ago it placed 6,000,000 young eels in this lake, and perhaps millions more. The eel is an enemy of the perch, whitefish and other edible fishes, and are now vigorously engaged in their extermination. This same Fish Commission is an enemy of the eel weir and eel fishermen, and have destroyed by law the eel industries of the East. Why did it put the eels in this lake? They are now being drawn up in the nets of fishermen on the pier in the little nets lowered for minnows. What business have the eels in those little nets with the minnows? Why, the rascals have been feeding on the young fry. The Fish Commission obstinately maintains that the eels go to sea to spawn, then die, leaving their young to go up the rivers alone, to grow up, go down to spawn and die. Why did the Commissioners make this doctrine ridiculous by placing the eels in lakes where they can not get to the sea to breed, where they must stay and eat up the other fishes? The eel's voracious and ravenous.

He catches the female perch, whitefish and other innocent species, runs his sharp snout through their sides and sucks out the thousands of little eggs within, leaving the victim dead and useless. These young eels of several years ago are now two and three feet long. They have spread all over the lake and carried devastation and death with them.

USING A THROW LINE.

They can not propagate, according to the United States Fish Commission, and there are not enough of them to catch with profit by the fishermen. But there are enough to destroy the lake fisheries in time. This is the Commission, by the way, which the people employ for the purpose of building up our fisheries and stocking the waters with edible and marketable fishes, not their enemies. If I was absolutely certain that there was one eel about the pier, I should consider it the proper thing to do to throw down my pole and leave. Perch are not partial to the company of eels, and would certainly get out of their vicinity.

STREET-CAR SPOTTERS.

How Street Railway Companies Keep Tab on Their Employes.

In the police court the other day, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer, a young man giving an assumed name was arrested on a charge of violating the sidewalk ordinance. He was fined the costs, as it was learned during the hearing that he is employed by two or three of the street railway companies here as a "spotter." The hatred displayed by street-car conductors and drivers for these monitors in their affairs needs little provocation, and as a rule the operators of the cars get to know these men in time, and are certainly well posted regarding their movements.

The "spotter" who appeared in the police court carried a bunch of the blanks furnished by the street railway companies for his use, and their make-up is ingenious as regards details. The spaces to be filled in the blank report call for the day of the week, month and year, and the exact time of the day at which a car is boarded. The direction in which a car is going and the name of the cross street where the car is met, together with the number of the conductor and register, is also demanded. Then follows the details regarding the number of fares recorded and a space for the "spotter" to tell of any nickels that may be "knocked down." The report goes further, and asks for answers to such questions as these: "Was the conductor polite? Was the conductor careless? Was he watchful as to assisting ladies and children on and off the car? Was he engaged in loud talk with any one on the car? Was the driver careful with his team?"

Simple reference to the term "spotter" is sufficient to bring on a storm of indignation from any or all of the employes of street railways. "Every time I hear of one of those fellows," said a St. Clair street driver, "I am reminded of what Superintendent Bowers, of this road, who is now dead, said of that badge of dishonesty, the bell punch, when it was first introduced. He refused to brand his conductors with them, and declared that the man who was not smart enough to beat them was not capable of running a car. I could point out "spotters," any number of them, who are laughed at by the men of this road. I remember when the work was mostly done by women. One of them would get on the car, open a book, and pretend to be reading it, while she turned over a leaf to correspond with each of the passengers. That was the poorest game of all, but the schemes resorted to now are just as bad. If a man is disposed to be dishonest and is not a fool he need never be caught. No man on earth can get on a crowded car, as they all are at some periods of the day, and keep an account of all the passengers. The conductor, who is bound to go through the crowd and collect fares, has to keep his eyes open, and at that often misses one or two.

REMEDY FOR THE WHITE GRUB.

The use of benzine has been found effectual in France in destroying the white grubs (the larvæ of the May or dor bug), which often do immense damage, especially in dry seasons, to lawns, strawberry plants, seedling plants and other nursery stock. Holes are made in the ground infested with the grubs with one of the sharp iron dibbles used sometimes in transplanting small plants, and the benzine is poured into them. Fifty grains of benzine are used to the square yard, and care is taken to insert it above the feeding-ground of the grubs. In an experiment recently made by one of the French forest officers and reported at a meeting of the National Agricultural Society, the grubs on twelve acres were destroyed at a cost of three dollars and twenty cents per acre.

AN ELECTRIC CLOCK.

A great deal of interest has been created in France by the novel form and operation of an electric clock, recently introduced, the peculiarity in the construction of which consists in the presence of two kinds of batteries, one a wet zinc-iron element and the other a dry zinc-iron element. The former consists of an iron bottle five and one-half inches high by three and one-half inches in diameter, which forms one electrode; the other electrode is a zinc rod passing through an India-rubber stopper into the center of the bottle, this being filled with caustic potash and oxide of mercury. There is no diaphragm, and the zinc is gradually consumed, while the oxide of mercury is reduced; the e. m. f. is 1.3 volts, and the internal resistance is .3 of an ohm. These clocks receive an impulse forty times a minute, and exhibit no weakening of the power either in the dry or the wet cell. An easy calculation will show the interesting fact that the total number of electrical impulses exceeds twenty-one million per annum—certainly a most severe duty for any battery.

MICROBES DESTROYED BY STEAM.

The experiments of steam disinfection, recently tried in Jacksonville, have proved that the steaming process is thoroughly efficacious in destroying microbes in general, and also the yellow fever microbes. Active germs placed by Dr. Gibier in a gelatine filled glass tube germinated, showing unmistakable life and activity. Microbes subjected to the steaming process, though for only ten minutes, and under very imperfect conditions, were afterward subjected to the same cultivation, but remained entirely inert.

NEPTUNE'S SATELLITES.

M. Tisserand has presented a report to the Paris Academy of Sciences concerning some remarkable observations of the satellites of the planet Neptune, which was discovered in 1847. The angle which the plane of the orbit of this satellite made at that date with the ecliptic was about thirty degrees, but this angle has now increased by at least six degrees. The satellite moves around its principal in an opposite direction to that usually followed by other satellites, so that a question might be raised whether in the course of time this variation in the inclination of the plane of its orbit might not end in its movement around its principal becoming normal. M. Tisserand showed that this variation of inclination was due to the oblate or flattened condition of Neptune at its poles, and that it will complete its limit within a period of five hundred years, at the end of which time it will be as it was in 1847.

VARIOUS LOCATIONS OF THE CAPITAL.

The Capital of the United States has been located at different times at the following places: At Philadelphia from September 5, 1774, until December, 1776; at Baltimore from December 20, 1776, to March, 1777; at Philadelphia from March 4, 1777, to September, 1777; at Lancaster, Pa., from September 27, 1777, to September 30, 1777; at York, Pa., from September 30, 1777, to July, 1778; at Philadelphia from July 2, 1778, to June 30, 1783; at Princeton, N. J., June 30, 1783, to November 20, 1783; Annapolis, Md., November 26, 1783, to November 30, 1784; Trenton from November, 1784, to January, 1785; New York from January 11, 1785, to 1790; then the seat of Government was removed to Philadelphia, where it remained until 1800, since which time it has been at Washington.

KEEN SENSE OF PRESSURE.

The relative sensibility to pressure of different parts of the body is ascertained by placing weights of the same size, but of different amounts, upon the skin. By this means it has been found that the parts which have the keenest sense of pressure are generally those in which sensibility to touch is most developed. The smallest weight which can be perceived is three one hundredths of a grain, and this is recognized by the skin of the forehead, the temples, the back of the hand and the forearm. The tips of the fingers can perceive a weight of three-thirtieths of a grain, the chin and the nose one of three-fourths of a grain, while the finger nails do not notice one weighing less than fifteen grains. Considerable pressure may be exerted without its being perceived, if it is uniform. Thus when the hand is plunged into mercury the increased pressure is only at the line corresponding with the surface of the fluid.

SMOKELESS GUNPOWDER.

The British Government has at last settled on a white, almost smokeless, powder for use in firearms. The importance of this statement is evident in view of the fact that until the powder had been decided upon it was impossible to ascertain accurately the length of the cartridge, and, consequently, the proportions of the coming weapon. There is, therefore, no longer any obstacle in the manufacture of the new magazine rifles, the production of which will make rapid progress after the new year. The powder gives out a very small report—not much greater than that of an air gun.

FANS FOR MOVING VEHICLES.

A fan for cars and other moving vehicles is a most admirable invention. To one of the wheels of the vehicle a pulley is attached by a belt to a vertical shaft, having suitable bearings on one end of the car, adapted to be clutched and unclutched from another shaft extending the length of the car. The fan-shafts are across the car, and are operated by belts or cords from the first, keeping fans along the top of the car in vigorous motion, causing a constant circulation of air.

A MAGICIAN'S STORY.

United States Minister Moran Proves Himself a Veritable Jonah.

Kellar, the magician, has pretty thoroughly covered the globe in his travels, and has come out safe and sound, says a writer in the New York Mail. He says he never met with but one accident in all his wanderings, but that one experience was queer enough, he thinks, to make up for the lack of many others. He tells the story in this way:

"It was something like ten or twelve years ago that I left Lisbon, Portugal, one fine summer morning on a steamer bound for Southampton. The steamer was one of the staunchest on the line, the weather was particularly pleasant, and every body was figuring on a speedy and enjoyable run. Before we had been out of Lisbon many hours I found that Benjamin Moran, the United States Minister to Portugal, was a passenger on the steamer. Mr. Moran introduced himself to me, and on the strength of our both being Americans and in the company of a lot of Portuguese and foreigners we speedily struck up an acquaintance. After chatting on various subjects and exchanging experiences, we fell to incidentally talking about the prospective voyage. I said something about the pleasant trip I expected, but Moran laughingly checked me with the words: 'Mr. Kellar, we are doomed to meet with an accident.' Though he said it with a smile, there was a trace of seriousness in his manner, and I asked him what he meant. He replied that he had never made a single trip, by rail or water, that he could remember without meeting with some unexpected delay or accident. Some of the machinery in the locomotive had broken down, or the train had been derailed, or somebody had been run over, or the ship's shaft had broken, or the vessel had been wrecked. 'I am a veritable Jonah,' he added, with a laugh, 'and just as sure as you and I are talking here on this deck, this ship will meet with an accident and my record will stand unbroken.' I tried to laugh away this superstition, but he wouldn't have it, and persisted in his alarming prophecy. You may not believe what I tell you, but on my honor, the sky clouded up within three hours after my conversation with Mr. Moran, a fog spread over the water and early in the evening, the steamer ran her nose on a ledge of rocks and hung fast. She hung there with her bow in the air just long enough for the passengers to clamber down on to the reef, and then with a lurch backwards she ran off the rocks and sank in more than one hundred fathoms of water. We had a tough time of it that night on the rocks, but the next morning the weather cleared and we were picked up by a passing steamer. Nobody was injured, but ever since that trip I have always had a dislike for traveling with a Jonah."

DON'T KISS BABY.

It Isn't Your Duty and You Really Should Not Do It.

There isn't a bachelor living that will not be pleased when he reads this, a young mother's contribution to the Philadelphia Press: "A Western paper once suggested that an appropriate placard to hang around baby's neck might read: 'Please don't kiss this baby,' and since my own little one suffered a winter's siege with whooping cough contracted through a careless kiss I have been disposed to advance the idea or its equivalent. There seems to be a general notion that babies, and in fact all small children, are public property, to be kissed at will by friends or strangers, and while some affectionate natures may respond willingly, there are many others who would much prefer being let alone in this respect.

"I know it is the case with my two little girls, one of whom possesses an exceedingly loving disposition; but outside of the immediate family she will not suffer her lips to be touched, though she will allow a kiss upon cheek or forehead from favorite friends. Her more reticent sister showed also a strong aversion to being kissed, and if forced to submit did so with such a bad grace that I was obliged to take matters into my own hands and beg visitors to excuse her. She would shake hands quite readily, and though I am called 'cranky' I still think my plan a good one, and that indiscriminate kissing can scarcely be too strongly condemned. A foul breath is as repugnant to a child as to a grown person; sore throats are often contagious, and many diseases are contracted by contact with the lips."

ON MARRIAGE VOWS.

An English View Which Seems to Reflect Public Opinion.

It is said by some moralists that, as marriage is "for better or worse," it is the duty of the wife to remain with her husband, no matter how bad he may be, and that the husband must also condone the errors of the most intemperate wife, says the London Standard. By upholding this indissolubility of marriage we offer, it is argued, a great inducement to the wife to reclaim her husband, if possible, and to the man to attempt the reformation of the woman's habits and life. There is something in this plea, but it would have more absolute force if marriage concerned only the husband and wife. We have, however, to take the children into consideration. In the first place, they have before their eyes the dreadful example of a drunken father or a debased mother. Secondly, we must regard the question of heredity. Mrs. Fawcett has written a story in which she suggests, as a difficult question, the duty of a wife who discovers only after marriage that her husband is not only a drunkard himself, but the son and grandson of habitual sots. She thinks with horror that if she continues to live with him, she may become the mother of a son who, as he grows up to manhood, will show, to her agony, all the symptoms of the hereditary mania. She therefore leaves him. It will thus be seen that the question is not settled, even if the partner of the offender resolves to endure personally all the consequences of the choice. He or she has to consider others as well. We do not perceive why the Legislature could not devise a short act, giving to the wife or husband of a habitual drunkard the right to separate under, of course, very strict conditions. The habitual character of the offense must be clearly proved; the unfitness of the man or woman to have the custody of the children, if any, must be established; and every care should be taken that the release is not a relief from the expense of maintenance nor any dissolution of the marriage itself. We believe that it would be quite sufficient to grant a simple separation, not allowing either party to marry again. In this way the remedy would offer no temptation to either side. On the contrary, the existence of such a means of redress would arm the sober husband or sober wife with a powerful means of appeal. A woman who, in spite of remonstrances, persisted in drink, could be clearly told of the probable consequences of continued indulgence, might thus be arrested early in the downward course. The bill must, of course, be absolutely applicable to the sexes, and the same remedy to women as to men. No doubt there will be both husbands and wives unwilling to call its provisions into active force. There are forbearing men and forgiving women who would prefer to endure all wrongs rather than tell the story in a public court. Yet even for them it will be well to know that redress is within their grasp. Their sufferings will be all the more tolerable when they feel they are voluntary, and that the law will assist them if they elected to appeal to it. A new enactment of the kind, however, would bring a welcome relief to thousands of humbler homes.

The Wastes of Cooking.

America wastes enough yearly to feed the thousands who are now said to be out of employment. The time may yet come when it shall be considered practical somewhere in the course of the education which a State gives to the people to teach girls how to extract the greatest amount of nutriment from the common material of food, and a careful statistician justly remarks that "whoever can teach the masses of the people how to get five cents' worth a day more comfort or force out of the food which each one consumes, will add to their productive power what would be equal to one thousand million dollars a year in value."

A Poetic Language.

The language of the Finns is peculiarly adapted to poetic form. The flexibility of its construction, the variety and picturesqueness of its expressions, the abundance and originality of its figures, all tend to make it the fit vehicle of that poetic inspiration which the Finn receives from his environment—the long, dark stretches of birch and pine forest, wreathed with garlands and fringes of lichens, which in this northern climate are particularly beautiful, and whose somber shadows form a telling background for the leaping cascades and waterfalls, clad in their white mantle of foam.

Testing a Diamond.

It doesn't require an expert to tell whether a diamond is genuine or not. The test is very simple and can be made in any place, and in a moment. All you need is a piece of paper and a lead pencil. With the latter make a small dot on the paper, then look at it through the diamond. If you can see but one dot you can depend upon it that the stone is genuine, but if the mark is scattered or shows more than one, you will be perfectly safe in refusing to pay ten cents for a stone that may be offered you at $500.

How to Cut a Bottle.

A simple method of accurately cutting a bottle is to place it upon some level foundation and fill it with linseed oil to the point at which you desire the line of separation to occur. Then take an iron rod of as great a diameter as will pass into the bottle, make it almost white-hot and dip it into the oil. After the lapse of a few moments a sharp crack is heard, and the bottle is found to be as neatly cut as if with a diamond. If the bottle be very thick, and the cracking sound not heard in a few moments, a little cold water thrown on the outside will accomplish the desired result.

STARTLING IMPUTATIONS.

Every tax-payer should read the communication in another column, in relation to the methods already adopted by the Common Council towards the securing of a system of water works for this city. It is a startling arraignment by a correspondent who knows what he is talking about.

We are told the Council has selected a consulting engineer of not the slightest experience—the possessor of theories only—and that the contractor will be called on to furnish the brains and plans. Many fallacies of the printed specifications are pointed out, that betray short-sightedness and exhibit ignorance of customs. Will contractors of experience be frightened away by our Councilmen of theory only?

TAXATION.

The only sound and justifiable system of taxation, either directly or indirectly levied, under free representative institutions, is the raising of sufficient financial means to meet the legitimate requirements of government, whether National, State, Municipal, County or Township, honestly administered for the general public benefit, but not for the special interests of any privileged class or moneyed combination, or species of political jobbery.

That is honest taxation.

To that no right-minded taxpayer does or will demur, because it is essential to the maintenance of good government, which means both public and individual prosperity.

But when taxation is imposed for different purposes, as for instance, among others—

The accumulation of a needless surplus of funds in the Treasury, to act as a constant incentive for extravagant and corrupt Congressional appropriations, to say naught of the raid thereby made upon the pockets of the people.

The paying of tariff bounties, under the false name of protection, to enable avarice to grow rich and richer at the expense of the toiling industrial masses, and for Trusts and Monopolies to continue and extend their mercenary sway in defiance of popular rights.

It is time for the people to carefully investigate and truthfully ascertain where goes the tax money, how it is used, and what amount of real value they derive from it.

Let that be accomplished, and beyond question numerous channels of prodigal waste would be effectually filled up.

We believe in public improvements of required and permanent utility, but not in spendthrift theories.

We cheerfully advocate all taxation [for] the public service, and bona-fide protection of the people, the poor equally with the rich, demand, but not a dime for tribute or wanton expenditure.

THOSE DAYTON WATER WORKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—In a late issue of your journal a former resident of Dayton, Ohio, calls attention to the water works system of that city, which you seem to think is just "the kind of water works that Plainfield wants." The undersigned in a communication to you some weeks since alluded to the uncertainty of obtaining a sufficient and permanent supply of pure and wholesome water here by boring for it, and the remarks were based upon the investigations and assertions of competent engineers which this city has employed at various times. The former resident of Dayton likens that place to this city in many respects. Now let us see whether the citizens of Plainfield are willing to indulge a similar experience to obtain a water supply.

The Dayton works, built by the city, were begun in 1869 and thought to be completed in 1870. The supply was from a well which yielded 500,000 gallons daily. This quantity was found to be inadequate, and in 1873 pipes were laid to the Mad River and an additional supply was taken from that point. It was necessary to filter the water, and even then it was of a brownish color and had a strong taste and odor. In 1875-76, a second well was dug, which gave 500,000 gallons a day, but still recourse to the river was necessary. In 1887, according to the report of the Water Commissioners of the City of Dayton, the inhabitants became seriously alarmed respecting the early probable failure of the water supply, and it was subsequently determined to bore thirty (30) wells for water, which was accordingly done. Now the city seems to have a sufficient supply, at least for the present, but a reference to the report mentioned above will suggest that perhaps the river will have to be resorted to again in the not far distant future.

This brings to mind what has been previously noted by the writer, namely: that there is no certainty where the expenditure of funds will end when once begun if the City of Plainfield determines to construct its own works. The first cost of the Dayton works was comparatively small, while today it figures a million dollars and the city is still somewhat in doubt as to how long the water is to last! Oh, no, Plainfield would scarcely like to be similarly situated.

In another journal appeared a notice about the time of the Dayton resident's article in your columns. It is in the main devoted to reiterating the old statements of uninformed people respecting the purity of Plainfield water. Is it not singular that after former Councils have received time and time again that the health of the city demands a different supply of water from that now in use; that physicians, singly and in a body, have insisted upon the same thing, and that engineers have been employed for the future safety of the public health at a large expense, that a man can be found who assumes to air his lack of information on this subject in the columns of a newspaper?

Without wishing to be Rudolph Hering's sponsor, any number of professional people are willing to testify to his integrity as a man, and his ability and prominence as a hydraulic engineer. And no objection can legitimately be raised to his desire to obtain a cool little $10,000 or $20,000 for less than one year's work. The complaint rather should be against the Council, and it might be insisted that this little private "snap" should be open to bidders the same as the water franchise.

OBSERVER.

—The Plainfield Reform Club will have their regular excursion to Rockaway Beach, Thursday, the 8th of August. The Grand Republic is chartered to carry the excursionists to and from the Beach. The Committee in charge have been making all arrangements for the pleasure of their numerous friends, and those going on this excursion are sure to have a good day's pleasure, including a fine sail on the Atlantic.

AN ALARMING ARRANGEMENT.

The Council Appoint or Selecting a Theoretical Consulting Engineer of no Experience, and of Calling Upon the Contractors to Furnish Brains and Plans for Him—Two Fallacies of the "Specifications."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—It was confidently expected that when Plainfield was ready for water works, our city fathers would take advantage of the experience of other cities in the matters of obtaining advice and method of reaching results.

As for advice, it was fair to suppose that some engineer of large experience and established reputation in this specialty, would be sought; so far from this being the case, however, the Manual of American Water Works for 1888 shows that the consulting engineer selected, has not designed a single system of water works in this country. We are therefore to have the benefit of the theories of a theory engineer, though certainly an eminent one. Is it in consequence of this choice, that the contractors (and eventually the tax-payers) are requested to pay 4 per cent of the entire cost of the works to cover the expenses of engineering supervision?

The contractor is to provide the engineer's brains by furnishing plans for dams, pipe distribution, buildings and reservoirs; he is to take all chances of obtaining a sufficient supply from driven wells (a pure gamble), and also allow the engineer to dictate the location of wells and reservoirs, and so be at the mercy of the land owners.

For a novel business proposition, that part of the specifications requiring bidders to keep an exact account of cost of work, and state the profit expected, should take a high rank; is this an example of the way our city fathers transact their own business? An honest man would keep a strict account, but how absurd to expect that such contractors as would be most likely to bid on such specifications as these, would not find it convenient to pad his items to a goodly total!

Why is the privilege of purchase asked, when an election would be necessary to give the Council the right? Some of the contractors would know of the opposition to bonding the city, and would bid accordingly.

What right has the Council to invite bidders to take water from the Passaic River, without first informing them that no one can pump a gallon of water until the right is first purchased from sundry riparian owners? Either an expensive proceeding, as these owners consider their rights of immense value.

The specifications demand that the foundations of buildings, engines and boilers must, in the opinion of the Engineer of the city, be of sufficient depth and stability"—a glittering generality, but well enough if the city were building the works; a private company would certainly find it to its own interest to make all the foundations of unquestionable stability.

To what use is an office at the engine house, a mile or two out of town, to be applied? Is it for the engineer to write his reports, or for the Council to use as a lunch room? or perchance for a gallery of portraits of the original dreamers of Plainfield water works?

The following points in the specifications also call for remark: the reservoir slopes are to be one and one-half to one, inside and out; with rare exceptions, an outside slope of two to one is considered by engineers steep enough.

The arrangement of wells is not such as would recommend itself to a hydraulic engineer, and prevents the contractor from obtaining vastly better results by well known methods in common use.

All pipes are required to be tested to a pressure of 300 pounds per square inch, but are only required to stand 125 pounds after laying; here is a chance to put in weak specials and slight depth of lead in the joints.

The hydrants are to have bells for four-inch pipe, so all the advantage of having six-inch mains is lost.

The mains are only laid with three and one-half feet cover; this will allow all dead ends and hydrant connections to freeze.

The contractor, contrary to all usage, is required to lay service pipes to the curb line free of cost, thus raising the cost of works to those not using the water; this exhibits an ignorance of custom.

The contractor is also expected to pay all expenses incurred in making tests of material and workmanship as the work proceeds, and as the engineer may require. Imagine being called on to pay for a test of the tensile strength of iron used in pipe—an apparatus costing $10,000; another for testing cement, costing $1,500; one for the crushing strength of brick and stone, $2,500, etc., etc. These absurd demands frighten contractors of experience when dealing with men of theory only.

The trenches can only be opened as far in advance as the engineer may permit; when an energetic contractor can be so checked as to lay but 300 feet of pipe in a day instead of 3,000.

The contractor is left to name the tests he is willing to submit the works to, instead of the engineer specifying the number of streams that should be thrown to a certain height for a given number of hours. Here experience is invaluable.

Street watering is included in the free list; a most unusual demand and a serious loss of income to either the city or a private company. This expense should not be levied on the hydrant rental, as it would bring an additional burden on the small tax-payers not sharing in the full benefit.

There are several other points in the specifications which deserve attention, but I have already taken too much of your valuable space.

CRITIC.

Postmaster Cortell Only Following the Usual Custom.

(From the New Brunswick Home News.)

The villagers of New Market are in daily fear that, because a new Republican postmaster has changed the site of their post office, the lives of some of their number will be lost. Not that bloodshed is expected from a riot caused by the new order of things, although some of the citizens are at fever heat, but the innovation compels every resident of the place to cross and recross the Lehigh Valley railroad track in order to fetch his mail. The railroad makes a sweeping curve around the village, and trains whizzing along at a high rate of speed cannot be seen by any one on the track until within a short distance. Neither gates nor flagmen protect the crossings.

When A. S. Cortell was appointed Postmaster a month or two ago, he announced his intention of removing the post office from the village proper to the North side of and within fifty feet of the railroad. At once strong objection was raised, but he effected the change and it has continued though several appeals have been made to the authorities at Washington to have the office restored to the South side of the track. The reason for the change was that the new Postmaster's store was on the North side, and that it suited him better to move the post office than to move the store. His, however, is the only place of business not on the South side, where nearly eight-tenths of the people dwell. Mr. Cortell and his friends claim that he is only following the usual custom of village postmasters in establishing the post office in his own store.

—The date for the M. E. church excursion to Ocean Grove and Asbury Park, is Friday, July 19.

Bowling at Dunellen.

A number of match games were played Saturday on the Dunellen bowling green. In one game, Messrs Willis, captain; Liebold, Weigel and Betts, the team that defeated the Scotch four of Newark, were matched against Messrs Scheffin, captain; Boorman, Pick and Pettit. The former won two games out of three.

In another game a team captained by Louis Powelson defeated one captained by J. E. Johnson.

Another Trial Trip for Gately.

Saturday on the home grounds, the Crescents will play the far famed O. N. T's—the nine that is picked from the 5,000 employees of the Clark spool-cotton factories in Newark.

It will probably be the hardest struggle of the season for Plainfield. The home team will be: Cadmus, c; Gately, p; McMurray, 1b; Condon, 2d; Lee, 3b; Smock, ss; Demarest, cf; McLaughlin, lf; Townley, rf.

A Gentleman Charged With Crime.

George E. Goodfellow was arrested at the station by Special Officer Stephen B. Hope, about seven o'clock evening July 4, and arraigned before Justice V. W. Nash, charged with crime. The complainant is a young woman who is at present stopping at Bloomsbury. The defendant was obliged to furnish $250 bail for his appearance at the trial on a date fixed by the Justice.

Goodfellow was arrested in Philadelphia on April 7th last, and released on his own recognizance, but he failed to materialize when the time came for a hearing. Officer Hope has been looking for his man for the past three months, and nabbed him at the depot above evening, as he was about to take passage on a train for Newark, where he is now employed.

Piano Recital.

The pupils of Miss Alice Smith gave a piano recital at the rooms of the W. C. T. U., No. 73 West Front street, Monday, beginning at eight o'clock. The scholars performed well, and showed marked improvement under the efficient tutorship of Miss Smith, who has also so long and faithfully presided at the organ, at the Sunday evening meetings of the Reform Club.

The following are the pupils of Miss Smith, those marked with a (*) taking part in the exercises of last evening: *Mrs. O'Reily, Mrs. Thatcher, *Miss Allie Quinn, *Miss Lizzie Burns, *Miss Sadie Addis, *Miss Persie Emmons, Miss Laura Coddington, *Miss Josie Clarkson, Miss Williams, Miss Smith, *Miss Kittie Quinn, *Miss Annie Marshall, *Miss Mabel Mitchel, Miss Mary Gloss, Miss Carrie Dunham.

KILLED BY A REAPER.

Mr. Smith Scudder, a well known farmer, residing on the Rahway road, about a half mile East of the Fanwood station, was killed by a reaping machine while returning from work about half-past eight o'clock, Monday evening.

Mr. Scudder had been in the field, reaping, during the afternoon, and in order to complete his day's labor he worked later than usual. He left the field about 8:30 o'clock and started for the barn, stopping on the way to put up the bars. While thus engaged the horses started off at a lively gait, and Mr. Scudder started in pursuit, overtaking the runaway team. In some unexplained manner he stumbled and fell on the teeth of the machine, and was dragged fully 150 yards, to a point where he was found lying unconscious soon afterward.

When picked up Mr. Scudder's right side was found to be literally cut to pieces, presenting a sickening sight. He was carried into the house, where he died an hour or so later.

The deceased leaves a widow, five daughters, one married, and one son. The widow of the deceased is a cousin of Mrs. Geo. W. Force of this city.

"The Press is no Squealer."

(From the Elizabeth Journal.)

There seem to be two different kinds of Democracy just now, as judged by the views expressed by two Democratic papers on the subject of removal from office. One is the squealing kind, ably represented by the Newark Journal, which thinks that the Republicans are trying to hound Democratic postmaster Fiedler out of the Newark office before his term expires. It says:

> There are Republican jackals in this town who propose to do it, and to seize the bones of patronage which they are hungrily eyeing through the postoffice windows.

The other kind is represented by the Plainfield PRESS. Some squealing Democrat of Westfield sent an anonymous communication to the PRESS, urging that the Democratic postmaster of that town should be continued in office. But the PRESS stands by its own Democratic doctrine, and says:

> At the last election the Democrats were beaten, and Mr. Clark should get out like a man when his time comes, with the rest of them. A Democratic administration should not leave a Republican in office, and vice versa.

As between these two kinds of Democrats it is not for us to say which is right, but there isn't any room for doubt as to which is the more manly. The PRESS is no squealer.

GONE ASTRAY.

The head clerk of one of the most prominent grocery establishments of this vicinity, suddenly left for parts unknown, Monday afternoon, after acknowledging embezzlement from the firm to the extent of about $50. The total amount of money thus misappropriated, however, it is thought, will reach over $1,000.

Suspicion has rested upon the accused for some time past, on account of his alleged extravagant habits, and Chief Carey's services were secured. By appointment the suspected man met the Chief Monday, and admitted having misappropriated goods and money to the extent of about $50. He was requested to furnish the days and dates upon which the goods were taken, and in order to do this he was allowed to return to the store. He did not go there, however, and the last seen of him he was on Somerset street, going in the direction of the mountain. Fears are expressed that in his absence he may have done himself bodily injury.

The accused was both well and favorably known in this city and in North Plainfield, and his friends are very much shocked to hear of his downfall. In conversation with the victimized firm this morning, a PRESS reporter learned that the accused was in the habit of taking out orders that were not accounted for, and also collected bills and appropriated the money to his own use. He has been connected with the store for the past sixteen years, during which time he has always been considered a trusty and efficient clerk. His extravagant dress and habits, however, have been matters of suspicion for some time.

The suspected man's first confession was to some of the officers of the M. E. church. Upon their close questioning, and promise to stand by him if he was penitent, he said that he had taken in all $50. He made the same statement to his employers, and afterwards to Corporation Counsel Marsh. The latter told the culprit that the matter was in the hands of Chief Carey, and advised going to him. He did so, expecting the affair could be quietly settled for $50, but when told by the Chief that the books for months back had been gone over and that $50 was not a moiety of the amount embezzled, the accused realized it was all up. Then it was he asked for two hours at the store to make out the items of what he had appropriated, but he used such time in getting away.

Reform Club Meeting.

There was a large attendance at the regular Reform Club meeting on Sunday evening. Freeholder Vanderbeek and his choir furnished excellent music for the occasion. Mr. Edwin H. Lewis conducted the devotional exercises, and also delivered a sound, practical address on "Christian Heroism." Mr. Alexander Titsworth also made an address.

Hey! All Right!

(From the Bound Brook Chronicle.)

The Plainfield Press mentions with apparent alarm that "the Rev. Dr. Burchard—whose notorious saying: 'Rum, Romanism and Rebellion,' helped defeat Mr. Blaine in 1884—got off the 11:20 train from New York this morning and turned up Park avenue towards Front street." It may be that Mr. Burchard is going to take a hand in determining the source of Plainfield's water supply. He should be watched.

Fire on Orchard Place.

What threatened to be a serious conflagration and the total destruction of the house occupied by Mr. Harry K. Vail, at No. 24 Orchard place, on Tuesday evening, of last week, was nipped in the bud and before it became necessary to send out a general alarm. On that evening a kerosene lamp was overturned in Mr. Vail's residence, and the burning oil set fire to the carpet and a rug. Prompt and heroic efforts on the part of those in the house, alone saved the building from total destruction.

Installation of Officers.

D. D. G. C., Horace Chapman and staff of Unity Division, Uniform Rank, No. 3, K. of P., Elizabeth, installed the following officers of Perseverance Lodge, of this city, Friday evening:

C. C—John G. VanSyckle.
V. C—Samuel Miller.
P.—Samuel Robinson.
M. at A—Edward Hann.

After the installation, singing and speech-making was indulged in by visiting brethren from Unity, Volunteer and Olive Branch Lodges. A collation of cream and cake brought an enjoyable evening to a close.

Accept Defeat Like a Man.

The following without signature, has been received by mail. It speaks for itself.

> The present postmaster of Westfield has filled the office satisfactorily, and there is no good reason why he should be deposed.
>
> The Republicans were the originators of civil service, and they should be the last to violate its provisions, and that is a very good reason why Mr. Clark should be retained.

At the last election the Democrats were beaten, and Mr. Clark should get out like a man when his time comes, with the rest of them. A Democratic administration should not leave a Republican in office, and vice versa.

All on Account of Eliza.

About eleven o'clock on the night of July 4, two well-known young men, both residents of this city, were seen walking along Park avenue from Front street. About midway in the block one called the other vile names, and a genuine slugging match followed. Officer Flannigan happened to be near by, and when he arrived at the spot, several knockdowns were recorded. The officer locked the fighters up, and Friday morning they were each fined five dollars for disorderly conduct. One of the men left his watch for security.

It appears that during the evening the men passed a female on the street, whose front name is said to be Eliza, and one of them had spoken disrespectful of her. This so angered the other one, that he upbraided his companion. Hence the fight. Both men were afraid their "best girl" would hear of the matter, and consequently made a request that their names be omitted from this brief mention of the affair.

NEW OFFICERS.

The regular meeting of the Board of Directors of the Public Library was held at the rooms, evening of July 3. There were present Messrs Male, Tyler, Tracy, Baldwin, Babcock and Stillman.

It being the first meeting of the new board, they proceeded to the election of officers, and Mr. Baldwin was appointed a Committee of One on nominations. He reported the following officers for the ensuing year:

PRESIDENT—Job Male.
VICE PRESIDENT—Mason W. Tyler.
SECRETARY—Wm. M. Stillman.
TREASURER—John B. Dumont.
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE—The President, the Treasurer, the Chairman of the Library Committee, the Chairman of the Art Committee.
ART COMMITTEE—George H. Babcock, A. C. Baldwin, J. B. Dumont.
LIBRARY COMMITTEE—R. F. Talmage, J. Evarts Tracy, M. W. Tyler.

The report was adopted and the Board proceeded to the election. The Secretary on motion cast a ballot in their favor, and the nominees were declared elected.

The matter of the purchase of the Schoonmaker collection was referred to the Art Committee, they to report at the next meeting.

Another Indignant German.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—In reply to the "Berlin" letter of the Rev. Chas. F. Mitchell, of the M. E. church of this city. I should like to say that while it does not seem possible for this country to contain many people ignorant enough to believe such statements if intended to refer to places frequented by ladies and gentlemen, yet the reader should remember that in all large cities, whether in Europe or this country, there are many such places as described by the Rev. gentleman, and perhaps since his arrival in Berlin his associations have been such as to lead him to think the manners and customs he described are general.

"BERLIN."

[The Rev. Mr. Mitchell merely committed an error of judgment in accusing a nation of the habits of a class, but what excuse can be made for Mr. J. Newton Jenkins who permitted the publication of a private letter to him, or what can condone the idiocy of a paper that will publish a confidential communication of such a nature from such a source?—ED.]

The Crescents to Other Hands.

At the regular meeting of the Plainfield Bowling Club, held in Force's Hotel, evening of July 3, a proposition was submitted by one of the managers of the Crescent ball nine offering to turn over to the Club all the right, title and property of the Crescent organization.

It was shown that after two years of success the nine and its purposes had grown beyond what it had been started as—a part of the Y. M. C. A.'s work among the young men. Consequently it was believed that now the backing of a large and well organized club of gentlemen was requisite. The property of the base-ball contingent was valued at about $400, and its indebtedness amounted to $186. A large number of games were scheduled for the season, and the public's patronage was filling the 500 seats in the grand stand upon every occasion that the weather was pleasant.

The matter was thoroughly discussed and considered—Dr. J. T. Fritts, Messrs A. W. Waldron, Jr., J. W. Davis, C. E. Tool, W. K. McClure and others took an active part in the discussion for the Club, and Messrs J. H. Doane and J. W. Gavett, representing the ball nine, answered fully all the many questions submitted.

Subsequently, upon a unanimous vote, the franchise and property of the Crescent ball nine was accepted by the Bowling Club, and on motion President E. C. Kleb appointed Messrs John H. Doane, A. W. Waldron, Jr., C. E. Tool, George A. Hallock, and J. W. Gavett, a committee to take the entire management of the nine and its affairs.

A Party of Plainfield Ladies for Europe.

On Wednesday Miss Julia E. Bulkley, Principal of the Plainfield public schools, sailed for Europe. In her company from this city were also the Misses Kirkner, Miss Fritts, Miss Belle Butler and Miss Yates. The last named young woman will probably remain abroad for a year.

It Was the Case in North Plainfield.

A correspondent in the Bound Brook Chronicle, says:

"Some of our citizens seem to think that the Water Company should have been made to pay a handsome tribute to the town for its franchise for the use of the streets in which to lay pipes. These people do not have in mind the fact that capital is always seeking paying investments, and corporations will not put money where it is unlikely to yield a return, and the demanding of payment for the franchise here might have been the means of driving away the promoters of the water works, as was, I believe, the case in North Plainfield."

In Memoriam of Herbert Winthrop Peck.

"Thy Will Be Done." It is with sad hearts we thus quote from our Master's words in contemplating the sudden and unlooked for death of our dear brother and friend, Herbert Winthrop Peck. We feel deeply the loss of a devoted and vigorous co-laborer in Christ. From youth to manhood he has been in our midst, living to God's honor and glory, esteemed and beloved by all who knew him.

Resolved, That we, the officers and teachers of Trinity Reformed Sabbath school assembled, do express our hearty appreciation of all his many virtues, a young man of brilliant talents, zealous in all which he undertook. He did not hesitate to make the influence of his example and teaching felt among his young associates. May his memory have a lasting influence on this school for "he though dead yet speaketh."

Resolved, That we tender the bereaved parents our heartfelt sympathy in this sad affliction, that our sorrow is mingled with theirs in the trying ordeal through which they have been called to pass. We bid them look to Jesus "Who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross."

Resolved, That these resolutions be entered upon the minutes of the Sabbath school, and that a copy thereof be presented to the family.

Signed,

This is Our Old Friend Young Smillie, of Central Avenue.

A street fakir, who stands near the Astor House week in and week out, was approached yesterday—says a New York paper—by a tall, stout young man, with a handsome little black moustache and the look of an ascetic. The tall young man's features relaxed as he asked "have you anything new today?" He had, and the young man with the ascetic look bought it. He was Frederick Smillie, of the Reform Club, the best artist in the country, it is said, at engraving bank note portraits.

He doesn't draw for newspapers or magazines, but devotes himself to the mechanical perfection of his work. Smillie can engrave a portrait for a bank note in the very highest style of the engraver's art, and furnish for it a design of power and breadth and appropriateness. But he can't make a plate, no matter how delicately he engraves it, that some other mechanical artist who happens to be a forger can't duplicate. As the safe-breakers keep up in skill with the safe-makers, so do the forgers, by photography, with the engravers.

Mr Smillie is a well-known writer and authority on economics. He is a savant at thirty-five, and in explanation of his own juvenile moustache advances with much ingenuity the theory that intellectuality is incompatible with hirsute development. He is some five feet, eleven inches high and weighs probably 190 pounds. Mr. Smillie is a musician of fine taste. He has one weakness, a hankering after street fakirs, and rarely refuses to buy anything new they offer him. In this respect, as perhaps in others, he is one of the most remarkable men in New York. He is the son of the late Dr. Geo. Smillie, who in life was the leading dentist of this city.

STILL WINNING.

Having already defeated the Dauntless, of Elizabeth, on the Plainfield grounds with ease by a score of 8 to 2, the Crescents sent a practice nine to Elizabeth, Saturday, to play a return game. The victory was but a slight one, and it might have perched on the other banners if there had been another inning.

A large delegation of Plainfielders attended, who after wandering two or three miles out in the suburbs towards Rahway, found a vacant lot back of a rubber factory, where the game was to be played. Everybody present had a grand stand on their feet without charge. The lowest board in the back-stop, was three feet above the ground.

Condon pitched for the Crescents, but he was not in good form. He sent five men to first on balls, and the Elizabethans got seven clean hits and an earned run off him. But the Crescents have never lost a game yet with their own and only David in the box.

West proved himself a clever little pitcher and if Echeverria had been behind the bat the Dauntless would have won. Batjer could not hold the balls. Ten times the Crescents fanned out, including every player on the nine excepting McMurray and Townley. But West was not well supported—Terrill's and Batjer's errors being costly. The Crescents on the other hand, played well at critical periods, and ten of the Dauntless were left on bases during the game.

Mr. Kennedy, pitcher of the Alerts, umpired the game in a manner that was unsatisfactory to his Elizabeth rivals. He declared McMurray safe on third base in the fifth inning, when the runner was surely out, and such decision alone won the game for Plainfield. The Crescents run of luck and winning, halt, was thus uninterrupted, although the Dauntless nine of Saturday was a banana-peel in their way on which any other club under the same circumstances would have slipped and broke its neck.

The score in detail was:

WHERE ARE WICKED FOLKS BURIED?

"Tell me, gray-headed sexton," I said,
"Where in this field are the wicked folks laid?
I've wandered the quiet old graveyard through,
And studied the epitaphs, old and new;
But on monument, obelisk, pillar or stone,
I read of no evil that men have done."

The old sexton stood by a grave newly made,
With his chin on his hand, his hand on a spade,
I knew by the gleam of his eloquent eye
That his heart was instructing his lips to reply.

"Who is to judge when the soul takes its flight?
Who is to judge 'twixt the wrong and the right?
Which of us mortals shall dare to say
That our neighbor was wicked who died today?

"In our journey thro' life, the farther we speed,
The better we learn that humanity's need
Is charity's spirit, that prompts us to find
Rather virtue than vice in the lives of our kind.

"Therefore, good deeds we record on these stones,
The evil men do, let it die with their bones.
I have labored as sexton this many a year,
But I never have buried a bad man here."

TROTTING ON SATURDAY.

There was an increased attendance on the track of the Gentlemen's Driving Park Association on Saturday afternoon, and the trotting was better than it has been before this season. The track, too, was in an excellent condition, and some fast time was made by the local horses. In all there were three races, which, together with some exhibition trial heats, made up the day's sport. The judges were Messrs J. W. Johnson, Nate Robbins and O. T. Waring.

The first race between Mr. Hayes' "Andy," Nate Robbins' "Doctor" and John Osborn's "Marcenear," was hotly contested. "Andy" won the race in two straight heats. Time 2.50½ and 2.56¼.

There were but two entries in the second race, namely: John Chandler's "Rambo" and Samuel Allen's "Lady Allen." But one mile heat was trotted to harness, "Rambo" winning the heat in 2.47½.

Then came the event of the day, between E. J. Waring's "Ledger Boy" and C. Brower's "Banty," in which two heats were trotted, the former horse winning both. Time 2.48½ and 2.39.

Mr. A. C. Vail drove his "Betsy Bobbitt" a mile to wagon and repeat in 2.44¼ and 2.43¼. Mr. O. T. Waring drove his horse "Copeland" an exhibition mile to wagon, in 2.40, thus ending the day's sport.

On Saturday next the trotting will be unusually interesting and it is expected that several new horses will make their appearance on the turf.

New York's Oldest in Office of its Bank Cashiers.

Our New York namesake had the following to say Sunday of ex-Councilman Gilbert of this city, the organizer of the Hillside Cemetery scheme, and a leader in a dozen other philanthropic projects:

"The cashier now living who has held office longest is Mr. Alexander Gilbert of the Market and Fulton bank, and he bids fair to break the record by a long way, though he has been twenty-six years a cashier.

"Mr. Gilbert has only had a personal interest in half a century of the World's history, and he feels all right for another half. He entered the Market and Fulton bank in 1859 as assistant receiving teller. Four years later he was promoted, without intermediate steps, to the office of cashier, a remarkable tribute to his energy and ability. He was then only 24 years of age, and was the youngest cashier in New York.

"The Market cashier is one of the best known men in his position, and wherever he is known he is liked. In the bank he is courteous and vivacious and as popular with the employees of the bank as with its patrons.

"No," said Mr. Gilbert the other day, "I cannot make the proud claim that during my term of office our bank has never lost a dollar. My impression is that no financial house doing much of a business can truthfully say so. We have had our losses, but I can safely say that we have always come out right at the end of the year."

"What does your experience as a banker lead you to think of the honesty of humanity?" asked the reporter.

"Generally honest," was the reply. "At least I always believe men to be honest till I find the reverse to be the case."

"Do you advise young men to enter banking?"

"No, I constantly dissuade them. Simply for the reason that long years of close confinement, and hard work frequently meet with no reward. In this business there are plums for very few."

CAPTAIN VANDERBEEK WINS.

Tuesday afternoon at 2:30, on the La Grande avenue ball grounds, a score of spectators gathered on the grand stands and enjoyed the cool East wind that was wafted over their heated bodies. Entertainment was also afforded by the playing of the deciding game of a series between local nines of Park avenue and of Front street.

Each team had captured one game—the Front Streets by a score of 19 to 16, and the Park Avenues, in ten innings, by a score of 8 to 6. Consequently the third game was looked forward to with much expectation, while the betting was slightly in favor of the Front Streets. A large sum of money in wagers of from sixteen cents to as high as three dollars, had been placed in the hands of Mr. J. B. Miller, of Laing's Hotel.

But the result of the match was disaster for Manager Horton's Front Street team. First baseman Duckworth was unable to get off; and in fact, only Spider Voorhees, Baker Voehl and Johnnie Young of the original nine, showed up. On the other hand Captain Vanderbeek had all his picked players out, besides some new ones that greatly strengthened the team. Pitcher Wyckoff was hired at great expense and he wound the balls hot and twisted across the plate in such shape that eighteen of the Front Streeters struck out with ease. Fielders Kenney and Timbo went to the bat eight times but only saw the ball once, and that was when it hit Tommy in the loin.

Young also pitched a good game, but as Voehl could not hold him it was useless trying to strike the batters out when the catcher stood by the back-stop. As it was, however, Young struck out twelve of the Park Avenues.

The features of the game were Mr. VanName's judgment on balls and strikes, the three luscious muffs of Kenney, the base running of Leach in his stocking feet, the good catching of Winn, and the stealing of bases on Voehl.

The score was as follows:

W. L. FORCE, Postmaster.

—Oh, for a Y. M. C. A. Building.

—It is said that whortleberry crop, already appearing in market, will be an extraordinary one.

—The soda fountain men laugh hilariously, and the iced cream [illegible] freezes on your spare change.

—Mrs. T. E. Morgan and family of Orchard place are at Liberty, Sullivan county, N. Y., for the Summer.

—Monday the thermometer registered up in the nineties—about the first real Summer weather we have had.

—This is the time when those who can afford it enjoy a nap after dinner. Those who can't afford it enjoy it [illegible].

—The Sunday school of the First Baptist church will go on their annual excursion to Asbury Park, Friday, July 19.

—The fishing habit is a bad one in that it tempts people to tell lies. Better buy your fish and show the bill for your catch.

—A drive around the country at this season gives one a good idea of the many different patterns of [illegible] there are in use.

—The store of Sebring Bros., the Park avenue clothiers, will be closed at seven o'clock every evening hereafter excepting on Saturdays.

—The green twocent stamp will be abandoned and one of [illegible] take its place, under the new postage stamp contract, says an exchange.

—Two of the cells will be ready for occupancy in Warren Engine house this evening, and the Borough Marshals will watch diligently for evil doers.

—The firemen had an easy time of it July 4, as they were not called out during the entire day. The [illegible] remained on duty until six o'clock that morning.

—The Crescents will probably be beaten next Saturday if they put Gately in the box to pitch against the O. N. T.'s. The "Flushings" made 25 hits off of him Saturday.

—A law of New Jersey requires a physician to produce his certificate of graduation from "some reputable" medical college in order to prove his right to collect fees.

—Quite a large number of persons from this city, are regular attendants at the Monmouth Park races, but we have not heard of any of them being "ahead" on the favorites.

—During the communion service in Holy Cross church, on Sunday morning, one of the members of the surpliced choir was taken suddenly ill, and had to be carried from the choir loft.

—Miss Mamie Maidoward, an employe at the carpet factory, had the misfortune to catch her hair in the machinery on afternoon of July 5, thereby pulling out a quantity of the hair by the roots.

—Personal and society items are thankfully received at this office. If you are going away for a few days or have friends visiting you, just inform us of the fact and we will gladly publish it. It can be done by postal card.

—Some ridiculous bets were made in this city on the result of the Sullivan-Kilrain prize fight. For instance, one man bet his head of hair on Kilrain, against another man's side whiskers which he wagered on Sullivan.

—Mr. Chas. Willis, while driving an ice wagon for Coddington Bros., on July 4, morning, was suddenly taken ill with a congestive chill. He was taken to his home on Johnston Drive in a carriage, where he was treated by a physician.

—A change of advertisement for Amos H. Van Horn, the Newark carpet and furniture dealer, will appear in our next issue. He has made great reductions in his line of business, previous to his making extensive alterations in the place of business.

—About two o'clock Thursday afternoon, a lighted squib set fire to one of the window awnings in front of Mr. Thos. Worth's harness shop on [illegible] street. No general alarm was sent out, as the fire was extinguished before much damage was done.

—At the First Presbyterian church, Sunday morning, Rev. Dr. Ketcham, the pastor, preached especially to the children, and special music was rendered with reference to the young. In the evening Rev. Dr. Burchard, of New York, preached an eloquent sermon before a large congregation.

—Irving Smalley was summoned before Justice Nodyne Friday morning, to answer to the charge of cruelty to animals, but at the request of Mr. W. A. Coddington, counsel for the Society, the case was dismissed, it having been ascertained that the said Mr. Smalley was not the party guilty of the offence.

—The Second annual Summer Night's Festival of the Oriental Social Club, at The Crescent, on evening of July 3, was a grand success, and the club will also realize about $60 from their entertainment. In the grand march there were about one hundred persons, led by Mr. Fred. Becker and lady, and Mr. William Elson and Miss Louise Siebel.

Mrs. Dr. Tomlinson Advises the Ladies.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New Jersey opened the annual Summer School of Methods at the Janes Memorial Tabernacle at Ocean Grove, Tuesday morning. The object of the school is to give and receive practical instruction concerning the best methods of work for the promotion of prohibition. Much enthusiasm has been manifested in the meetings.

Mrs. Dr. Tomlinson, of this city, spoke on "The Vital Need of the Union at the Present Time." She told the ladies that they must educate their husbands and their ministers, and advocated the third party.

Escaped From An Asylum.

A middle-aged woman, comfortably clad, was seen to be acting rather strangely at the railroad station Tuesday afternoon and Chief Carey took her to the station house, where Dr. [illegible] prescribed for her. The woman seemed to be more fatigued than anything else, and showed evidences of having travelled a long distance. The woman, who is of German birth, told a pitiful story. She said that she came to this country from France last August, ostensibly to teach her brother's children, who are living in St. Louis. In November her brother had her placed in an insane asylum, where she remained for [illegible] weeks, finally escaping.

She had fifty dollars in money, Tuesday, and said she was on her way back to Germany. The woman told Dr. [illegible] that she had a brother in the drug business in Brooklyn. She is still [illegible] at the lock-up.

They will drive through in two or three days as the weather and their own strength permit. Mr. Titsworth was the first Postmaster at Shiloh, N. J., from 1842 to 1852, his name being continued for some years after his removal to East Jersey.

Nearly Lost His Eye.

Mr. Abram Van Fleet, a Grand Army man, and employe of Messrs Carney Bros., the plumbers, came near losing an eye, July 4, by the premeditated discharge of a firecracker, in the hands of Fred Clark. The wound, which is very painful, will deprive Mr. Van Fleet of the use of his eye for a long time. Dr. Mattison dressed the wound.

The DeBaud Will Case.

The contest over the will of the late Antonio DeBaud of this city, was decided in the Union County Orphans Court on July 3. The testator left real estate valued at $60,000 and a good deal of personalty. The contest was made by his widow, who received ten thousand dollars in cash. The will also provided for a home for Mrs. DeBaud's aged parents as long as they live. Judge McCormick heard the arguments and ordered the will admitted to probate. Walter L. Hetfield of this city, was appointed by the Court executor for the estate. The will was sustained.

The Public Schools May Lose Their Principal, for a Time.

Miss Julia E. Bulkley, Principal of the Plainfield public schools, sailed on the steamer "Brittanic," at three o'clock on Wednesday for Europe. She may be absent a year, in which case, it is said, Mr. Lincoln B. Goodrich will act as Principal, and his position as tutor of the Senior class, will again be occupied by his predecessor, Mr. Edwin H. Lewis.

With Miss Bulkley, from this city, were the Misses Kirkner, Miss Clementine Yates, Miss Belle Butler and Miss Lilian Fritts. The last two expect to return in the Fall, the others will probably stay longer. Miss Yates, at least, will remain a year.

Grant Avenue Bridge Contracts Awarded.

On the afternoon of July 3, Freeholder Vanderbeek of the Union County Board, and Wm. E. Jones of the Somerset County Board, the Joint Committee, opened the bids for an iron bridge over Green Brook at Grant avenue. The contract was given to Mr. J. W. Shipman of the Penn Bridge company.

There were eight bidders as follows: King Bridge Co., $1,375; Groton, $1,273; Pittsburgh, $1,350; Riverside, $1,340; Berlin, $1,315; Dean & Westbrook, $1,300; Wrought Iron Bridge Co., of which Mr. Richard Merritt, of this city, is the representative, $1,290, and the Penn Bridge Co., $.1275.

The mason work was awarded to Geo. W. Townley, of this city, whose bid was $321.20. There were six bidders. George F. Sellery's bid was $624.50.

Installation of Officers.

At a regular meeting of Howell Division, No. 97, Sons of Temperance, held in the Division rooms corner of Front street and Park avenue, Tuesday, one member was initiated and other propositions were received for membership. The following members were installed as officers for the ensuing quarter:

A. Con—Brother W. R. Meitzer.
I. S.—Brother J. H. Johnson.
O. S.—Sister E. C. Manton.

The Division is in a better condition than it has been for a long time. New members are initiated every week.

Occurrences and Suggestions.

"Southern watermelons are now to be found in our markets, but in buying them the purchaser takes all the risk. Perhaps it will turn out fit to eat and perhaps it will make a pig turn up his nose in disgust. The Georgia crop is reported to be larger this year than it has been in any previous year, but it cannot be said that all of it is of the best quality."

"The cholera mixture formulated by the Sun, which has for some years been in successful use, is made as follows: Take equal parts of tincture of cayenne, tincture of opium, tincture of rhubarb, essence of peppermint and spirits of camphor, and mix well. Dose, 15 or 20 drops in a wineglass of water, according to age and violence of the attack. Repeat every 15 or 20 minutes until relief is obtained."

Hurt at the Pond Tool Works.

Lawrence Green, an employe at the Pond Tool Works, met with a painful accident while at work in the shop on on afternoon of July 2. With some of the other employees, he was engaged in lifting a heavy casting when in some unaccountable manner a piece of the machinery struck him on the back of the head inflicting a deep scalp wound. The injured man was taken home, and Dr. Simpson dressed the wound.

THE FOURTH AT THE NETHERWOOD.

The One Hundred and Thirteenth Anniversary of American Independence was celebrated at Hotel Netherwood in the usual gorgeous way. In the afternoon from three to five, a concert was given by Innes' famous 13th Regiment Band, but on account of the severe rain storm, only the Hotel guests and a few cottagers were able to be present at the musical feast.

But from eight till nine o'clock in the evening, when a grand display of hundreds of dollars worth of the finest pyrotechnics, was given, the crowds were enormous. Fully five hundred of invited guests were seated on the spacious piazzas, while as many more filled the grounds, and scores of carriage and stage loads of Plainfield people occupied every available place to stand along the Hotel's driveways and public thoroughfares.

The Anniversary Ball that followed was one of the largest Netherwood has known. The opening promenade was led by Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Brewster, Mr. Charles A. Lummis and Miss Plum, and Dr. C. S. Carter and Mrs. Crossman. Among the many present from this city were Mrs. Gen'l Wm. H. Sterling, Miss Swain, Miss Stewart, Miss Dumont, Miss VanBoskerck, Miss Shaddle, Miss Walz, Miss Morgan, Miss McKinney, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Roome, Dr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Endicott, Messrs A. McKinney, M. Ackerman, H. Squires, J. Munn, F. Walz, O. T. Waring, Jr., and J. DeGraff.

Those in charge of the success of the affair, and the comfort and thorough enjoyment of every one, were:

Executive Committee—Henry D. Brewster. Dr. Colin S. Carter and Chas. A. Lummis.

Floor Committee—Harry W. Martin, Jas. R. Plum, Jr., Wm. E. McCredy, Frederick Martin, Jr., and Oliver B. Bridgman.

Reception Committee—R. V. Linderbury, Jas. E. Spencer, Geo. W. Crossman, Thos. C. Purdy, J. W. Jackson, Geo. Taylor, and Col. Frederick Martin.

Just What He Did Say.

"Mr. Schoonmaker, of Plainfield, a newspaper man and an eloquent orator, who is also a member of the Board of Education, has made more or less commotion in the press of the State because of an address delivered by him at the Plainfield graduating exercises last week. The newspapers report him as saying that the State Board of Education was about to propose a law forbidding the erection of parochial schools by the Roman Catholics, and he gave long if not strong reasons for the measure.

"We suspect from a careful perusal of the reports that the newspapers have, in this matter, incorrectly quoted Mr. Schoonmaker, and that what he did say was that he, as a member of the State Board, proposed to bring the matter forward, and that "he wished it to be known as the Plainfield idea." But whatever Mr. Schoonmaker may have said, it is patent to anyone who reflects upon the subject that no law to this effect is ever likely to pass in this State, or, if passed, would be constitutional. Liberty of conscience is permitted to all religious sects, and if any of them choose to establish schools for the education of their own children, and themselves foot the bills, they not being supported by public taxes, the State would have no right to interfere, however much, in some instances, it might desire to do so."

The Somerville Gazette, from which the above is quoted, is correct as always. Mr. Schoonmaker, as THE PRESS has already stated, was widely and inexcusably misquoted. As he says himself in a communication, "The news did not give a verbatim report of what I said, but a description report, so that the language was the reporter's."

Mr. Schoonmaker in his speech did not say, nor imply, that any law was proposed forbidding the erection of parochial schools by Roman Catholics. His exact words were, as published in these columns the next day, "Let us make it illegal to establish schools for the avowed purpose of taking away from the public schools, children who would otherwise attend those schools."

The Crescents Continue to Add Only Victories to Their Record.

Plainfield's taste for the national sport was again shown July 4, when in spite of the threatening weather in the morning a crowd assembled at the Crescent grounds to see the "Alerts" of Elizabeth again defeated; and in the afternoon, when the rain kept the "Ironsides" of Newark away and there was no game, yet the grand stand was well filled.

As Curtis was reserved to pitch in the afternoon, Condon faced the visitors, Cadmus went behind the bat and substitutes Teel and Hand played on the nine for the first time this season. The game, at times, was an interesting and exciting one. On many occasions, only the clever head work of Condon and the sharp fielding of his support, prevented the Alerts from swelling their score.

The new men acquitted themselves well. Hand had only one chance to distinguish himself, and did so. He stopped Kennedy's hit in the fourth inning and threw it to McMurray, but the latter dropped it. Teel on second put two out, besides assisting in running out Ahern who was caught between first and second.

Condon pitched a better game in every respect than Gately ever did. He struck out 14 of the Alerts and the mute only struck out 6 of them on Decoration Day; and Condon held the visitors down to three hits while they got twice as many off Gately. The only run the Alerts made was the result of a series of chances. Carter was hit with the ball—some thought he got in its way intentionally—went to second on a passed ball caused by Cadmus not getting what he signalled for, reached third on Kennedy's sacrifice and came home on McMurray's fumble of another short hit by Simpson.

The entire score was as follows:

SUBURBAN COUNCIL MEETING.

A Few in the Ranks of the Street Committee and Councilman Bettman Resigns.

Mayor Cooley called the Borough Council to order, in regular session at 8:30 o'clock Friday evening, and roll call showed the following members present: Messrs Bettman, Buckle, Emmons, Needham and Smalley. The minutes of the June meeting were read and approved, and a number of applications for scavenger and peddlers' licenses were received, referred and subsequently granted.

A petition was sent in urging the Council to enforce the sidewalk ordinance and have a walk constructed in front of the Allen property on the North side of Somerset street. It was referred to the Street Committee.

Chief Martin of the North Plainfield Fire Department, submitted for confirmation a list of the newly elected officers and members of Warren Engine Company. He further asked for the use of the Council chamber to hold the company meetings in, and stated in his report that a half-dozen lanterns were needed for the company's use.

Claims were presented and referred as follows: J. H. Wilson, $1,286.90; L. Conrad, $.75; S. Taynor 3 and 13.30; P. Seader, 7; Tower & Lyon, 8.65; L. B. Woolston, 30; T. MacDonald, 37.50; J. A. Bauerbach, 2.50; Wm. Pangborn, 5.30; N. Y. and N. J. Globe Gaslight Co., 269-02; Wm. Krewson, 2.55; J. Becker, 90; J. Stahl, 8.25; P. Callahan, 9.90; J. A. Thickstun, 26.57 H. Pangborn, 1.

The Law and Ordinance Committee returned the bond of the Collector. It was filed.

Mr. Smalley, chairman of the Street Committee, made a verbal report on the progress of the work of macadamizing Somerset street. He said that in his judgment when this work is completed, there will be little of the appropriation left. This brought forth a spirited discussion.

Mr. Bettman signified his intention to resign from the Street Committee. He said that although both Mr. Buckle and himself were members of the Committee, neither of them had been consulted with reference to any of the street work done in the borough this year. The chairman, he said, had been requested to call a Committee meeting, but he had neglected to do so.

Mr. Buckle thought the chairman of the Street Committee had taken too much responsibility on his own shoulders. He said he had voted on the resolutions authorizing the macadamizing of certain streets on a basis of 45 cents a running foot, but the cost had run up over 60 cents.

Mr. Smalley explained his position by stating that his business engagements had prevented him from calling a Committee meeting, but he supposed of course the other members of the Committee knew just what work was being done on the streets.

At this point in the proceedings Mr. Bettman tendered his resignation as a member of the Street Committee, and it was accepted.

Mr. Emmons, from the License and Marshal Committee, made a report on the borough lockup, recommending that the use of the present building be discontinued. He recommended the location of four cells in the engine house, and the erection of a shed in the rear of the house for the use of the horses. The report was received and recommendations adopted. Later on, by resolution, the Committee was authorized to proceed with the work, at a cost not to exceed $65.

The Auditing Committee reported on the claims sent in during the evening, and they were ordered paid by warrant.

Resolutions were adopted as follows; By Mr. Emmons, changing the name of "Warren Engine Co., No. 3" to "Warren Engine Co., No. 1;" by Mr. Smalley, that all the money in the Clerk's hands be transferred to the Collector; by the same Councilman, authorizing the Street Commissioner to notify property owners on the North side of Somerset street, to lay sidewalks, as asked for in the above petition; by Mr. Emmons, appointing John Van Fleet a special marshal.

The amended ordinance regulating the licensing of hawkers, peddlers, etc., was taken from the table and adopted on its third reading.

Upon resolution by Mr. Smalley, the Street Committee was authorized to negotiate a loan of $1,000 for work on the streets.

The same Councilman gave notice that it was his intention to tender his resignation as chairman of the Street Committee at the next meeting of the Council. This brought forth another animated discussion.

Mr. Buckle considered it unwise to resign from the Committee. "If the Committee has made a mistake," said he, "lets rectify it."

Mr. Emmons thought the chairman of the Committee should not be censured too severely, for the good work which had been done on Jackson avenue and other thoroughfares in the borough.

The following persons were confirmed as members of Warren Engine Co., No. 1: Eugene Pope, Chas. E. Pope, G. R. Schiereth, P. H. Bennett, John P. Emmons, Julius J. Stahl, Edward Mundy, S. G. Taynor, P. Kellegher, H. Pangborn, J. J. Kline, W. C. Smith, L. B. Woolston, J. F. Buckle, Edw. Wolf, Wm. L. Sharkey, and P. H. Mangam.

The Council then adjourned.

FANWOOD'S FITFUL FISHERMEN.

When our people go fishing anywhere near home, they labor under one great disadvantage. They can't stop on their way back and buy out the market—chiefly for the reason that Scotch Plains doesn't have a fish market. They might run across Mr. Barbour's wagon, but the fish that he deals in are not such as grow in our rivers and lakes, so such a fraud would be easily discovered. But notwithstanding this draw-back, many of our citizens do believe that there is good enough sport to be found to pay for the trouble of finding.

Mr. Charles Messler can spear as many suckers in one night as anybody in the neighborhood. Charles Leighton knows how to fish. Robert Walpole is best known as a huntsman, but if there are any fish to be caught, I fancy that Mr. Walpole will usually be found on hand. And now it seems that Mr. Paff—he whom they call Tom Paff—also goes afishing once in a while, and is becoming known in the metropolis. When I was in New York the other day a young man in a lawyer's office, who lives in Rutherford, asked me if I knew Tom Paff, "for," he said, "there's a letter published in the Evening World dated at Scotch Plains and signed "Tom Paff." I explained that there were very few people in Scotch Plains, who didn't know Mr. Paff and he showed me the paper. It was the same letter that appeared in THE PRESS of July 3. It forms part of a Fish Story Symposium, and there is to be a prize. Perhaps I might as well give you the conditions of the scheme, which explains it.

The Evening World has opened a Fish Story Contest as a novel, timely and interesting feature. The actual prize, a gold double eagle, will be given for the best fish story submitted. Fish-commissioner Eugene G. Blackford, one of the leading fishermen in the country, will act as judge.

The piscatorial yarns may be as short as the authors desire, but should not exceed [illegible] words in length. The most interesting of the contributions will be published. All competitors should address, Fish Story Contest, The Evening World, New York City. This is a great opportunity for the story-telling disciples of Izaak Walton.

The United States Government is an intangible sort of thing. Private citizens live for years without brushing against it, unless some misguided friend attempts to send them a present from abroad, a thing which to an American is very unfortunate. So when the Post Office at Scotch Plains changed hands last Monday, it produced a realizing effect of that awful and mysterious GOVERNMENT which is located somewhere in Washington. Every one agrees that Mr. Ritchie has executed the duties of his office capably and faithfully, and they were really sorry when he resigned his charge. Well, it is the fortune of war; the same principle that extends to postmastership and collectorships at New York and Philadelphia holds sway in the smallest village, and no one complains of the results of a system that is so finely established and that will hold its own until a better one can be devised.

And, as a change had to be made, there is no one who could have been found more acceptable than Mr. Hand. H. K. Hand, known as 'Kiah Hand from one end of Union county to the other, has held about as many offices, public and private, as one man well can. First he is Constable Hand, and it is noticed that there are not many brawls when he is around. Roadmaster is a good thing to be, our roads have been kept in good order, and it is probably owing to lack of funds more than anything else that the sidewalk on Front street is no better than it is. An auction without 'Kiah Hand would be worse than Hamlet with the Prince left out. So if Mr. Hand conducts the Post Office in the same manner that he has filled his other positions our Post Office is going to be a thing of beauty and a joy four years. At the very outset of Mr. Hand's career, someone, I don't know who, was so contemptibly mean as to send an anonymous letter to Washington, the result of which was that a Government detective came down on Monday and went around among the great ones of the village, to see what sort of a man 'Kiah Hand was, anyway. He saw Mr. Balser, and he satisfied him perfectly, and his inquiries elsewhere must have elicited replies equally favorable, for Mr. Hand is still there. If there is one thing meaner, more cowardly and more utterly contemptible than another, it is an anonymous letter; and the man who sent this one is probably greatly disappointed that inquiry and investigation cannot disclose anything out of the way in our new Postmaster.

Why Should I Go to Montana?

Great Reservation. Because 18,000,000 acres of free Government land, with a delightful climate, and equally suited for general farming and stock raising, have just been opened to the homeseeker, in the Milk River Valley and near Benton and Great Falls.

Stock Raising. Because the favorable climate and superior grasses of Montana make it the natural home of horses, cattle, sheep and other domestic animals; and because Winter feeding is not required, as stock graze at large the year around.

General Farming. Because a rich soil and abundant Summer rains produce wheat, oats, rye, barley and the grasses and vegetables of a quality, size and yield unsurpassed.

Mining. Because Montana produces more of the precious metals than any other state or territory, and abundant opportunities remain to secure valuable properties at nominal cost.

Immigration. Because the Great Reservation is the meeting point of settlers from the Pacific Coast and from the Eastern States, and is the only extensive tract of good land left, suitable for settlement.

Business. Because the rapidly growing towns along the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. offer splendid opportunities to engage in business.

Manufacturer. Because the 1,000,000 horse-power water-power at Great Falls, the extensive coal veins, the wool, mineral and grain raising resources of Montana offer exceptional opportunities to the manufacturer.

Tourist. Because the canon of the Gates of the Mountains, the Great Falls of the Missouri, the Giant Fountain and Continental Divide offer the most sublime and diversified scenery to be found on the Continent. Take a Summer tour.

Why Travel by the St. P., M. & M.? Because only by it can you travel through the largest body of free land left for settlement. Because it reaches the Great Falls, with the largest water-power on the Continent. Because it reaches Helena, the richest city of its size in the world; and because it is the shortest, and best route to Butte, the largest mining camp on earth. Special tourists' and landseekers' rates. Daily trains through solid to Montana. Choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. Find out all about it by writing for "The Great Reservation," and "Tourists' Summer Guide." For further information, rates, maps, etc., apply to F. I. WHITNEY, G. P. & T. THREE KINDS!

I know
The past, and thence I will essay to glean
A warning for the future, so that man
May profit by his errors, and derive
Experience from his folly.—SHELLEY.

Three kinds of men start out to buy Clothing. The foolish man is hauled in by a bait and buys cheap shoddy clothing from the "hurrah" fake.

Then comes the thoughtless man, who wends his way to the fashionable tailor, gets a good suit, but pays a very big price for the same.

The wise man deals with some reputable manufacturer of Clothing and secures garments fully equal to those made to order at about half custom prices. Thus the wise man gets his Clothing, with quality and workmanship thrown in, as cheap as the foolish man his miserable trash. An unusually large number of wise men are being attracted to our store this Spring. Whether it's a case of "once bitten twice shy" or not, we don't know, but certainly their patronage of us does credit to their good judgment, and we don't think, once having traded here they'll be caught by clap-trap again. We know what we sell. We make it, and neither time, effort or money is spared to produce garments that will do us credit and still further establish our reputation. It's a selfish interest we take, we'll admit, but the effect is the same. It's there, and it pays both you and us.

TO GET A GOOD HUSBAND.

Mrs. Wilcox Discusses Nice Points Arising Out of Courtship.

Should Young Ladies Receive Gifts From Young Men to Whom They Are Not Under Engagement of Marriage? Some Interesting Ideas.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

Should a young lady receive gifts from a young man whose attentions she desires to encourage?

When this subject was suggested to me for discussion I do not think the propounder of it realized that it was as distinctly "American" as the stars and stripes or the emblematic eagle.

In no other country under the sun could such a question seriously arise, because in no other country is the young person allowed such latitude of conduct as in America.

"I REALLY BELIEVE MAMMA IS CURIOUS."

Of course, our most careful mothers in conventional circles are supposed to rear their daughters in a very proper manner regarding their association with the opposite sex.

But no matter how wisely the American girl is chaperoned in public places, she is allowed and takes her small liberties of tete-a-tetes, and promenades with gentlemen friends which she could not take in any other land upon the globe.

Aside from this limited circle of ultra conventional people which each large city contains, we have hundreds of thousands of beautiful and refined girls dwelling in our lesser cities and country places who comprise the "best society" of their respective towns, and who walk, drive and dance about with their numerous admirers quite according to their own ideas of propriety and pleasure and with no interference from chaperones.

There recently appeared in a French society journal the statement that it was customary for entire strangers to call upon American young ladies whom they were desirous of meeting; that these young ladies received them cordially, and entertained them pleasantly by conversation until midnight, frequently, when if the mother chanced to pass the door and glance in the daughter would laughingly remark, "I do believe ma is getting curious."

This most remarkable statement regarding our customs will be a surprise to all good American mothers, I am sure, and yet there are far too many good mothers who do not exhibit enough curiosity concerning the young men who call upon their daughters. If Mollie and Sallie are fast friends, Mollie is allowed to take her gentlemen friends to call upon Sallie. And if for several weeks thereafter Sallie goes walking, rowing and driving with one of these gentlemen, her mother is quite satisfied with the explanation that it is "one of Mollie's friends."

Mollie is a neighbor's daughter, and a very nice girl, indeed, and Sallie's mother is quite content with that knowledge, and is glad the young folks are enjoying themselves.

While I assert boldly, knowing thoroughly my premises, that Mollie's mother may be found by the hundreds, if not by the thousands, in all the smaller towns of the United States, yet the vigilant and watchful mother exists, too. Not long ago I heard a gentleman, who had been remarkably successful as a ladies' man, recount how on three separate occasions he was confronted by dignified mothers and asked to "state his intentions" before continuing his calls upon their daughters. As the gentleman in question did not marry any one of the three daughters in question this method would hardly seem a successful one for mothers to pursue. But a thoroughly dignified young lady would never have permitted herself to be sufficiently compromised to need this question asked. However much liberty of action may be granted her there is an inborn pride in the true woman which compels her to defend herself from meaningless or compromising attentions. Although the chaperoning system is rapidly gaining ground with us, yet it will require another hundred years at least before the American girl is as carefully hedged about with conventionalities as her foreign sisters are. Whether she will be the better for it in the long run, is a subject open to discussion. I myself do not believe the girls who have been carefully guarded from the society of gentlemen until their marriage, make the best wives and mothers. I wish some statistic lover would study up this subject and find what percentage of divorces are from the governess-guarded and rigorously chaperoned young women, and what from the independently educated class who have mixed freely with the opposite sex in school and in society. Of one thing I feel sure: that the charming ease of manner, the grace of action and the quickness of repartee for which our girls are admired the world over, will decrease and disappear whenever she is as completely barricaded by conventionalities as is the English and French maiden.

NOT INAPPROPRIATE GIFTS
"THE GIFT GETTING GIRL."

And yet there are many of our free born daughters of independence who need to restrict themselves in their ideas of liberty.

I have known a vast number of seemingly modest and reputable girls to slyly boast of their ability to obtain presents from young men, and who sported jewels and articles of personal adornment obtained from numerous admirers and worn by them with evident pride. A young lady in one of the lesser Western towns distinguished herself by entering into a limited engagement of marriage with seven admirers, from each of which she obtained a ring. These rings she retained after the rupture of the engagements, and on her final marriage to another admirer she displayed a unique bracelet which, she smilingly informed her friends, was made out of the engagement rings of her discarded lovers.

That this style of young woman exists in America to the extent sufficient to form a type, is proven, I think, by the old song with the catchy air which is played by street bands and sung at theatres and of which the following verse is a sample:

"Although I don't intend to wed,
To settle down in life,
I've promised nearly forty men
That I will be their wife.
And for a kiss they gave to me
Full many a costly thing.
But on my word, I don't intend
To wear the wedding ring."

Surely in no other country could such a song be written of respectable society, or sung to a respectable audience. Yet it appeared a few years ago in a magazine which is devoted to giving pleasure to the home circle and which falls into the hands of young girls.

I saw the other day in a society paper the following verses which evidently relate to the same type of girl:

I gave Babette a jewelled ring,
(Babette is not her name—no matter.)
It was a garish gaudy thing:
But gifts like these can favor bring;
They argue for you and they flatter.

I purchased it and kissed each gem;
Methought in passion mildly pensive;
"A happier fate awaits for them
Than resting in the diadem
Of any king with realms extensive."

What did the damsel I adored?
I think her conduct heartless, very.
She [illegible] it to-day, what is worse,
She took it to a jewelry store
To ask its value monetary.

It seems to me the right ideas on these subjects do not have to be learned from chaperones and customs. I cannot imagine a true minded young woman in any station in life receiving any gift more expensive than a book, or a basket of flowers from a gentleman not tied to her by bonds of blood or betrothal.

I wish young girls could know the indefinable but certain lessening of respect which every man feels for one who invites, or gives gifts freely. Of course men will offer gifts, when they dare do so. They know that with the vain and ambitious girl who lacks pride, "That gifts like these can favor bring. They argue for him and they flatter"—but every favor a woman accepts from a man who has not asked her to be his wife, places her just so much farther from his honest respect.

A BRACELET MADE FROM THE RINGS OF REJECTED SUITORS.

One of the happiest wives I know to-day, first attracted the attention of her husband by a conspicuous absence of jewelry in her attire. She was a self-supporting orphan, and he was a well to do man of the world, who had come much in contact with gift-loving young women.

Knowing the propensity of his sex to buy the favor of pretty and unprotected girls, he felt an unusual interest in one who had withstood their bribes, and to-day the happy wife wears jewels consecrated by love in payment for her years of good sense.

However much men may cater to and pursue the gift-getting girl, they distrust her principles and the coarse minded are quick to imagine her more unwomanly than she really is; for I am not writing of the vicious adventuress, but of a type of pleasure-loving, selfish, but chaste American girl who guards her honor zealously, while she sells her smiles and preferences and exhibits her "presents" as trophies of victories.

A wise girl shows no preferences. So long as her heart and hand are free she will do well to treat all those gentlemen admitted to her society with an air of well bred ease, which at once gives them to understand that she expects nothing of them but courtesy, and which not infrequently piques them into a stronger feeling. A great beauty of my acquaintance made herself unpopular and neglected by an air of insolent indifference amounting to rudeness. This is never good form and never pays, unless one wishes to wound and antagonize. I have known two young ladies to lose possible husbands by trying to monopolize the attentions of young men whom they had met. A young man complained to me last summer at the sea shore of this propensity of young ladies. "I know only one young lady here when I came," he said, "and she has not and will not introduce me to any others. I want to dance at the hops, but cannot of course unless I know the ladies." I have found it invariably true that the girls who introduce their gentlemen friends freely and readily are themselves the most sought after and popular. Nothing makes a man so desirous of going as the feeling that he is being hindered from going. Nothing makes him so ready to return as a willingness on your part to let him go.

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

One Hundred Years Ago.

Fortunately there were no sewing machines then, except the busy fingers of ladies, who gave less time to personal adornment than now. The earliest invention to facilitate the process of sewing was that of Weisenthal in 1755. In his machine the needle was pointed at both ends and had an eye in the middle, so that it could be passed through the cloth both ways. Alsop's machine came next, in 1770, in which the shuttle was used; then followed the loop machine of Duncan, in 1804. In the United States Greenough, in 1842, took out a patent for a "machine to sew a straight seam," but Howe's, in 1846, was the first practical machine. The feature of Howe's machine was the needle with the eye in the point and the interlocking the threads by means of a shuttle. But the inventor could not have filled an order for a dozen of his machines for $500 apiece. It is doubtful if the sewing-machine has become a labor-saving machine, for, instead of using it to save time, it has increased the amount of sewing done a thousand fold. While the sewing machine was introduced only about forty years ago, the sale of them now is nearly, if not quite, 750,000 a year, and more than thirty companies are engaged in their manufacture. Their cost has been greatly reduced since the expiration of the patents covering them. During the life of these patents a machine costing the manufacturer from $15 to $17 sold for from $60 to $100, and now sells for from $40 to $50.

Queen Victoria's [illegible].

It may be interesting to many to know that in the household of the Queen of England there are a double set of attendants. Half do duty for one month and are then relieved by the other half. They thus do duty for only six months in the year. Six out of the twelve they are taking holiday. For those of the household who have done service for twenty years the Queen has a special decoration, which she presents in person with a few kind words. Her Majesty has also a photograph of every person employed in her numerous households, with the date of their entrance into her service and other particulars relating to them. In the case of sickness or any special circumstance happening to any of her servants the Queen, by referring to this photograph album, is enabled to recall all the details of their service.

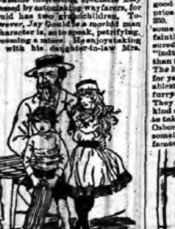
Jay Gould Romps About the Grounds of His Country House With the Children. The Poker Players of Wall Street. Russell Sage as a Horseman.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

Once upon a time, and not so very many years ago either, the traveller along a certain maple-shaded road in the beautiful town of Irvington-on-the-Hudson, which derives its name from Washington Irving, the gentle genius who idealized this whole region, might have seen a short, slightly built, dark complexioned man, with piercing black eyes, playing with two children on the stately grounds of a palatial country-seat. The children, a boy and a girl, are turning a rope, and the gentleman jumps with the agility of a romping school girl. Then they all stop and break into merry laughter. It is a beautiful spot; the grounds are laid out in elegant parterres; the lawn is closely cut and fragrant; the landscape would charm him who is wise enough to be a lover of nature. At no great distance is the road which the slab-sided, green-eyed schoolmaster traversed in Irving's "Sleepy Hollow" on his way to court Katrina, the rosy-cheeked daughter of prosperous old Mynheer Van Tassel; and it was on a fateful night on this same lonely highway that the pedagogue, having just received the mitten from Katrina, realized that "troubles come not singly but in battalions," when dark against the dim midnight moon he saw, looming up before him the dreaded, Headless Horseman carrying his head under his arm. The next instant the mysterious equestrian throws his head at the horror-stricken pedagogue, which strikes his distracted pate with terrific force, and a shattered pumpkin found the next morning in a ditch hard by, gives a touch of harsh realism to the doleful tale. It is upon this region, that, by a curious chance, fashion has alighted and dotted it with palaces set in the midst of enchanting greenery. The little black-eyed man, dark almost as a Persian, whom we see on the beautiful lawn, has decreed a more stately pleasure dome than did Kubla Khan in Zanadu, by Alf, the sacred river. It is a man famous in two hemispheres—Jay Gould. He flings aside all restraint, as if under the spell of one of Cotton Mather's witches in whom, by the way, the ancient inhabitants of this somniferous region implicitly believed. He jumps the rope, he plays "tag" with the children, he romps like a school boy. His daughter Nellie and his son Edwin are his companions in these juvenile pranks which reveal the man at his best.

All that is past now; the children have gone out into the world. But in a few years the same interesting spectacle may be witnessed by astonishing wayfarers, for Mr. Gould has two grandchildren. To-day, however, Jay Gould is a morbid man whose character is, so to speak, petrifying. He is becoming a miser. He enjoys taking a drive with his daughter-in-law Mrs. George Gould, nee Edith Kingdon, formerly a well-known actress, but his chief amusement now is his business.



J. GOULD AND HIS GRANDCHILDREN.

Russell Sage likes fast horses. He wears black goggles to prevent the gravel from flying into his eyes as he drives a spanking span up the Boulevard. He has a weakness to be thought a great horseman. He drives well.

George Gould is a member of the New York Athletic Club and is very regular in his attendance. He is well built and greatly enjoys the exercise at the club rooms. Edwin Gould's hobby is cavalry. He is a member of a troop of horses in New York which he thinks will yet rival in popularity the Seventh Regiment.

Addison Cammack is wholly indifferent to sport, unless it consists of worrying the bulls in Wall street.

William Rockefeller, of the Standard Oil Company, has a private racing track and many fast trotters, as is well known. One of his horses has a record of 2.14½.

Thomas W. Pearsall, who made a million dollars in Manhattan Elevated Railroad stock some years ago owns "Edwin Thorne," a horse that has made a mile in 2.14. William R. Travers, the famous wit of Wall street, had a good many thoroughbred horses, and was a sportsman in the strictest sense. His stable was infested with rats and it occurred to him that it would be a good idea to get a dog that would rid the place of the nuisance. He agreed to buy a dog which was offered to him provided he should prove a good ratter. The dog, a small animal, was brought to the stable and soon ferreted out a rat of unusual size which proved to be a ferocious fighter. The rat was actually getting the best of dog when Mr. Travers, who stuttered, stared out with delight:

August Belmont, the representative in this country of the Rothschilds has a stud farm on Long Island and gives more time and attention to horses than any other man in Wall street. He owns many good horses, some of which are fast.

Dr. W. S. Webb married the youngest daughter of the late William H. Vanderbilt who inherited ten millions from her father, and now he has sixty horses, some of which are good trotters. The doctor was poor but handsome and agreeable, and the rich man's daughter speedily fell in love with him. Now they live in a palace at the corner of Fifth avenue and Fifty-fourth street, which cost $1,500,000.

S. Morris Pryor, the son of Colonel Pryor of Lynchburg, Va., and a cousin of General Roger A. Pryor, drives a "T" cart and is a member of the Coney Island Jockey Club, the New York Yacht Club and the Westchester Polo Club at Newport.

A great many stock brokers attend the base ball matches. There is a Stock Exchange box and members having a book of admission tickets, costing $30 for the season, assemble there. Stock brokers have penchants, however, as various as the moods of human nature. Henry Clews the banker and broker likes to play ball with his children in the grounds attached to his palace in Thirty-fourth street near Fifth avenue. He isn't more than ten years old among his bright and beautiful children. Charles M. Foster, sometimes called the lightning calculator of the Stock Exchange is a great fisherman. Henry G. Trevor is a great lawn tennis player and likes to give bachelor parties to young ladies. Rich bachelors of New York reciprocate social attentions in this way, as is no more than fair. The last "bachelor party" which Mr. Trevor gave was at Delmonico's and delighted the young ladies and their chaperones. It cost six thousand dollars. R. L. Beeckman, of the Stock Exchange and a member of an old New York family, is the champion lawn tennis player of America. Daniel Starr is the champion billiard player of the Stock Exchange. He married a daughter of Peter Gilsey, after whom the hotel was named. Wilbur Bacon was a member of the Yale College boat crew. R. W. Schack, another Stock Exchange man, was, at one time champion amateur oarsman of New York State and is a powerful athlete. He put up one of the heaviest dumb bells made ten thousand times.

RUSSELL SAGE DRIVES.

A good many financiers and stock-brokers are sea-dogs in their way. Some of them make long cruises in their yachts. Commodore Arthur E. Bateman owns the steam yacht "Meteor" and lives a great deal of the time on board of her. He has cruised from Labrador to the river Amazon. He was formerly in the United States Navy and is of a bold and energetic character. James Smith, ex-President of the Stock Exchange and ex-Commodore of the New York Yacht Club, owns the yacht "Estelle." Thomas W. Pearsall owns the "Banshee," an Irish name, meaning spook. She is a fast sailer. Roger Maxwell, President of the Central Railroad, of New Jersey, owns the very fast sailing yacht "Shamrock." Washington E. Connor, Mr. Gould's old partner, is a veteran yachtsman. Mr. Gould long ago presented his yacht to his son George. J. Pierpont Morgan, of Drexel, Morgan & Co., bankers, owns the big steam yacht "Corsair," which is about 500 tons register. It is an expensive luxury keeping a yacht. Mr. Morgan's probably cost him a hundred thousand dollars, and I presume that it costs $2,500 a month to run it. This would include fuel, provisions and wages for a crew of say thirty men. Captains of these pleasure yachts are paid from $100 to $125 a month; first mates, $45 to $50; quarter-masters, $35; sailors, $30. Some financiers have yachts on the inland lakes. Alfred Sully, who is worth six or seven million dollars, lives at Hackettstown, N. J., but comes to New York daily, has a fine yacht of this class and entertains his friends royally.

Stock brokers are apt to be fond of a quiet game of cards. The champion poker player of the Stock Exchange is David Barnes. Charles J. Osborn, the stock operator, was a great player. He died worth seven millions, being the only one of Jay Gould's brokers who was shrewd enough to keep the fortune founded upon his commissions. Mr. Osborn managed Mr. Gould's celebrated corner in Northwest stock, when the latter squeezed the bears till their tongues seemed to run out. Mr. Gould, by the way, in speaking of this corner once said, in his customary low tone of voice and dryness of enunciation: "I considered the stock cheap at 60 and began to buy. People were disposed to sell it down. My brokers had orders to buy. Before I knew it they had bought a good deal more than there was. Then the price began to go up. I think it went to 250. I think I was induced to part with some at that price." Mr. Gould smiled faintly at the recollection. It was assuredly a liberal act to permit any one to "induce" him to "part with some" at more than three times as much as he paid for it. The bears felt sore over that experience for years. "Charley" Osborn, as the ablest of Mr. Gould's brokers, made the furry brethren fairly howl with disgust. They had sold themselves into the deepest kind of a hole and their only recourse was to take hold of the rope that "Charley" Osborn let down to them and to pay handsomely and try to look happy. This famous broker used to play high poker with Jordon L. Mott, the iron merchant, who is now worth about five million dollars. On one occasion, years ago, I heard Mr. Osborn won twenty-five thousand dollars from Mr. Mott at one sitting. It was a trifle to the merchant, many times a millionaire, and he rose from the table with the jovial remark:

SULLY ON HIS YACHT.

"That's nothing. I'll go down and mark up the price of pots."

Calvin S. Brice, the railroad President and Chairman of the Democratic National Committee in the last campaign, is a great poker player, and together with Ex-Congressman James O'Brien, Colonel William Brown of the News and others have some pretty high play at Delmonico's, at Fifth avenue and Twenty-sixth street, the limit being fifty dollars. A loss or gain of two or three thousand dollars at one of these games excites no comment. REX.

FUSSING OVER TRIFLES.

The Two Venerable Clergymen Who Quarreled at Chess.

The late Bishop Pinkney, that amiable Episcopal churchman who was known pretty well over the country, was a most devoted and enthusiastic chess-player, says the Philadelphia Telegraph. He would sit up all night at the game if not interrupted. His reputation for charity and amiability is well known in church circles. He was regarded as the most amiable of men whose profession is meekness. But there was one man, a minister of his own church, with whom he could not play chess without quarreling. Yet this man was one of the best chess-players in his diocese, and the rivalry between them was constantly bringing them face to face across the board. One night there was an assemblage of Episcopal clergy at the Bishop's house. Awed by the presence of the Bishop, the younger men were on their best behavior, and the evening was passing off as monotonously as the most orthodox could desire. Some one proposed chess. In a few minutes they were paired off, the Bishop being pitted against his chief rival. However enthusiastic the rest of the company may have got, they were mild and polite in their disputations out of respect for the Bishop.

Presently in one corner of the room was heard the Bishop's voice:

"You touched it, sir; you must move!"

"But I did not," replied his opponent.

"You did," insisted the Bishop.

"I say I did not!"

"I say you did!"

"I must emphatically deny it, sir."

At each contradiction the voices grew louder. The men were glaring at each other across the squares, and the Bishop's face was red with anger.

"If, sir, that is the way you play, sir, I am done!" he cried, and the chessmen rattled on the floor. His ecclesiastic opponent gathered them up and put them in the fire. For a few minutes they glared at each other, and the clergy assembled looked on in horror. Suddenly the absurdity of the situation struck them both. The Bishop burst out laughing at the childishness of their quarrel, and their hands came together.

The Longest Human Tail.

Setting aside the reports of travelers concerning a race of tailed men among the Nyams-Nyams tribe of Central Africa, it appears that more or less credible historians have cited from one hundred and fifty to two hundred cases of persons with tails. Max Bartels, a German who has written a monograph on the subject, describes twenty-one well-authenticated cases, including those of tails connected with the body, tails with free movement, and cutaneous prolongations. The tails are usually conical or spherical in shape, and from two or three up to five inches in length. An extraordinary specimen, however, has just been examined and photographed at Saigon, by Etienne Raband, the length being ten inches and the shape cylindrical. It belongs to a Moi boy twelve years old, and is soft and smooth, with no bony frame.

Encouraging Honesty.

Mr. Holdfast, to the editor—"Yes, sir, there was more than $10,000 in my pocket-book when I lost it. You can add to the notice that I will pay a liberal reward for its return. I'm always willing to encourage honesty." Mr. Holdfast, the next morning—"So you found my pocket-book, did you, little boy, and brought it back to me with its contents untouched! That's right, sonny, that's right. Here's ten cents for your trouble."

A MISSOURI ROMANCE.

How a Pretty Typewriter Girl Won a Wealthy Young Man's Love.

A pretty little romance is rounding into shape in the office of an investment company in this city, says the Kansas City Times. A handsome and worthy young lady typewriter and a young man of substantial business standing, of good habits and pleasant place, are the parties to it. An aged and rather well-to-do widower, who lives in a suburban town, had a good deal of business with the investment company and was favorably taken with the typewriter letters that he received from the company. "These things are gotten up in good shape," said he, "and I'd like to see the one that composes 'em. They are easy to read and are to the point." The old gentleman's son, by way of a joke, told his father that a handsome young woman prepared the letters, and that she was the sweetest and most practical girl on earth. The old man said little, but began an investigation, and at the office of the company was directed to a retiring young woman, who admitted the authorship of the letters. The old man meant business and very promptly and pointedly told her that she would win a good home and a snug fortune by marrying him. The young woman would not make a positive reply, but to carry on the joke gave tacit assent to the old boy's suit. About this time word was conveyed to the son who had sought to be funny with his father that the old gentleman and the young woman had really serious intentions. He then set about to stop it. Going to the young woman, he said to her in his matter-of-fact way that he was decidedly opposed to a marriage between her and his father; that he had money of his own and would gladly contribute any reasonable sum that she might name rather than have the marriage take place. This was the first intimation that the young woman had that the affair was growing serious enough to be looked upon as a certainty by the old gentleman's family. She very frankly confessed to the solicitous son of the aged swain that she had only been romancing, and that he need not fear that she would take the office of step-mother to him. In this interview both were characteristically pleasant and frank, and they parted good friends and so on. The young man found it necessary to call again and again, and the young typewriter welcomed him cordially each time. And so visits have gone on, and the friendship has grown into love between them, and here is the romance. This explains why a wealthy young man is soon to marry a pretty typewriter girl.

BEATING A TAVERN.

But It Was Clear Waste, for the Bill Had Already Been Settled.

One afternoon in 1872 I entered the village of L——, in Missouri, as dead broke as the poorest tramp on the highway, writes an ex-barn-stormer in the New York Sun. I had already walked thirty miles, and had fifteen more to go before I could hope to find friends and raise money. I had been out with a barn-storming theatrical company, and had got left. Watch, rings and everything but the clothes in which I stood had already gone, and I knew that I must beat the hotel or take lodgings in a fence corner. I might tell my tale of woe to the landlord in vain. He probably heard a hundred of such in the course of the year. Therefore, as I entered the village I determined to give Boniface the grand stand-off in good shape. Just before reaching the hotel I picked a child out of the street just in time to save it from being trampled under the feet of a runaway team, but I handed it over to a store-keeper without a dozen words in regard to the incident.

It was a fair village tavern, and I asked for the best room in the house. After a good supper I got half a dozen cigars on tick, and at ten o'clock went to my room and turned in and slept like a top until an hour before daybreak. Then I got up, quietly dressed myself, slipped down stairs and out of the front door and started off. After "hoofing it" for about four miles I sat down to rest, and was about ready to move on again, when a buggy in which my landlord was seated drove up. I went down in my boots at once, supposing, of course, he had followed to arrest me, but as he drew rein he called out in a cheery voice:

"Ah, good morning. Moving early, I see?"

"Y-yes," I stammered.

"You are too modest, young man—altogether too modest."

"Y-yes."

"You left early to avoid being lionized, I suppose, but I was determined to prove our gratitude. Here, take this."

"What for?" I gasped, as he held out four five dollar bills.

"For saving the life of my sister's child last evening. They paid your bill after you went to bed, or, rather, there was none to pay. Put this in your pocket."

"But, I—I—"

"Shut right up! We are not ingrates, and we know a hero when we see one. Jump in and let me drive you over to Tipton, where you can get the train."

And the landlord I had figured to stand off and knock out drove me seven miles over the country and left me with twenty dollars in my pocket.

POWER OF CUSTOM.

Differences and Likenesses of Fashions in Different Countries.

That different manners and notions prevail in different parts of the globe is, of course, known to us all, says the New York Mail and Express. In some parts of the world the lips are brought together in token of love and affection, in others the tips of the noses. In some places to uncover the head is a mark of respect, in others to keep it covered. Among some nations black clothes are worn as a sign of mourning, among others white. In some lands the dead are buried horizontally, in others they are buried upright. In Western countries sick people pay their physicians as long as they are sick, but in China and other Oriental countries, physicians are paid by their clients so long as the latter enjoy good health. In Paris domestic servants are encouraged to marry, as they are observed to be more settled and more attentive to their duty than when bachelors. In London, such marriages are discouraged, as rendering servants more attentive to their own families than to those of their master's.

In Paris certain funds are established for the poor, the yearly produce of which admits but a limited number. In London a parish is taxed in proportion to the number of its poor, and every person who is pleased to be idle is entitled to a maintenance. In Paris the poor are always contented with their pittance. In London they are so insolent that scarce one of them will condescend to eat brown bread. The latter city has accordingly a much larger number of idle and profligate wretches than the former.

In Paris, if the bills of mortality can be relied upon, the births and burials are nearly equal. In London the burials exceed the births by no less than five thousand yearly.

Great is the power of local custom, and if we take any of the principal events of life, such as death and marriage, we find the ceremonies connected with them differing most curiously in different lands; but greater still is the power of fashion, and the human family is rapidly and cheerfully submitting to its tyrannical sway; thus we find Oriental peoples eagerly adopting Western habits. In dress and manners the Chinese, Japanese, Hindoos and Turks are surely getting Europeanized, and to-day the Oriental youth, discarding his national garb, looks upon patent leather boots, tall hats and frock coats as marks of progress and civilization.

PRECOCIOUS CHILDREN.

A Boy Who Could Speak Three Languages When Four Years Old.

John Philip Baratier was born at Schwobach, in the Margravate of Anspach, in 1721. At the age of four, states a writer in Notes and Queries, he conversed with his mother in French, his father in Latin and his servants in German. In his eleventh year he translated "The Travels of the Rabbi Benjamin of Tudela" from Hebrew into French. He was elected a member of the Royal Academy of Science at Berlin, and was offered the degree of M. A. at the Halle University, to which he was admitted on drawing up and defending fourteen theses in philosophy and the mathematics (1735). He died at the early age of nineteen.

Another marvelous child was Christian Henry Heinecker, who was born at Lubeck, February 6, 1721—just twenty-seven days after Baratier first saw the light of day. He could recite the principal facts in the "Pentateuch" when but one year old; the entire history of the old and new testament was familiar to him at fourteen months; at two and one-half years he could answer the principal questions in ancient and modern history and at five he died.

Goethe is said to have known German, French, Italian, Latin and Greek before he was eight. On January 26, 1889, the New York Sun gave an account of a little negro—Oscar Moore—who knew all of Appleton's "Encyclopedia" by heart and could recite anything he had ever heard.

CHICKENS.

False statements, like chickens, are sure to come home to roost.

That adage is applicable to tricksters of all kinds, to crafty politicians as well as unprincipled salesmen.

Truth is the best paying investment in the world. It never returns with a troublesome demand for satisfaction, and however artfully obscured, it will in due time shine forth and expose the wiles of adversaries.

There is no valid reason why political action should not be honorable and fair-founded. The contrary usage, however, least in all parties, is why so many people are disgusted with modern politics.

The party that steadfastly adheres to established principles, puts forth clearly defined policies of action, and resolutely refuses to barter right for wrong, virtue for expediency, is destined to gain in the long run.

The Republicans in the late political contest for the Presidency made "Protection to American Labor" their professed battle-cry, falsely and vigorously denouncing equitable tariff reform as out and out free trade, and positively assuring the laboring classes that the only possible way to save themselves from a disastrous reduction of wages was to vote the Republican ticket.

The Republican politicians knew that was not uttering the facts.

But by such means, coupled with others of which we will not now speak, they succeeded in electing a President.

What has come to pass?

Have wages been advanced or even kept up?

Has business improved?

Nay, but quite the opposite.

Throughout the country, from East to West, resistance to an arbitrary lowering of wages on the part of employers, in many instances finding vent in open strikes, pervades the discontented ranks of labor, ending of course in the triumph of the financially strong over the dependent weak.

Numerous specific cases might be cited.

Is that protecting American labor?

Has partisan Republicanism [illegible] its pledges?

Certainly Democratic Free Trade cannot be held responsible, because a war-taxation protective tariff exists in undiminished beauty; a thing of joy to Trusts and Monopolists, but not to labor.

Education is at work.

The problem will yet be solved by the people.

Chickens are coming home.

Ho! For the County Seat.

Justice Nash is making it rather warm for tax delinquents. He emphatically declares that all persons who are indebted to the city, either for poll, personal or real estate tax, must pay up or go to jail. The Board of Freeholders had better be casting themselves to put an addition to the County Jail, as the first excursion of delinquents to the county seat will start in a few days. Justice Nash made his first levy yesterday.

The West Ends Squeal.

Under the above caption the New Brunswick Times says:

"The Union Base Ball Club of this city, received a telegram from the West Ends of Somerville stating that that club would play the Unions in this city on Saturday afternoon of this week. Through the kindness of Mr. Jas. M. Parsons the [illegible] grounds were secured and the West Ends were guaranteed $25. As soon as the West Ends saw the Unions with [illegible] they refused to play."

A Boy Missing.

Cornelius Barry, the fourteen-year-old son of Mrs. Mary McDonald, has been missing from his home in Stiger [illegible] since Sunday afternoon, and all efforts to establish his whereabouts have proved unavailing. On that day the boy was about as usual, but during the afternoon he wandered away, unnoticed, and has not since been seen, at least by his parents and playmates. Any information that will lead to the boy's recovery will be gladly received by his mother.

The Fort Madison Light Company and the Fort Madison Water Supply Company were incorporated yesterday for the purpose of supplying light and water at Fort Madison, Iowa. The capital of the former is $200,000 and of the latter $[illegible]. The Trustees of both are Hugh M. [illegible] of this city; Dudley Betts and [illegible] Watson of New York; Charles [illegible], W. S. Cole, J. M. Donovan, John F. [illegible] and Eugene A. [illegible] of Brooklyn, and Wm. Wheeler of Bogota, N. J.

City Court Proceedings.

The case of the City vs. James [illegible], for disorderly conduct, came up in the City Court before City Judge Stillman to-day. Daly, it is said, is employed at New Brunswick, and in consequence he was not present at the trial. Mr. Walter L. Hetfield appeared in his behalf, but no defence was offered. The accused was adjudged guilty of the charge and sentenced to pay a fine of $10 or stand committed to the county jail for forty days. The case will be appealed.

The case of Henry C. Drake vs. a young man named Vail, for alleged indecent exposure, also came up in the City Court this morning. The accused was given his choice between a $20 fine or 30 days' imprisonment.

Wandered From Home.

Mr. Hugh Higgins, a resident of Plainfield avenue, and a blacksmith's helper at the Potter Press Works, started for work on Monday morning, but he did not reach the works. Neither has his whereabouts yet been established. The man is about 35 years of age, and was last seen in Washington Park, North Plainfield, on Monday afternoon. A party of searchers have been scouring the surrounding country day and night, in the hope of discovering the missing man's whereabouts, but at this writing he has not been found.

The man seemed to be impressed with the idea that some one was following him in order to kill him. On one other occasion he wandered away from home, but turned up again all right.

—Manager Gubbins of the Plainfield Cornet Band, says that if the citizens will contribute $20, the band will give an open air concert.

—The Postmaster General suggests to the public: "Print your name and address on the left hand corner of all mail matter. This will insure its immediate return if improperly addressed or insufficiently paid, and if not called for at the destination it can be forwarded without going to the dead letter office." And the public should remember that THE PRESS office is in good shape to do the printing suggested by the Postmaster General.

Officers of the Unitarian Church.

The trustees elected by the Unitarian Society of this city, last Thursday evening, met after the meeting and chose the following officers of the Board:

President—Job Male.
Treasurer—George D. Patten, Jr.
Clerk—C. W. Opdyke.

Mr. Henry B. Wells was elected President of the society, at the same meeting.

Wanted to Settle for Fifty Cents.

About half-past ten o'clock on Wednesday, July 10, Mrs. Leander Brown, colored, who with her family occupies a flat along the race back in the rear of Fairchild's furniture store on East Front street, ran out of the house bare-headed, in search of an officer. She met Officer Flannigan to whom she said that her father-in-law, Alexander Brown had assaulted and beaten her, and she wanted to have him arrested.

It appears that the woman was chastising her son for some wrong doing when her father-in-law interfered with the remarks, "Hold on, woman, dat's Leander's chile you're beatin'." Some hot words followed, when the alleged assault took place.

Officer Flannigan arrested Mr. Brown, and he subsequently gave bail to appear for a hearing. The next day, it is said, Alex. offered to settle the matter with his daughter-in-law for fifty cents.

Fanwood Finds.

Mr. and Mrs. John Simpson have been spending the past two weeks at Lake Hopatcong. Mr. Simpson is quite a veteran fisherman.

The Land Improvement Company have received the boilers for the water works and will have them put in at once.

Mr. Samuel Oliver left yesterday for an extended business trip.

Mr. Moore of Westfield, is having erected on South avenue a very handsome cottage which is to be completed at an early day.

Mr. Thos. Young is building a large extension to his house.

A large number of our people went to Ocean Grove, today, on the Methodist Sunday school excursion.

We noticed yesterday, Mr. Edward Brand has started out with a new hack at Fanwood. EUREKA.

A Winged Messenger from Mid-Ocean.

When Miss Bulkley and party sailed for Europe Wednesday, July 3d, on the steamship "Brittanic," they took with them to send messages from the ocean to their friends, some homing pigeons belonging to Messrs Chas. Faber, Chas Doane, and J. Hervey Doane—each gentleman sending two birds.

The steamer left New York at three o'clock P. M., and the birds were to be let off early the next morning. Mr. Chas. Doane's bird "Leander" reached home Friday at one o'clock, but it had lost its message on the journey. Monday another bird arrived home to the same loft carrying the following message from one of the party:

> All serene. Up on deck to see birds off. Perfectly grand. Sea smooth. Party delightful. Love to all.
>
> ISABELLA C. BUTLER.

The steamer was probably two hundred and seventy miles out from New York when the birds were liberated. It seems truly wonderful that these little travelers could find their way home from such a long distance on the ocean.

It will be remembered that "Leander" is the same bird that brought the message sent by the Rev. Chas. B. Mitchell, from the steamship "Servia," and printed in THE PRESS.

A Telephone War to be Settled by Arbitration.

Messrs Randolph M. Stelle, Daniel B. Roberts and Charles Rose, the latter of Elizabeth, were on June 1, appointed by Judge McCormick as a Board of Commissioners to assess damages in the matter of Herman Winter vs. The New York and New Jersey Telephone Company. The Commissioners were appointed at the instigation of the telephone company, and they will meet in the office of Mr. D. Roberts in this city, on Tuesday, July 23, at 2.30 P. M.

The trouble is said to have arisen in this way: While Mr. Winter was connected with the firm of Schepflin, Baldwin, Tweedy & Co., the firm had a telephone placed in the office of their warerooms. Mr. Winter, it is said, wanted the company to give the firm reduced rates for the use of the "phone" between this city and New York. This the company refused to do, but instead offered to make a discount, provided, however, that the bill reached a given sum, quarterly. This, it is stated, Mr. Winter refused, and ordered the telephone removed from the office. He also ordered the removal of the poles from in front of a vacant lot on Division street. The poles were left standing and Mr. Winter sued the company for damages. He was awarded $150 damages, and the telephone company appealed the case. Several other appeals were made, and the matter was finally carried to the Supreme Court, where it was said to be pending at the time the poles were cut down last Winter.

A SUBURBAN STATION-MASTER.

Station-master Brown is something of a fancier. It wasn't so very long ago that he had a handsome parrot in his office that could say "no half-fare excursion tickets" in four languages. I have been told that Mr. Brown was training this parrot to address prospective settlers and answer questions. He could already repeat quite rapidly "ten-dollars-the-first-three-months, nine-dollars-the-fourth, eight, six-ninety, per-cent five-fifty, and five-for-the-balance-of-the-year." I don't know what became of the parrot, but we don't see him any more. Well, we must all part some day, and Mr. Brown has got something else.

Some time ago there was a sign posted in the depot to the effect that strangers calling for valuable packages must be identified, which would seem to indicate that the station was becoming a repository of treasures.

Coming out from town one night at about nine o'clock, when oats had run home and night had come and the dew was cold upon the ground, I observed that a dim, religious light was casting a faint glimmer through the surrounding gloom, but it was some time before I could discover its whereabouts. At last I found that it proceeded from the very inner-most office of the station, where Mr. Brown was at work. I told him that I was a friend, and he unbarred and unlocked the doors and let me in. The scene was a startling one; on each side of the desk, and within easy reach, lay a brace of loaded pistols, a rifle stood in the corner, and a large club, with a heavy and knotted head, was leaning against the desk. Mr. Brown was guarding the valuable packages.

Now of course, no man can pass every night under such high pressure as this, and our station-master had to have assistance of some kind. There being no appropriation for a watchman, Mr. Brown has secured the services of a valuable and carefully selected dog. It is of a fine breed—some name commencing with M—Mongrel, I think it was.

The dog's name is Fido, a word which I suppose comes from the same root as fidelity, and intended as expressing his bravery and trustworthiness in looking after the company's treasure. His color is a glossy black, and the pointed ears, quivering forehead and energetic tail, are all points that tell. Fido is young yet, and occasionally he gets mixed up with people's feet in a very exasperating way, but increasing years will bring experience in their train, and so, in time, Fido may become a useful and valuable dog.

AT NEW JERSEY'S LAKE GEORGE.

The Plainfielders There and What They Are Doing.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—While the season at this popular Summer resort is not yet at its height, there is a large number of guests quartered at the various hotels and cottages, and camping parties are becoming numerous. The mammoth Hotel Breslin has a fair quota of guests, while the Lake View House, under the management of Mr. Zocks, is filled with patrons.

Among the cottages, the "Van Over" is the most popular, while Bryant's large Summer boarding house is liberally patronized. The two latter named are the resting places of many Plainfield people. At the former, Postmaster Force and wife, and nieces, Misses Minnie L. Force, Mabel Force and Emma U. King, Mr. Theodore Hardy and Mr. Wm. Williams, from your city, and Mr. John Simpson and wife of Fanwood, are, or have been the past week, guests; while at Bryant's, Messrs Chas. Potter, wife and daughter; Rudolph Titsworth, David Titsworth, John Titsworth and families, from Plainfield, have been guests the past week. Some of them are yet stopping there. Mr. Rudolph Titsworth was fortunate enough to secure a five-pound black bass on Sunday last, (he belongs to the Seventh Day Baptist persuasion), and a four-pound one today.

The fishing has been poor for the past two weeks, and bait very scarce, but such condition of things cannot last much longer, and the latter part of this month and August is bound to furnish grand sport for the disciples of Izaak Walton. The Lake is gay with boating parties, steam launches and sailing craft. Every week there is a regatta of some kind, either sailing or canoeing.

The last Sunday train brought here a number of prominent Plainfield people for the day, among whom I noticed, ex-Postmaster E. R. Pope, A. S. Horton, J. Blair and N. Duckworth. On Monday morning the smiling and pleasant countenance of Mr. Charles Smith, of West Front street, was seen to alight from an incoming train, with his gun slung over his shoulder. It was soon ascertained that he was to give an exhibition of his skill at the Keystone target traps, at Mahlon Smith's boat house during the afternoon. As he was a guest at the Van Over cottage, it soon became noised about that there was to be some shooting done, and there was quite a gathering of the guests from the various cottages and camps to witness it. Although the weather was anything but agreeable, the programme was fully carried out. Five contestants faced the Keystone trap, which was placed on the long dock in front of the boat house, the targets being thrown out into the Lake. As usual, our German friend carried off the honors of the day, he breaking 38 out of 40 singles, and smashing several pairs. The Postmaster was close on his heels, and was followed by Mr. Chaffee, of Georgia, a guest at the Bryant House. Mr. Mahlon Decker, the famous Lake fisherman, followed next. Neither gentleman had ever before shot at targets, although both are excellent bush shots. Mr. Meeks, of Newark, who has a neat little cottage here, also came in for a share of the honors. "Uncle" Burt could not be prevailed upon to shoot, although he championed Charley Smith. A large number of ladies were present and enjoyed the target practice.

The next day Mr. Smith was given a taste of Lake fishing. Arising at three o'clock in the morning, he was taken in charge by Mahl Decker, and taken to some of the best spots in the Lake where the black bass are supposed to lie in wait for Mahl's hooks. Despite the fact that the fishing is poor at present, they returned with quite a string of the finny tribe. They were accompanied by Dr. Waggoner and son Harry of Somerville, who in company with the latter's wife and child are stopping at the Van Over cottage. Mr. W. L. Force and "Jack" Simpson also went out in another boat. I am sorry to say that the two latter boats caught but four fish, in consequence, it is alleged, of one of them being a Jonah and having hoodoed the bait. Which one of them it is has not as yet been determined, but as soon as he is found out he will at once be committed to an asylum.

I forgot to say that Mr. Eugene V. Lorton, wife and child of your city, have also been guests at Van Over's the past few days, returning home yesterday. Last week there was an excursion party here every day. This week three are expected. The Lake Pavilion, under the management of Mr. Will Seitz, is liberally patronized by campers and excursionists, as it ought to be. Excellent music is furnished every evening, which is enjoyed by the many who visit this cool and pleasant place.

Mahlon Smith's boat house is the popular resort of fishermen, who are furnished there with good clean boats and fresh bait at most reasonable rates. "Uncle" Burt is always to be found there ready to accommodate and please all. Mr. Smith is completing a handsome and commodious residence here, which when completed will furnish accommodations for a large number of Summer boarders. It, and the boat house, are but a few steps from the station. We advise all fishermen who visit the Lake to go to Mahlon Smith's, where they will always find the renowned fisherman, Mahlon Decker, and a corps of able assistants, ready to show them where to catch fish.

A large Summer hotel is about being erected on Raccoon Island. Halsey Island has several camping parties located on it. Last week "Camp Guess," of Plainfield, N. J., was there. The occupants flitted away last Monday. Verily, Lake Hopatcong is well named: the "Lake George of New Jersey."

Lake Hopatcong, N. J., July 16.

Ran a Screw in His Nose.

Clarence, the three-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Schorb of East Front street, while playing about the house on Tuesday, accidentally ran a three-quarter of an inch screw and shoe fastener into one of his nostrils. Dr. Manning was obliged to put the child under the influence of ether in order to extricate the screw.

Proceedings for Divorce.

The woman who calls herself Mrs. Ruth Shackleton, wife of Joseph Shackleton of the Yellow Tavern at Bound Brook, and who recently threatened to begin suit against him for divorce, has now formally taken that action, and testimony was heard in the case Friday.

The woman says that she met Shackleton in November, 1881, and was married to him on the 21st of that month. She says he has spent $6,000, all the money she had, and that after the present suit was begun he tried to compromise by offering her $1,000.

Shackleton confesses to having fallen a victim to the woman's blandishments, but says he had never married her.

Generally the Case.

Plainfield was about the only city in New Jersey this year which forsook license for a trial of prohibition. And now comes the Plainfield CONSTITUTIONALIST with the emphatic charge that "liquor is everywhere sold in that city in violation of law, and that about the only difference is that the city does not derive any revenue from the traffic. And so it would have been here if prohibition had been successful last May. Those who desired it would have obtained just as much as they wanted, and the only difference would have been that the $4,000 which the town has received in license fees would have been taxed upon the people instead.—Exchange.

Sunday Ball Playing.

Residents in the vicinity of the Crescent ball grounds, complain bitterly of a crowd of young men and boys who indulge in Sunday base ball practice. The players not only desecrate the Sabbath by playing ball, but they use foul and boisterous language, much to the disgust of residents in the immediate vicinity of the ball field.

Special officer Hope has been detailed to break up the nuisance, and he is determined to do so, even if it takes all Summer.

At the Race Course.

There was a large attendance on the track of the Gentlemen's Driving Park Association on Saturday afternoon. The judges for the day were: Messrs J. W. Johnson, Fred Williams and O. T. Waring.

The first race was between John Hayes' "Andy," Charles Brower's gray mare and Wm. Van Syckle's "Bag Wah." "Andy" and the gray mare trotted a dead heat in 2:44, and the last named took the second heat in the same time.

In the second race there were three entries, namely: J. W. Johnson's "Lady Thistle," A. C. Vail's "Ferindale" and Charles Brower's "Banty." Mr. Vail's horse won two straight heats. Time 2:40½ and 2:41.

Probably the most exciting and evenly-contested race was the one between John Osborn's "Marcaneer," Nate Robbins' "Doctor" and Peter Osborn's sorrel mare. "Marcaneer took the first heat in 2.49 and "Doctor the second in 2 51.

The concluding event was a half-mile trial heat between "Copeland," owned by O. T. Waring and Edward Waring's "Ledger Boy" to wagon, owners driving. "Copeland crossed the line in 1.22, thus winning the heat.

EVEN THE NEWARK HEAVY WEIGHTS FALL VICTIMS.

The Crescents Shut out the O. N. T's for Eight Successive Innings.

Plainfield is becoming noted all over the State for the generous patronage of its local ball team, and no town nor city in New Jersey turns out larger crowds upon the occasion of base ball matches in their midst. Twelve spectators witnessed the game between the nine of the N. J. A. C., and the Clinton B. B. C., of New York, on the $25,000 grounds at Bergen Point, last Wednesday, while twelve hundred witnessed the game on the grounds of the Plainfield Bowling Club in this city, Saturday, between the Crescents and the O. N. T's of Newark. Plainfield is proud of her nine, and justly, too. They are playing good ball, steadily improving, and Manager Gavett is strengthening the team by every move or change he makes.

The visiting team of Saturday was composed of some of the heaviest men the home team had ever stood up against, and they were kickers from way back. They were courteously allowed two runs in the first inning, but thereafter were entirely shut out; which treatment they resented without rhyme or reason. Umpire Keller filled the position with thorough honesty, and decided every close call to the best of his judgment. The game, unfortunately, developed many close decisions, and in giving the runner the benefit, which is the justly established precedent, the O. N. T's happened to be the ones that the oftener suffered.

The Crescents started in the game, naturally, and as usual, a trifle nervous. The eyes of twelve hundred people, including three hundred ladies, were on them. They had just been promised $200 worth of new uniforms, too, and they wanted to do their best in appreciation. The new men, Smock, Cobb and Marrar, of course wanted to distinguish themselves, and Gately, who was on trial once more after a few weeks lay-off, proposed to show folks that he was a true twirler.

But the game opened very unpropitiously for the home team. The O. N. T's were first to the bat and Rummell knocked a high fly to centre field. Demarest started on a long run for it, and the scorers marked the batter as out. But something happened that will never happen again—Demarest dropped the ball, and Rummell was safe on first. He took second on a passed ball, stole third and came in on Cadmus' throw to first to put Hohn out after dropping that player's third strike. The other run was made by McDermott who got his first on balls, stole second and came in on Thornton's hit.

But after that the Newarkers were never in it. There were no more passed balls by Cadmus, nor did they steal second from him. For eight successive innings the O. N. T's went to the bat in vain—they could not get another run and only four of them were left on bases. Gately seemed to have good control of the ball and his own head, and his support was perfect.

The Crescents began their run getting in the last half of the fourth inning. Cadmus who got his base on balls, and Condon who got his on four strikes and Dolbier's error, scored and tied the score. In the fifth Smock made a base hit, stole second, went to third on Cobb's sacrifice, and reached home on the throw-in of Cadmus' fly to right field. In the seventh, Smock made another earned run on his own two-bagger and with the help of Cobb's sacrifice again. Lee and McMurray were sent to first on balls and scored on some high and lofty throwing by Rummell and McDermott. Condon who had also got around the bases, came in on a wild pitch, and the score stood seven to two.

The features of the game were the number of put outs at second base by Condon, and the base running of Smock. The latter is unequalled in this respect, and for it alone he is a great addition to the Crescents. Marrar distinguished his first appearance by a nice running catch that wound up the third inning, for which he was applauded all the way in from the field until he was compelled to take off his cap to the grand stand. All Cobb had to do, he did well. In the sixth inning the Crescents went out on three pitched balls. The first, Demarest hit to Rummell, and was thrown out at first. The second, Gately hit to McDermott, and was treated the same. The third Marrar popped up on the fly to second base.

The score in detail was as follows—the columns of figures representing respectively the times at bat, runs, base hits, stolen bases, put outs, struck outs, assists and errors:

A CLEVER SWINDLER ATTEMPTS TO WORK HIS GAME IN THIS CITY.

One of the deepest and best laid schemes at bunco steering was perfected by a dangerous swindler in this city on 9th inst., but the fellow was finally beaten at his own game, by one who is equally as sharp, only in another line of business. The particulars of the affair are these:

A man apparently about forty years of age, rather corpulent, cleanly shaved, wearing a white straw hat with broad black band, black cutaway coat and light trousers, entered a Park avenue saloon on 9th inst., as he had been in the habit of doing for the past few days, and engaged in conversation with the proprietor. He claimed to be working "up stairs" in the Scott Printing Press Works, although those employed in the office at the works, claim that the man never worked there.

He gave his name as "George Shenfield," but this, of course, is thought to be an assumed name.

The man was dressed well, and might easily have been taken for another "Murphy" of fire-bug fame. At any rate the writer was so impressed with his appearance. The fellow engaged in conversation with the saloon keeper, and finally asked to be directed to a good lawyer, stating that he "had a little business to transact." He was told that there were several excellent lawyers in the city, and he went out, only to return in a short time and ask as to the integrity and good standing of a number of lawyers in the city.

During the afternoon the man drifted about town, and finally entered the law offices of Messrs Jackson & Codington, inquiring for the former gentleman. He was told that Mr. Jackson was absent from the city, so he talked in a confidential way to the other member of the firm.

The man engaged the services of the Counsellor to protect his claim as heir to a £750,000 estate which he said a deceased uncle of his had left in England. The fellow produced an eight page letter, written on paper with broad mourning band, evidently by a woman, whom he said was his mother, and the following telegram, received at the Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph office, during the afternoon, by the man himself:

> "NEW YORK, July 9, 1889.
>
> "To Geo. Shenfield, Esq., Care of Scott Press Works:
>
> "SIR—Was delayed through sickness coming by 'Aurania'; have just arrived; am staying at Fifth Avenue Hotel. Bring Counsellor and oblige by coming immediately.
>
> "Lawyer Frank Price, from Manchester, England."

The letter was dated "Clifford Villa, Stretford Road, Manchester, England, May 21, 1889." It was signed: "Your Fond Mother, Mary Jane Shenfield." It told of the death of "your uncle, John Havens, which occurred from cancer of the stomach at the age of 87 years and five months." It went on to state how the "funeral was largely attended by members of the Manchester Unity of Odd Fellows and Free Masons, and several members of the Cotton Exchange." "After we returned from the funeral," says the letter, "Lawyer Frank Price, Queen's Counsellor and the solicitor for the estate requested us all to assemble in your uncle's library to hear the reading of your uncle's last will and testament, and I am glad to inform you that we were all joyfully surprised to hear that your uncle had not only forgiven you for the shameful way you robbed and treated him, but he has left you a large share of his immense fortune * * * To you he leaves £150,000, to be paid you within six months after proving the will in the Court of Probate." The letter further stated that £5,000 would be set aside as Counsel fees—£2,000 to be paid down immediately, and the balance at the settling of the estate.

Furthermore the letter went on to say that Frank Price and Edward Rogers would leave England on June 16, and arrive in New York on June 24. "My dear son," says the letter, "when you go to see them be perfectly sober and nicely dressed, so that Mr. Rogers cannot come home and tell your old friends anything bad. Lawyer Price will bring you a copy of the will, also £20,000 left you besides the £150,000 that was left in a sealed package by your uncle to be paid you at office, and not named in the will." According to the provisions of "the will" the property was to be divided equally between three persons—the swindler's mother and his two sisters. Continuing the paper reads:

"Now my dear son I have now something very important to tell you, and I want you particularly to understand what I am saying, and to be sure that I give you the correct information. I sent for my own lawyer Mr. Sadd of London street, and he read over the papers and explained all to me. Now, a few months back your uncle added to his will a codicil which on certain conditions leaves you a further sum of one hundred thousand pounds, but on very strict and exact conditions, but it does not affect the other £170,000 already named. Now, we all know what an eccentric old gentleman your uncle was, and how close, but of course you cannot now have a right to say a word after the shameful way you treated him, and only think how generous and forgiving he has been to you. Now the codicil reads that I am to be informed by the solicitor of the estate the contents of the codicil, and that I am to notify the same to you, and that if you comply with the terms of the said codicil, you are to receive the said £100,000, but if you do or cannot the £100,000 go to various charitable institutions. Now, you must on the very first meeting of Lawyer Price and Mr. Rogers produce and hand over to Mr. Price the diamond Masonic ring and pin you stole from your uncle."

The fellow told such a plausible story and seemed to be supported by such good proof, Mr. Codington decided to protect his interests and establish the man's claim as an heir to the estate, although he did so on the evidence the man furnished in the shape of the letter and telegram above referred to, and from the statement of a business man to the effect that the latter knew the client and knew him to be all right, Mr. Codington felt justified in looking into the matter inasmuch as "Shenfield" had advanced a small retainer. Possibly most lawyers, had they been placed in his position, would have been mulcted of a hundred or so.

Accordingly Mr. Codington and "Shenfield" took the 5:40 P. M. train to New York, and on the way down, the latter told his Counsel that upon arriving in New York it would be necessary first to redeem the diamonds spoken of in the letter, upon which a loan of $65 had been made. The two men went direct to the United States Hotel, on Fulton street, where "Shenfield" said the diamonds were. He said he would first go into the hotel and see if the man was there who had given him the loan. He returned in a few moments and said that everything was all right, but that he must have the $65 due on the stones, together with $3 additional, the interest due on the loan. He insisted upon Mr. Codington advancing him the money. The latter, however, offered to go into the hotel or have "the man" come out, but he emphatically refused to surrender the money. "That would not do," said the swindler, "if he sees you with me, he would not give up the diamonds." The counsellor was steadfast in his determination in spite of "Shenfield's" efforts to extort the money from him. Two or three times the swindler entered and emerged from the hotel, but each time he declared that nothing but the actual cash would produce the precious stones, and that he ("Shenfield") must be alone when the deal was made. Mr. Codington did not look at the matter in the same light, and was then fully convinced that the man was nothing less than a swindler and bunco steerer.

For the third time "Shenfield" said he would go in the hotel and endeavor to bring "the man" out. He entered the hotel, and that was the last Mr. Codington saw of him, although in the meantime an officer had been given a "tip" to arrest the man in case he appeared again.

Mr. Codington then went direct to the Fifth Avenue Hotel and examined the register, but found no such names as "Price," "Rogers" or "Shenfield" on the list of arrivals there.

The whole matter was a deep-laid scheme to rob Mr. Codington, but that gentleman was entirely too shrewd for the bunco steerer, who was only fortunate enough to escape being arrested. Mr. Codington was also prepared to protect himself in case of violence.

The meeting Wednesday in the parlors of the Public Art Gallery, for the organization of the 1st Unitarian church of Plainfield, resulted in the election of the following Board of Trustees:

President, H. B. Wells, and Messrs Job Male, George D. Patten, Jr., C. W. Opdyke, I. W. Nichols, Mrs. D. W. Pond and Mrs. Ruth C. Leonard.

The Rev. D. W. Moorehouse, of Brooklyn, was present to assist in the organization. It was decided that after next Sunday the services should be closed until the second Sunday in September.

Worked His Way Home and Lost an Arm.

"Fritz," the 18-year old son of Mr. Wm. Friese of North Plainfield, who was taken from his parents on account of alleged cruel treatment, and sent West some years ago, returned home one day last week minus his right arm. The youth became tired of the West and started to work his way home on a freight train. Several weeks ago, just as he was nearing Jersey City, he had his right arm cut off above the elbow, and since then, or until he returned to this city, he was confined in a hospital.

The Sullivan and Kilrain of Plainfield to Meet.

All arrangements have been made, the forfeit posted, and the training of the principals begun, for a prize fight between two well known young men of this city. One is a prominent real estate operator, and the other a builder and contractor.

The battle will be for $100 a side and will take place at a spot near the city limits, but which THE PRESS is not at liberty to divulge. Hard gloves will be worn, but it will be a fierce fight to a finish. The backer of the contractor is a very wealthy young sport who will go a big pile on his man, while those who are betting on the other principal are also men of means who are not afraid of risking a stack of skips that will reach the thousands.

Has the Rev. Mr. Richards Changed His Mind?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—I have heard it said a number of times within the past four days, that the Rev. Mr. Richards stated in his morning sermon of last Sunday that he trusted the City of Plainfield would never again grant licenses for the sale of liquor.

In the face of the fact that liquor is being sold all over this city,—every day and Sunday—absolutely unrestricted, and in over fifty places—could Mr. Richards have expressed his satisfaction with the present state of affairs as better than when only a dozen barrooms were running, paying a revenue of many thousands of dollars to the city, and closing at nights and during Sundays?

July 11. ANTI-FANATIC.

[We believe the Rev. Mr. Richards is misquoted. He has always been a rational temperance man, thoroughly convinced that high license was the greatest restriction.—ED.]

Mr. Smalley's White Pony Beats Mr. Seader's Black Skate."

A very exciting race witnessed by 150 men and boys, took place, Wednesday, between Mr. Newt. Smalley's white pony "Councilman," and Mr. Pete Seader's black skate "Banner Bearer," and was won by the former.

The distance was seven furlongs, and a straightaway course was laid out on Green Brook road near the residence of Mr. Jeremiah VanDeventer, President of the First National Bank. Mr. Frank Hand was the starter, and Messrs Joe Blatz and George Conover acted as judges. The race was for $10 a side, besides which a great deal of money changed hands in bets—the owner of "Banner Bearer," it is said, backed his horse in a big sum. The betting was 3 to 2, and 4 to 6, on "Councilman." French mutuals paid $2.25.

Jed Smalley rode "Councilman," and Will Emmons was up on "Banner Bearer." The latter, however, never had a show for the race. "Councilman" didn't start to run but merely walked fast until he reached the three-quarter pole; then he let out and passing "Banner Bearer" won with his head down by about fifty feet.

A resident of the vicinity tried to stop the race and called on the Marshals present to arrest the participants. He was earnestly advised to "go sit on a tack," but he threatens to have somebody arrested today.

Scotch Plains Paragraphs.

The other evening the Trustees of the Public Library held their regular quarterly meeting in the library rooms. Mr. A. D. Shepard presided and the regular routine business was transacted. The librarian, Mr. Robert Johnston, reported the attendance during the month of June as one hundred and sixty-seven. The chairman of the Executive Committee made the pleasing statement that the library had received various valuable gifts during the past three months. Sixty-seven books have been donated, the principal donors being Mrs. Charles E. Barnett, of Plainfield, and Mr. William D. Howells.

The large and handsome book-cases which are being put up are the gift of a friend in New York.

On the part of the House Committee it was stated that steps are being taken to provide for circulating the books outside of the library rooms. When the classifying and cataloguing is completed, some plan similar to the one in use in the Plainfield library will be adopted, and will probably be in operation very shortly.

The meeting was an enthusiastic one, and the Trustees are abundantly satisfied with the prospect.

Plainfield bicyclists are fond of taking a spin along Front street at about dusk, and often pass through the village. The roads are for the most part in excellent condition, and there are few pleasanter rides. On such occasions we frequently catch sight of the sturdy frame of Captain Martin, of the Plainfield Bicycle Club. Mr. Martin is one of the best known wheelmen in the country.

The Royal Arcanum held a full dress Star and Garter meeting last Tuesday night. It is reported that the goat was on hand and made things quite lively.

Mr. T. F. Sykes has returned from Bristol, Rhode Island, where he has been spending the week.

It is with sincere pleasure that I record the fact that Mr. Samuel P. Hall, of Scotch Plains, is now a full fledged Freshman. Mr. Hall has passed his final Harvard examinations, receiving honors in four studies. He will enter in the Fall, and during the next four years will enjoy the dignity of college life, after which there awaits him a career of usefulness and perhaps of fame.

The following are the librarians appointed for the month of July: Robert T. Johnston, July 20, 29; George L. [illegible], July 13, 22, 31; Wm. Hazell, July 24, and McCready Sykes, July 17 and 27.

SUBURBAN SAUNTERER.

Immense Freight Trade.

The amount of freight which is now being received in this city daily is getting to be something enormous. Few persons, in fact, have any idea of the vast amount of merchandise that is handled every day at the freight house here. Two drill engines are used exclusively for drilling freight and coal cars in and about the city, but they can hardly attend to the fast increasing freight and coal trade. Station Agent J. A. Haynes has perfected a system for handling freight, so that his corps of efficient clerks prove themselves capable to attend to the increasing business.

Personals of Washington Valley.

Miss Louisa Taylor, of New York is at Hilltop Cottage.

Miss Jennie E. Kitching of New York is visiting her relatives at Highland Farm.

Mr. George Reeve and wife are visiting their friends, the Misses Spencer.

Miss Mary Wright of North Eastern Pa., is on a visit to her sister, Mrs. Joseph Zeller.

The many friends of Mr. Charles Milligan will be pleased to learn of his convalescence.

Mr. Daniel Nolan, of Yonkers, N. Y., formerly of Plainfield, spent Sunday with numerous friends in the Valley.

Prof. and Mrs. J. J. Watson, with their son and daughter, of New York, spent Sunday with Mrs. G. M. Vandergrift at Oak View Cottage.

Some valuable pieces of property have been sold in this vicinity of late, to parties from neighboring cities, contemplating erecting homes for themselves.

Mr. J. August Hirschman Entertains the Ladies.

One of the pleasant incidents of last week at Hotel Netherwood, was a luncheon party, somewhat novel. It was the happy thought of a guest, who, although not amongst the youngest, yields to none in his devotion to the fair sex, and is facile princeps in all that delicate finesse of chivalrous attentions, which comes only from experience and natural talent.

The happy thought was this—to ask some of the fairest and wittiest of the maidens, to luncheon at his table; the fare to be the ordinary one—although "ordinary" is somewhat of a misnomer to any Hotel Netherwood fare; in loyalty to the law that is, no cup to grace the table but the cup that cheers but not inebriates; the feast to be mainly the feast of reason and the flow of soul.

The master of the happy thought presided with all the courtly grace of a Chesterfield, and served out the richest bon mots. It was in some respects a surprise, which to say the least, broke through the monotony of lunching day after day at one's own table.

The Chamber Music Concerts for 1889-90.

Mr. Albert Venino has already begun arrangements for a second series of Chamber Music Concerts to be given in Seminary Hall during the coming season. The unqualified success of the past concerts from an artistic point of view, assures the most brilliant results in every way for the coming ones.

These concerts, which were given on Nov. 8, and Dec. 6, of last year, and on Jan. 24 of this year, were the events of last season in cultured musical circles of city and borough society. The selections rendered composed programmes of marvelous good taste and good judgment. The Beethoven String Quartette of New York, who are unexcelled in any respect, played at all the concerts, and they have already been engaged for the coming ones.

It is to be hoped that Mr. Venino will be impelled by renewed and increased financial success in the Concerts of 1889-90, to make them a permanent feature of Plainfield's Winter seasons. Such entertainments are an attraction and a benefit to any city.

A Plainfield Lady's Father and Uncle Inherit a Large Fortune.

The will of John L. Moore, the eccentric millionaire, has been admitted to probate by Chancellor McGill in Jersey City. It is a brief document. His sons, Rev. Wm. L. Moore, of Bergen avenue, Jersey City, father of Mrs. S. A. Cruikshank, formerly of East Front street, but now of Putnam street, this city, and James Moore, a lawyer, each receive $1,000,000. To each grandchild of John L. Moore's brother Lewis is given $2,000, and to another brother's grandchildren $2,500 each. Joseph P. Lloyd of Orange, and Simon A. Cruikshank of this city, are the executors.

Rev. W. M. Moore, who now becomes a millionaire, is a retired minister and a member of the Bergen Presbyterian church. He has lived in Bergen since 1874, except a few years when he was pastor of a church in Little Falls. He is 60 and has several children. One is married and lives on Putnam street, this city, and her husband is named as an executor of the estate. A son is in Rutgers College.

John L. Moore lived to the age of 85. He was born in Hackensack. His father, Lewis Moore, was Judge of the county Common Pleas when Hudson and Bergen were one county. The son married Miss Amory in New York. For several years they lived in Hackensack, and afterwards moved to New York. His twin sons were educated at Rutgers, and William afterwards went to Princeton Theological Seminary. James studied law in New York.

John L. Moore inherited an estate from his father and also from his mother. His wife inherited unimproved New York City property, which he managed so that it became very valuable. He also made large profits in Panama and other stocks. Mr. Moore was an invalid many years, and traveled the world over, his wife and son James accompanying him. Winters were passed in Egypt, France, Algiers, Florida and other mild climates, and Summers in New York and Saratoga. Mrs. Moore died several years ago. The habit of wandering about clung to Mr. Moore, and he went from place to place with great regularity. About a certain date in June every year he would arrive at the Pitney House in Saratoga, and in September at Garrison's, opposite West Point. Later he would go to Florida. After his wife's death Mr. Moore traveled only in the United States. He died June 20 at the Pitney House in Saratoga.

W. L. FORCE, Postmaster.

—Oh, for a Y. M. C. A. building.

—Bound Brook is growing so rapidly that it will soon rise to the dignity of a city.

—Mr. E. Love's print cutting works closed down on Saturday for a four weeks' vacation.

—The Tempest Club of New York will play with the Crescents of this city, on Saturday, the 20th instant.

—This ought to be the time of year for a man to turn over a new leaf. He could stick to almost anything this weather.

—It is lawful to shoot woodcock during this month, and then they are protected until the months of October and November.

—In the natural course of events the green apple and the green melon and the small boy will soon come into a collision.

—The choir of Holy Cross church have engaged three stages for a picnic to Boynton Beach on Wednesday, the 17th instant.

—Be careful as to what you eat and drink. Keep cool, don't fret, and be very cautious. It is the season for doctors.

—Robbing the graves in the church yards or cemeteries of flowers is mean business, and the offenders should be prosecuted.

—Persons leaving town for the Summer, can have THE PRESS mailed to them regularly without extra charge, by leaving their address at this office.

—For the time being at least the school teachers are an envied fraternity. Just think of it; absolutely nothing, nothing to do for two whole months.

—The work on the extension to the Crescent Avenue chapel is progressing favorably, and will be pushed forward to completion as fast as the weather will permit.

—Those who have viewed the ball matches from along the left field of the LaGrande Avenue grounds, will be shut out by 300 feet of fence to be erected in a few days.

—Wetumpka Lodge, No. 3,491, K. of H. of this city, will install its newly-elected officers on Thursday evening, the 18th instant. Every member is requested to be present.

—New Brunswick has open-air concerts. Why can't Plainfield have them, also? Let some one start a fund for the purpose, and then let the citizens subscribe liberally.

—Mr. Fred Clark challenges any man or boy to run him any distance from eight to ten miles, but no less. He can be found ready at the corner of Front and Somerset streets.

—Excursion tickets to Lake Hopatcong and return can now be obtained at the Central Railroad station in this city, for $1.75, good from Saturday to return on Sunday or Monday.

—Now that the great prize fight is over and settled, why not put Sullivan's portrait on our new postage stamps? It is about the only way that any one can lick the fistic champion.

—The attention of the Street Commissioner is respectfully called to a hole in the roadbed at the corner of Second and Richmond streets, making traveling dangerous at that point.

—Mr. Theodore Hardy, of the late firm of Howell & Hardy, has associated himself with George W. Rockafellow, at Park and North avenues, where his former patrons will be very welcome.

—All those going off on vacation will find a good assortment of fishing tackle at A. M. Vanderbeek & Co.'s before you go. Sporting goods of all kinds. The Springfield bicycles, etc., 33 Park avenue.

—Some men try advertising as the Indian tried feathers. He took one feather, laid it on a board, and slept on it all night. In the morning he remarked:—"White man say feathers heap soft; White man—fool."

—The employees at the Central Railroad machine shops at Elizabethport, especially the old hands, complain of the treatment they receive from the superintendent of the department of motive power.

—The New Jersey Central Railroad Company, it is said, is considering plans for the establishment of a coal storage plant on New York harbor similar to that which the Pennsylvania railroad has at Amboy.

Mr. John Luther VanNeste, of East Second street, will be married on Tuesday morning of next week at Grace church, Louisville, Ky., to Miss Stella Savita Jordan. Mr. and Mrs. VanNeste will be at home in this city after August 15. Mr. VanNeste is Manager of the Western Department of one of New York's largest produce commission houses.

The Rev. E. F. Moldenke, D. D., of New York, who is spending his vacation in Washington Valley, will hold German Lutheran services in the Y. M. C. A. rooms, Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, to which everybody will be welcome. These will be the first services of the kind ever held in Plainfield. Dr. Moldenke has a large church in New York, and is an able and noted preacher.

We regret to learn of the serious illness of G. Washington Boerum. Mr. B., after attending religious services at the Friends' meeting house, corner of Peace and Third streets, with Mr. Jas. Merritt, accompanied that gentleman to his residence, where he partook too freely of watermelons, the fruit for which he has so passionate a love. He now suffers severely from the enlargement and distension of the viscera of his stomach. We trust heroic remedies will secure the survival of the fittest.

To Organize a Fishing Club.

A number of prominent business men in this city have interested themselves in the matter of forming a fishing club. It is proposed to limit the membership to twenty-five and to place the capital stock at ten dollars a share. It is also the intention of the members to purchase a steam launch and have the same housed at Sewaren. The members of the new club can then divide their time between boating, bathing and fishing.

—Politicians are already laying their "pipes" for the Fall elections.

—The dog-catcher reports that he has captured but one unmuzzled dog this week.

—There are a great many lawn tennis courts laid out in various parts of the city, and the sport is freely indulged in, particularly by the young people.

—Three four-horse stage loads of young folks, composing the choir boys of the Holy Cross church, and their friends, went to Boynton Beach Wednesday.

—The preaching of the Gospel in the tent on the grounds of Mr. Letasseur, on Chatham street, at the foot of Water, at 8 o'clock P. M., will be continued until further notice.

—There are 14,661 children of school age in Middlesex county. New Brunswick leads off with 4,635, while Perth Amboy, a city less than one-third in population, contains 1,769.

—Officer Giesse went on duty again last evening, having completed a ten day's vacation. During his vacation, Officer Giesse was on the sick list most of the time. Officer Lynch begins his vacation today, and Officer Flannigan has been detailed to do day duty.

A Year Ago.

A snow storm on Mount Washington, a year ago Thursday, formed drifts a foot deep. At Boston there was also a heavy snow storm the same evening, and a dozen yachts in the harbor were sunk.

Back From the Great Fight.

A special train from New Orleans containing the backers and friends of Jake Kilrain, passed through this city on the way to New York, about half-past 10 o'clock, P. M. Thursday. The train stopped here to allow Mr. Ernest Marx, the East Front street photographer, to alight.

The Contractor Came Down With the Price.

The School Board contracted recently for its Winter supply of coal—250 tons at $5.25—since which time coal has dropped to $5.00. But the contractor, on Monday, notified the Board that as the price had lowered he would meet it and furnish the coal at the new rate.

Give Our Girls a Treat.

The Somerville Democrat says of the West End's second baseman who the Plainfielders dubbed "Beautiful:" "Carbonnell will probably not be able to play again this year, his doctor having forbidden him taking any violent exercise. Hot weather, malaria and over-exertion have kept the little second baseman in bed since the last game. Don't cry girls! You'll often see him in the grand stand."

Send him down on the 27th and give the Plainfield girls a treat!

Concerning the [illegible].

THE PRESS stated Thursday in connection with the bold attempt made by a sharper to swindle Mr. W. R. Codington of this city out of a sum of money on Tuesday, that Mr. Codington felt justified in believing the man's alleged claim partly "from the statement of a business man to the effect that the latter knew the client and knew him to be all right."

The business man referred to wishes us to state that he jokingly told the counsellor at first that he knew the man, but soon afterward he assured Mr. Codington that he did not know him. At any rate Mr. Codington was too sharp for the sharper.

Laid at Rest.

The funeral of Sarah A. Randolph, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert F. Randolph, took place at the late home of the deceased on Elmwood place, Thursday afternoon at three o'clock. The Rev. D. J. Yerkes of the First Baptist church, of which Miss Randolph had long been a member, officiated. There was singing by Mrs. Cutter, Mrs. Bird and Messrs Runyon and VanArsdale.

Death had been quite sudden. Miss Randolph was at Sunday school the preceding Sunday, feeling in usual good health. She died the next day. Her mother and Mrs. W. H. Shotwell of North Plainfield, are sisters.

What Helps to Make up a Town.

Every growing, ambitious town is composed of three elements—those who work patriotically, vigorously and intelligently for its advancement; those who are in a state of apathy or indifference; and those who take a curious delight in discouraging the efforts of others by ridicule, by a persistent denial that any progress can or has been accomplished, and by boast of every other town beside their own. The last class are called croakers, but they are really something worse, for their opposition does not arise simply from despondency, but from that unenviable spirit which will neither act itself nor suffer others to act.

Prize Bowling.

Five members of the singing section and the same number of turners from the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein, have agreed to bowl a series of games on the Society's alley, for a gold medal offered by the President of the Society, Mr. Hugo Weigmann. The conditions are three games out of five, and the person making the highest score on the winning side will have the honor of wearing the medal.

The first game in the series was bowled on Tuesday, July 9, when the following scores were made:

The next game in the series will be bowled on Wednesday, July 24.

KILLED AT SOUTH AMBOY.

A distressing accident occurred on the Long Branch Railroad at South Amboy, N. J., 11th inst., which resulted in the death of Mr. Alexander F. Parker of Perth Amboy, for so many years a boy among the Plainfield boys, and an attendant of the public schools of this city during the long residence of his parents here.

Mr. Parker, accompanied by Mr. Arden Post of Orange, who was visiting him at Perth Amboy, started to walk across the long drawbridge in the afternoon. They had reached the draw when they were overtaken by a south-bound freight train. Thinking to avoid a long, hot walk into South Amboy, they boarded the train and climbed upon one of the cars.

Three bridges span the tracks of the Long Branch Railroad in South Amboy. The train had already passed under two of these and partially under the third when Mr. Post heard a fall behind him and turned just in time to save Mr. Parker from rolling off the car. His head had struck one of the bridge girders and his forehead was crushed in. Death was instantaneous.

Mr. Parker was a son of Captain James Parker, formerly of Plainfield and now of Perth Amboy. He was assistant to Ogden N. Rood, professor of physics in Columbia College. He was graduated with the class of '88, with honor, and, although but 21 years of age, had made an enviable record in the physical sciences.

The Death Record.

Mr. Nehemiah Randolph, an old and respected resident of this city, died at his home on West Fourth street, on Tuesday, from heart disease, aged 75 years. Mr. Randolph had been a resident of this city for many years past, and was universally esteemed by all who knew him. He leaves a widow but no children. The funeral will take place from his late residence, No. 201 West Fourth street, on Saturday at 2:30 P. M.

The death is announced of Mr. John Wakefield, a well-known resident of North Plainfield, which occurred at his home on Jackson ave., Monday night. Mr. Wakefield was a mason by trade, which business he has carried on in this city and North Plainfield for many years past. He leaves a widow and four children.

The death is announced of Elmer D., the eight-months-old son of John H. and Jennie M. Staats, which occurred at his parents' residence on Duer street, North Plainfield, about seven o'clock Monday evening.

Rebecca M. Snyder, aged eighty-five years, died at her home on East Second street, on Sunday, from paralysis. The funeral took place from the residence of Mr. Edward C. Pierson, No. 7 Second Place, Tuesday P. M., at 2:30 o'clock, Rev. Dr. E. P. Ketcham officiating. The remains were taken to New York Bay cemetery for interment.

Wedding Bells.

At the City Hall in New York city by Justice Lancaster Holme, Monday afternoon at three o'clock, occurred the marriage of Mr. Jefferson Hill of Rockford, Illinois, and Miss Malinda Jolley of Crewe, Cheshire, England. The bride is a sister of Mr. Clement Jolley of Liberty street, this city, and arrived from England on the steamer "Etruria" on Sunday.

After the ceremony the bride and groom came to this city and Tuesday they started for Rockford, Ill., their future home, and where the groom is engaged in the merchant tailoring business. The bride received many handsome and costly gifts.

A Contemporary's Bad Taste.

We are requested to contradict the statement made in the Central Times of last week, regarding Miss Alice Burt. As Miss Burt is not at the hospital for the treatment of a cancer, she and her friends feel very keenly the circulation of such a report.

It is well for newspaper men when writing of matters so personally important, to consult some authority before making any statement at all. THE PRESS of some weeks ago, told at the time, all that was necessary and true about the case. Miss Burt is still at the hospital and is out of danger. She is recovering steadily, but very slowly.

O. U. A. M. Officers Installed.

At the regular meeting of Franklin Council, No. 41, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, held in the Sons of Temperance rooms, Thursday, the following officers were installed for three months, excepting the treasurer who was installed for one year, and a trustee for eighteen months:

Councilor—Julius J. Stahl.
Vice Councilor—David S. Dunavan.
Recording Secretary—Walter N. Martin.
Asst. Recording Secretary—Charles S. Greer.
Conductor—Gilbert S. Martin.
Warden—Horace G. Adams.
Inside Sentinel—John V. Beekman.
Outside Sentinel—William A. Wilson.
Treasurer—Howard Hummer.
Trustee—James D. Anderson.

All the officers were installed excepting the Financial Secretary who was out of town.

A Specimen of a Day.

Thursday's PRESS published exclusively accounts of:

The attempted bunco swindle of Counsellor Codington.

The coming battle between a prominent real estate owner, and a builder and contractor of this city.

The coming parade of the Plainfield Bicycle Club.

The return of Fritz Friese after some years absence, minus an arm.

The arrival of the Rev. Mr. Schenck in Europe.

And lots of items of interest and information about people whom people know.

The Funeral of Mr. Smith Scudder.

The funeral took place Thursday at his late home in Fanwood, of Mr. Smith Scudder, whose death from injuries received from a reaping machine, was exclusively told of in THE PRESS.

The services were conducted by the Rev. N. W. Cadwell, pastor of the Westfield Presbyterian church, of which Mr. Scudder was a member at the time of his death.

Mr. Scudder leaves a large family consisting of a wife, one son and five daughters, one of whom is married. His first wife was a cousin of Mrs. S. F. Dunn and Mrs. Geo. W. Force of this city. His second wife, who survives him, is a niece of the two ladies mentioned above who are sisters. Mr. Scudder's remains were interred in the Presbyterian cemetery at Westfield.

Knocked Out in Two Rounds.

A couple of Plainfield sports drove over to South Plainfield, Thursday, and were "done up" in two rounds by a couple of onion weeders of the latter place. On the way over the Plainfield sports, it is alleged, spoke disrespectfully to a couple of young men who stood conversing in the roadway. The latter two followed the sports to the South Plainfield Hotel, where all hands "came together" in a two-round set-to.

One of the Plainfield men it is reported was sent to grass in the second round, and the other one knocked an onion weeder plumb off the hotel porch, along with the upright post against which he was leaning.

It is not at all unlikely that a fight to a finish for a purse of money will be arranged between the men implicated in the row last night.

Dusky Damsels in the Ring.

A prize fight of miniature dimensions took place on East Third street, about dusk, Thursday, the participants in which were two ebony colored individuals of the feminine gender. The trouble arose between the children of the two women, and ended when their mothers took a hand in the affair. A crowd numbering less than a thousand persons gathered around the pugilistic women and carefully watched the proceedings. Cries of "police," "police!" rang out from the assembled crowd, and the sight of a blue coated officer appearing in the distance, served to put an end to the fight. No gore was spilled although a considerable quantity of flesh colored wool was picked up on the battle field.

Today there was some talk of arresting the principals.

Excursion to Highland Beach.

Inasmuch as the next excursion from this city to Highland Beach is the Trinity Reformed Church Sunday school on Wednesday, July 24—it may be of interest to know the location of this new excursion resort, of which Mr. Ferd Fish, of this city, is President and General Manager.

Highland Beach, Monmouth county, N. J., is located on the Sandy Hook Peninsula, between the ocean and the Shrewsbury river, directly opposite the Highlands of Navesink, in the very shadow of the famous twin lights of Navesink. These are the first lights sighted by steamers, approaching the harbor of New York. The Shrewsbury is spanned at this point by a quaint old bridge which has served the many people who have made their Summer home among the hotels at the foot of the hills for half a century as a means of access to the New Jersey Southern Railroad station and the beach, while now it serves equally well for visitors to Highland Beach as a means of communication with the mainland, with its wealth of beautiful shade trees, grand scenery and comfortable hotels.

As a matter of course bathing is the principal attraction at Highland Beach, because there is no such bathing to be had at any other point between Sandy Hook and Cape May. The bathing is not confined to "hours," as at other resorts, which hours are regulated by the state of the tide. Bathing can be enjoyed with perfect safety by the smallest child at any stage of the tide or any condition of weather.

The charm of the whole thing lies in the fact that the ocean and river are but fifty yards apart and the bather can take a surf or a still salt-water bath.

Highland Beach possesses every advantage nature can bestow to make a perfect excursion resort. It needed but the addition of a few artificial attractions to make it at once the most available, complete and delightful resort within a hundred miles of New York for select family excursion parties to spend the day.

—The apple crop in this State is said to be short.

A Dangerous Task.

Mr. J. T. Odam, the state roofer, Thursday completed the dangerous task of repairing the damage done by lightning to the spire on the First Presbyterian church recently. Mr. Odam was obliged to work in a swinging basket, which was not only inconvenient but very dangerous at so lofty a height.

The State Championship.

Arrangements are being effected between the managers of the New Jersey Athletics, Rahway Athletics and Perth Amboy Athletics, to form a league to compete for the amateur championship of the State.

What's the matter with the Crescents of this city and the West Ends of Somerville taking a hand in the matter. Both of these teams are playing well this season, and both are worthy of a place in the league for the amateur State championship.

The Remedy Worse Than the Disease.

The other afternoon on South Second street, a clam pedler and a sewing-machine man driving in opposite directions locked wheels, and the air was blue around them in less than thirty seconds. The clam man got down in the road and dared the other also to come off his perch. The sewing-machine man lost no time in accepting the invitation, and, followed it up, by punching the shell-fish merchant a couple of times in the mouth, and spreading him out on his back.

The latter was subsequently taken into the pharmacy of Mr. Frederick A. Miller for repairs, but the blows he had received did not hurt half so much as the charge of 50 cents put on him for linament used.

Reading's Handsome Passenger Cars.

The Reading Railroad Sunday received and placed in service another instalment of the new passenger coaches built by the Pullman Car Co., of Chicago, for use on the Atlantic City Division. These cars are of special design, exceptionally handsome, and combine the latest improvements in construction and appointments. They are 60 feet in length, and each carries 60 passengers. They run on paper wheels with steel tires, the body of the car resting on a combination of elliptical and spiral springs, so arranged as to secure great ease and smoothness of motion. The interior is finished in quartered oak, carved and polished, relieved by French walnut paneling, and the seats are upholstered in silk plush of old gold color on heavy oaken frames. The latter are of the sliding and adjustable pattern, said to be the most comfortable car seat yet devised. The overhead racks and chandeliers are of solid wrought brass in artistic shapes. The retiring rooms for ladies and for men are situated at opposite ends of the car, and are provided with marble-top wash stands connected with large water tanks. The fittings of these rooms are silver plated. The general effect of the interior, owing to the style of decoration, the wide aisle and the unusually large space between seats, is to give an impression of coolness and roominess. A total of 50 of the new cars will be running on the Reading's Atlantic City Line within a few days.—Philadelphia North American.

CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER

THE PUREST AND BEST

Is made only of strictly pure grape cream of tartar, strictly pure bicarbonate of soda, and a small portion of flour as a preservative, nothing else whatever, and is warranted entirely free from alum, ammonia, phosphates, lime, and all the adulterants frequently found in baking powders. The character of materials used, their purity, and the nicety of their combination, render Cleveland's superior baking powder the most healthful and most economical in use, and it always affords wholesome, nutritious, and delicious food.

It is recommended for purity, healthfulness and efficiency by Government and State chemists, chemists of Boards of Health, and professors in institutions of learning throughout the country.

Why Should I
Go to Montana?

Great Reservation. Because 18,000,000 acres of free Government land, with a delightful climate, and equally suited for general farming and stock raising, have just been opened to the homeseeker, in the Milk River Valley and near Benton and Great Falls.

Stock Raising. Because the favorable climate and superior grasses of Montana make it the natural home of horses, cattle, sheep and other domestic animals; and because Winter feeding is not required, as stock grazes at large the year around.

General Farming. Because a rich soil and abundant Summer rains produce wheat, oats, rye, barley and the grasses and vegetables of a quality, size and yield unsurpassed.

Mining. Because Montana produces more of the precious metals than any other state or territory, and abundant opportunities remain to secure valuable properties at nominal cost.

Immigration. Because the Great Reservation is the meeting point of settlers from the Pacific Coast and from the Eastern States, and is the only extensive tract of good land left, suitable for settlement.

Business. Because the rapidly growing towns along the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. offer splendid opportunities to engage in business.

Manufacturer. Because the 1,000,000 horse-power water-power at Great Falls, the extensive coal veins, the wool, mining and grain raising resources of Montana offer exceptional opportunities to the manufacturer.

Tourist. Because the grandeur of the Gates of the Mountains, the Great Falls of the Missouri, the Giant Fountain and Continental Divide offer the most sublime and diversified scenery to be found on the Continent. "Take a Summer tour."

Why Travel by the St. P., M. & M.? Because only by it can you travel through the largest body of free land left for settlement. Because it reaches the Great Falls, with the largest water-power on the Continent. Because it reaches Helena, the richest city of its size in the world, and because it is the shortest and best route to Butte, the largest mining camp on earth. Special tourists' and landseekers' rates. Daily trains through solid to Montana. Choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. THREE KINDS!

I know
The past, and thence I will essay to glean
A warning for the future, so that man
May profit by his errors, and derive
Experience from his folly.—SHELLEY.

Three kinds of men start out to buy Clothing. The foolish man is hauled in by the bait and buys cheap shoddy clothing from the "hurrah" fake.

Then comes the thoughtless man, who wends his way to the fashionable tailor, gets a good suit, but pays a very big price for the same.

The wise man deals with some reputable manufacturer of Clothing and secures garments fully equal to those made to order at about half custom prices. Thus the wise man gets his Clothing, with quality and workmanship thrown in, as cheap as the foolish man his miserable trash. An unusually large number of wise men are being attracted to our store this Spring. Whether it's a case of "once bitten twice shy" or not, we don't know, but certainly their patronage of us does credit to their good judgment, and we don't think, once having traded here they'll be caught by clap-trap again. We know what we sell. We make it, and neither time, effort or money is spared to produce garments that will do us credit and still further establish our reputation. It's a selfish interest we take, we'll admit, but the effect is the same. It's there, and it pays both you and us.

WHOLESALE DAMMING.

Plans for the Irrigation of Arid Lands in the West.

Major Powell Has a Big Task on Hand—Corporal Tanner and His Charming Private Secretary—The Mystery Concerning Mrs. Sabin.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

The work of damming half a continent has fairly begun. It will not cease till ten thousand sturdy dams have been built across ten thousand gorges of the vast arid West, capable of impounding all the overflowing water and discharging it in timely and stimulating seepage to the thirsty barrens below.

The arid plains of the United States constitute nearly half of our entire domain, and they lie between the line of twenty inches of rainfall and the Pacific Coast. This wavy line of twenty inches rainfall, running from Bismarck, Dakota, to Corpus Christi, Texas, has been named by Prof. Willets, Assistant Commissioner of Agriculture, "the Powell Meridian" in honor of the public officer to whose hands the work of directing irrigation has been committed by general consent.

"Down with the surplus!" exclaims Corporal Tanner, referring to money hoarded by soldiers; "dam the surplus!" exclaims Major Powell, referring to water hoarded by settlers.

The work of damming the surplus water will not be prosecuted by the government, but accurate and elaborate surveys will be made leading up to it, so that the practical business of erecting dams and excavating acqueducts can be begun and carried on by States or territories, or by settlers themselves.

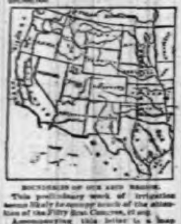
Congress last winter authorized the segregation of reservoir sites and their withdrawal from pre-emption and settlement, and hundreds of these catchment-basins have already been wiped off the books of eligibility. A prominent member of Congress tells me that, on the reassembly of that body, he will offer a bill temporarily withdrawing from settlement the whole arid region that is irrigable—not less than 1,200,000 square miles of land—far more than the entire cultivated area of the country.

This, of course, will be withdrawn only to be given again to the people, when it shall have been put in a state to be rendered fertile by water. When Major Powell, and his lieutenants, Capt. Dutton and Prof. Thompson, have determined and indicated on maps just where the irrigable lands lie, and the limits of the catchment-basins, and the amount and "duty" of the water falling within them, then settlers will probably become more allowed to take homesteads within the charmed area, and mortgage them for their modicum of fertilizing water. Whether the hard work of building the dams where the Geological Survey has outlined them and of excavating the canals of service, shall be done by municipalities or by corporations, is, of course, as yet unknown.

In a week or two the Senate Committee with Stewart of Nevada at its head, will start from St. Paul to make a tour of the arid region, accompanied by Major Powell who will visit, inspect and direct the work of surveying parties already out in the field. They will go to California and return by the Southern route, finding parties at work in almost every State and territory.

By the time Congress meets, an encouraging showing will be made, of catch-basins outlined, rivers measured, acreage estimated, and methods suggested.

Major Powell announces an estimate that is everywhere regarded as conservative, that the irrigable land of the central West, now wholly barren, will make eight States like Indiana; and Col. Hinton, an expert of the survey, estimates that twenty acres of this land, cultivated under irrigation, will produce as much as one hundred acres of land under the average Indiana culture. This would enable the whole irrigable area to support forty times the population of Indiana—say 100,000,000.



BOUNDARIES OF OUR ARID REGION.

This preliminary work of irrigation seems likely to occupy much of the attention of the Fifty-first Congress, it any.

Accompanying this letter is a map roughly giving the east and west boundaries of the arid region of the United States.

A dark haired woman, with delicate features and fair oval face, with expressive eyes, sensitive mouth and quiet, direct, gracious, cordial speech, an inch or two taller than the average of her sex—this is the woman whom Senator Sabin, of Minnesota, has divorced for [illegible] inebriety.

The mystery of the case is how a woman could have possessed such vices as are assigned to her, and have lived such a life as hers is described to have been during the last winter, and, at the same time, have shone throughout the social season and have successfully imposed on scores of women who knew her intimately and thousands who knew her socially, all of whom believed her to be of exemplary principles and habits.

I am not prepared to say that the charges made against Mrs. Sabin are untrue, or even that they are exaggerated, for I do not know the facts in the case, as Senator Sabin and his friends and her friends must know them; but assuming them to be sustained, Mrs. Sabin's talent and skill in acting a part, constitute a mystery that is almost a miracle.

The wives of three Senators whom I have seen [illegible] into acquaintance, but they say "What a consummate actress she must be! For I, who knew her most closely, who met her in parlor and at table and in her private boudoir, never suspected it!"

Perhaps her most intimate friend—her fidus Achates, if Achates can be a female—was Miss Murphy, of St. Paul, recently and long a guest of the White House. Miss Murphy, being questioned, says, "I never guessed it. I never noticed a bit of liquor around. If the story is true, I was completely fooled."

At the Jefferson Club last Saturday evening, all gentlemen, accidentally falling on the subject, agreed to give $50 apiece to have Mrs. Sabin brought out of the asylum and allowed to state her case; and they desisted from an application for a habeas corpus only when assured that she was in no need of protection, and sought the seclusion voluntarily. As far as the highest circles of Washington are concerned, the poor lady's fate seems a horrible nightmare that will not be driven away.

"Corporal" Tanner keeps "open house" at the Pension Office, and makes it a punctilious duty to see all who call and demand an interview. This keeps him pretty busy at least six hours of every working day; and then, to catch up with accumulated business, he stays till six o'clock, drives home to dinner, and generally returns in the evening. Saturday nights he stays till near midnight, so that the tired messenger [illegible] triumphantly waves a feather duster over a disemboweled desk. This is a very hard life for a man who has lost both legs and who almost always wakes with pain in the smallest hours of the night and lies awake vainly trying to bring Morpheus from some distant nowhere. If he expects to maintain his health through these four years he must learn to shut the door [illegible] to all but those who have business [illegible] to which he is [illegible] party.

He has appointed his daughter, Miss Ada, as his private secretary, but, as she is sociable and pretty and just from school, she will probably not be an persuasive breakwater against the intrusive tides of curiosity and acquisitiveness that sweep around the Corinthian columns of the great castaway and submerge the galleries and dash against the hospitable portals of the Commissioner's office.

In a recent letter I announced that the Commissioner's wife, Mrs. M. L. Tanner, would be recognized as the poet laureate of the Administration, and indicated the spirit of her versified lecture on Woman's Suffrage. I have since heard her lecture to a Grand Army Post, and I have secured some verses on the soldiers and school-boys that will be regarded as genuine poetry of the heroic type. Listen to the lament of the old [illegible]:

"Are Republics all ungrateful? Must" we [illegible] our lives,

Fourteen years ago, in the chair of managing editor of the Chicago Evening Post, I gave their first positions in Chicago to Alexander Sullivan and to the young lady who was shortly to become his wife. She was much more adaptable and versatile than he—abler, too, I thought. Her first salary was $15 a week and his was $10, and when I left the paper she had been promoted to $40.

He had had some trouble before coming back from New Mexico, but he seemed quiet and unaggressive, though earnest. He was irascible, but it never occurred to me that he was revengeful. If his manner [illegible] sometimes eclipsed his prudence, it could only be said that he shared the [illegible] qualities of his race, and that he [illegible] also their virtues. Even at that early day he showed masterful qualities, and it was an amusing feature of his newspaper work that he had the knack of being chosen to preside over meetings that I sent him to report. John Finerty, since very much of a Congressman, bothered me in the same way, mixing the forensic with the phonographic in an embarrassing manner.

W. A. CROFFUT.

MARVELOUS COURAGE.

[illegible] Coolness of an Innocent Man on the Gallows.

In a handsome mansion situated in a lonely part of England there resided, a few years ago, a maiden lady of considerable wealth, writes a correspondent of the Philadelphia Press. One morning she was discovered foully murdered. Her man-servant, named Lee, was suspected, arrested and convicted on circumstantial evidence, and sentenced to be hanged. So conclusive seemed the evidence against the prisoner that no attempt whatever was made on the part of the public to induce the Home Secretary to exercise executive clemency. The day of the execution having arrived, the prisoner was led forth to suffer the extreme penalty. The rope to be used, the texture of which was silk and hemp, had been, as is customary in such cases, tested with the aid of sand-bags, and was not found wanting. The bolt was drawn and the prisoner was given a drop of [illegible]. The rope broke. The prisoner [illegible], unaided, up the steps leading to the scaffold, and after the rope had been fixed again and the noose adjusted, the bolt was drawn for the second time. The rope broke again.

Lee was by this time considerably affected. However, after the lapse of a few minutes he again ascended, unaided, the steps, and after doing all in his power to [illegible] the nervousness of the hangman, assisted the latter in once more fixing the rope. The prisoner placed himself on the trap-door, the bolt was pulled, and the condemned man dropped once more out of sight. The rope parted for the third time. After considerable delay Lee once more [illegible] himself into the executioner's hands, but that personage and the other officials, [illegible] at what seemed a Divine interposition, refused to proceed further with the [illegible]. The facts were reported to the Home Secretary, who at once respited the prisoner, condemning him to imprisonment for life.

Three years later a woman who was Lee's fellow-servant confessed on her death bed that it was she who killed her mistress. She declared that Lee had no connection whatever with the affair, and stated facts strongly confirmatory to her confession.

Instances may possibly have occurred in which an equal amount of physical courage has been displayed, but outside of the pale of fiction there can not be cited a single instance in which bravery ever played a more conspicuous part than in the incident above detailed.

Cars Run with Sails.

A Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Telegraph was recently looking at some models in the National Museum of the [illegible] cars used in the early days of railroading in this country, when Mr. Watkins, the curator, pointed out one particular one [illegible] a mast and sail. Experiments with [illegible] cars were made on the Baltimore & [illegible] road and on the South Carolina road. [illegible] was then a serious question whether the [illegible] power on railroads would be sail, [illegible] or steam. The steam locomotive [illegible] still looked upon as an experiment. [illegible] are used to-day on a group railroad on the island of Malden, in the south [illegible]. They are, in fact, used nearer [illegible] than that, for railroad cars at Barnegat beach, when the wind is favorable, frequently ride over the road on [illegible] cars [illegible]. "The wind has a good deal to do with regulating even to-day," Mr. Watkins said. If you go to the bureau of intelligence at the Broad street station, Philadelphia, and ask whether some train, say from New York, is likely to be on time, you may be informed that it is likely to be four or five minutes late, because there is a strong wind from the west. Winds make considerable difference in the running time of trains.

A MONSTER ANIMAL.

[illegible] Was Seven Feet High, Covered with Hair and Walked Erect.

During the time the Indians were in the [illegible], a hunting party occupied a camp [illegible] of Tugalo river, in what is now Oconee County, S. C., says the Clarkville (Ga.) Advertiser. One day they all went hunting, leaving a deer they had killed the evening before at the camp. At night when the Indians returned to the camp the deer was gone, and the next day the same thing was repeated, when they concluded to leave an old Indian to guard the camp and see what [illegible] with their deer. That day the old Indian saw a monster animal come and carry off the deer, and was afraid to make any attempt to kill the monster, which was about seven feet high and walked erect like a man, hairy all over, and its mouth was in its chin and great claws on its fingers and toes. The next day a dozen of the Indians stayed at the camp, and, as usual, the monster came, gathered up the deer and started off, when one of them fired and hit it, the ball taking effect in the back. The animal dropped the deer and turned and started toward them, when the other six poured a volley into its breast and it fell dead. About three hours after that the Indians heard a noise like some one hallooing about a mile distant: "Yaho, yaho, yaho!" The Indians left the camp and [illegible]

FAIR MODERN PORTIAS.

Not Yet On the Bench But at the Bar.

A Group of Women Lawyers Who Have Many Clients—Where Bright Eyes Ought to Succeed—Woman's Legal Talent.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

Boston has a woman's club of a sort which perhaps cannot be duplicated, even in this era of women's clubs, in any city of the world. Its members are the women lawyers and law students of the Hub. This legal fraternity or perhaps I had best say sorority, meets on Saturday afternoons in a private dining room in a down town hotel, where it eats a good dinner and discusses many things besides Blackstone. Indeed, if the testimony of occasionally invited outsiders, whose masque [illegible] is not the fair Portia, is to be admitted, these lights of the bar have about as charming a series of gatherings as can be boasted by any society in the modern Athens.

In Italy there was, they say, in the Middle ages, a woman professor of law who was so beautiful that when she lectured they placed a screen in front of her that the students might not see her face and pine for love of her. No modern woman would be kept out of court by the fear of such susceptibility on the part of the jury, but in the minds of many it must be confessed that the calling and election of the woman lawyer are not as clear as the women in medicine. Nevertheless the success achieved by most of the women who have entered the profession proves that they have a place in it, and, in the West especially the woman of law is becoming the essential importance in all the varied movements in which her sex is engaged.

London has a woman conveyancer who is said to do a good business and to give satisfaction to her clients. In France a legal diploma has been awarded to Mlle. Chauvin. In Russia there are professors of the St. Petersburg faculty who lecture on law before the women's courses, though women are forbidden by the Government to engage in legal practice. This country is the only one which has any appreciable number of women lawyers.

It is only twenty years this month since the first woman made an attempt to gain admission to the bar, but the number of women lawyers has increased so rapidly that at the Woman's Congress in Washington last year a Woman's International Bar Association was formed. The purposes set forth in its constitution are to open law schools to women, to remove all disabilities of admission to the bar and the bench, to spread information as to woman's legal status and to better her legal condition. The first Board of Officers elected was as follows: President, Catharine V. Waite, of Chicago; General Secretary, Ada M. Bittenbender, Lincoln, Neb.; Treasurer, J. Ellen Foster, of Iowa; Secretary for the United States, Lelia J. Robinson, of Boston, Mass., with secretaries for all the foreign countries represented by legal delegates.

These are representative women lawyers, though the most famous practicing woman lawyer in the country is our friend Belva Lockwood, whose campaign for the Presidency on the platform of the Equal Rights Party afforded us so much innocent amusement in 1884 and again last fall. Mrs. Lockwood has gone to Europe this summer as a co-delegate with a woman preacher, the Rev. Amanda Deyo, to the International Peace Convention, but that is no reason why I should not say behind her back that she is a very clever woman who will never let her bread drop butter side down.

Belva Lockwood was a practitioner in several of the lower courts of the District of Columbia, but was debarred the privileges of the Supreme Court until she secured the passage of an act of Congress in 1879 preventing the exclusion of women. She graduated from the National University Law School and edited for some years the Legal News, published in Chicago. She has been counsel for the defense in numbers of murder trials, and has 2,000 clients who are applicants for places on the pension rolls. She is not an exceptionally clever lawyer, in spite of these achievements, having small gift of logic or power of consecutive thought, but is rather a woman of strong personality, much executive ability, and a talent for getting there on schedule time. She has a genius for advertising, and is quite aware that to address 17,000 people in a month at fair grounds, Grand Army encampments, graduates' reunions and the like, to be escorted to grand stands by torchlight processions and bands of music will make one's practice grow. Mrs. Lockwood is something more than fifty years old, is personally popular, and has a fetching way in conversation. Her hair is gray, her countenance mobile and her face expressive.

The woman doctor was born on the Atlantic seaboard and migrated toward the Pacific coast in a prairie schooner, but the woman lawyer is a true product of the Western soil. In June, 1869, Arabella A. Mansfield applied to the Iowa bar at Mount Pleasant for examination for admission as an attorney, and was received without hesitation. A year earlier Phoebe Couzins, since famous as a United States Marshal, had begun her law studies at the Washington University Law School, St. Louis, and two months later Mrs. Myra Bradwell, of Chicago, engaged in the first contest over the admission of a woman to the bar. Mrs. Bradwell's name was brought before the Supreme Court of Illinois, some of whose members were in sympathy with her cause. The point made against her was that being a married woman and hence incompetent to make contracts she was ineligible. Mrs. Bradwell pleaded her own cause in an able brief and the court shifted its ground to general disability on the score of sex. Finally, the case went to the United States Supreme Court where Senator Matt Carpenter appeared for her. The decision was adverse, though Chief Justice Chase dissented from the illiberal opinion.

Other of the earlier women lawyers were Ada H. Kepley, of Effingham, Ill., who graduated at the Union College of Law in 1870 and was admitted to the bar at her home without opposition, and Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, who was admitted to the bar in Iowa in 1872, and who was during the last campaign the most prominent Republican in the country in petticoats, being chairman of the Woman's National Republican Committee. Mrs. Foster went into a legal as well as domestic partnership with her husband, the firm name on the shingle being Foster & Foster. For years she has been distinguished as a temperance advocate. Nearly all her work for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been of a legal character. When that organization held its convention in New York last fall Mrs. Foster tried her strength against Miss Willard's on the prohibition issue and was defeated. She calls the "third party" "Prohibocrats."

Mrs. Foster is 49 years old and has a fine face with blue-gray eyes and a somewhat full figure.

Women of the law have tested their powers in other fields than that of court practice. Mrs. Waite, the first president of the Woman's Bar Association, won her prominence by publishing the Chicago Law Times, an able quarterly. She did not graduate from the Union College of Law until 1886, but had been a student of law and familiar with law practice for many years previous, through association with her husband, a prominent lawyer. Mrs. Ada M. Bittenbender, of Kansas, is better known as Superintendent of Legislation and Petition in the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union than in the court room.

Possibly the best known woman lawyer east of the Alleghanies is Lelia J. Robinson, who has an office in Pemberton Square, Boston, and who sets apart special hours for women for free consultation. Miss Robinson has written and published a book called "Law Made Easy." She entered the Boston University Law School in the fall of 1878 and graduated in 1881, making immediate application for admission to the Suffolk County bar. Under the law then on the statute books she was not eligible, but opened an office for consultation and such work as could be done outside the court room. The same year, however, a bill was introduced in the Legislature giving women the right of admission to the bar on the same terms as men. Miss Robinson was summoned before the Judiciary Committee to speak for it, and it was passed unanimously. Miss Robinson went West for a time, but returned to the Hub, where she is in a [illegible] practice.

Boston has several other women lawyers and students of law. One of those is Mary A. Greene, who graduated from the Boston University School of Law last June, was admitted to the bar, opened an office, and after less than a year's practice is [illegible] of the [illegible] lawyers [illegible] the Suffolk bar. In the law school in Boston at the present time are Mrs. M. E. [illegible], who will graduate next year, and [illegible] to practice, and Miss [illegible]. Mrs. Anna C. [illegible], a member of the Collegiate Alumnae Association and the wife of a young Boston lawyer, has been reading with her husband and will [illegible] the law school in October. Mrs. L. M. Martin, of Cambridgeport, who began to read with her husband two years ago and who is now a widow, has resumed her studies with a view to practice, and [illegible] young women are [illegible] reading with them. The [illegible] of women at the bar is clearly [illegible] in Boston.

Chicago has two practicing women lawyers. One of these is Kate Kane, who says she gets her "gall" from her French mother and her persistency from an Irish father. Miss Kane is a graduate of the law school connected with Michigan State University and has been in practice about ten years. Ellen A. Martin, also of Chicago, is a New York woman, having been born at Jamestown. She was educated like Miss Kane at the Michigan State University, after applying in vain for admission to the Harvard Law School.

Mrs. Marilla M. Ricker, who stumped California for Harrison last fall, looks like Lawrence Barrett, and is a graduate of the law office of Belva Lockwood. She is a large, vigorous and attractive-looking woman.

Mrs. Bessie Bradwell Hillyer has done all the work on the last twelve volumes of Bradwell's "Appellate Court Reports." She is a young and very pretty Chicago lawyer, but is not in active practice since her marriage.

Boston University, Michigan State University and the Union Law School of Chicago are the institutions to which women law students most resort, and of these the Western schools have graduated much the largest numbers. It can not be said that the profession has yet been generally adopted by the weaker sex, but the ability of women as actresses guarantees their success as jury lawyers, and their perseverance in debate and reputation for having the last word would seem to fit them for forensic practice.

ELIZA PUTNAM HEATON.

Maria Mitchell is said to be dying. With her will pass away one of the most remarkable women of the century. I remember the first time I saw her. The swishing of the woodbine against my window high up in the tall college building had waked me on a rainy June morning. I had wet my feet listening to the robins in the grass, when across the lawn from the round-domed observatory I saw a tall woman with white curls coming near. She wore a dress of plain black, with white collar, and her complexion was browned as if by exposure, not to the stars, but the sun. She was not a handsome woman. Her features were irregular and her appearance conveyed the impression of rugged strength and independent purpose rather than the gentleness commonly supposed to be feminine. The most noticeable thing in her appearance was the direct, straightforward look which gave a unique charm to her eyes.

The lady with me egged Miss Mitchell on to repeat a remark which people had told of her making before. "Your umbrella's too small and you ought to get breakfast in your own room, instead of taking a drenching, crossing the grounds to the dining hall on such a morning."

"And lossy time good for nothing but egg boiling?"

The story has appeared in print but it was an experience to see her straighten her figure as she asked the question.

Miss Mitchell, was not, in the usual acceptance of the term, popular at Vassar. Her standards were too high and she was too uncompromising in her horror at wasted hours. She had one trait in common with the Concord hermit Thoreau; she did not need people, she seldom entered into sympathetic relations with the students. Yet the delicate girls who were removed from the beehive of the college dormitories to the quiet of an extra room or two under the roof of the observatory always found her most kind. She made her home in the observatory with the big telescope running up through the middle, space for recitation rooms and for a cozy domestic machinery being found in the stories of the two wings on either side. Once a year she gave a dome party when the girls vied with one another in original comic verses. Miss Whitney, who succeeded to her place in the girls' college a year ago, was her favorite pupil.

The park rules require that "tennis shoes must invariably be worn" and the gathering of supple figures in blouses with loose sleeves, full skirts one ankle length and hats of all styles to suit all fancies is inspiring. A pretty creature wore yesterday a plaited skirt of yellow green serge with blouse and sash of pale yellow washing silk. Her hat was a green straw of sailor shape, bound by a yellow ribbon and her racquet was carried in a gorgeously embroidered green bag.

PRETTY SCHOOL GROUNDS.

A Constant Object Lesson to the Eyes of Every Boy and Girl.

For several months in the year a large proportion of the children of this country spend at least half of the hours of daylight for five days of the week, in or about the school-house. At the most susceptible period of life the influence of these surroundings must in the aggregate be col[illegible], concludes Garden and Forest. A neat and tidy room, with simple and cheerful decorations, will be a constant object lesson to every eye. A room with decrepit furniture upon an unclean floor, and with walls and ceiling broken and stained, will teach its lesson, too, in taste and morals, but it will be quite a different one. It is due to the health of children that they be supplied with abundant light and air. This means a detached building with ample open space about it, even in the city. Exercise is also essential to the healthy development, as well as to the happiness of children, and play is the natural and spontaneous exercise and refreshment for both their minds and bodies. A playground may, therefore, be considered a necessary adjunct to every school. Children will play wherever they have room, but it will hardly be argued that a bare space of earth, which will be dusty or muddy as the weather changes, offers every advantage that children should be able to derive from their school-grounds. If the school-room can be made to give lessons in cleanliness and order and taste the surroundings of the building should be arranged to enforce the same lessons.

That properly ordered school-grounds can aid in this direction, and, besides this, be made an important educational auxiliary in some branches of natural science, was the thesis of an interesting paper read before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society by Mr. Leverett M. Chase, master of the Dudley School, in Roxbury. Mr. Chase argued that the ideal school-ground should be separated into two distinct portions—one devoted to the purposes of an outdoor gymnasium, and the other an area of green sward, properly planted with trees, shrubs, vines—in short, a pleasure-garden for the children. They should be taught that the garden is theirs, and a feeling of responsibility for it should be encouraged. That this sense of ownership will engender such a personal interest that the exuberant destructiveness, so often manifested by school-boys, will give place to a sentiment of affection, and a desire to protect their shrubs and flowers, has been proved in many instances. If the plants are all carefully labeled and catalogued; if the children are invited to aid in cultivating them, under proper direction, they will gain much practical information as to the laws of plant-growth, and if a serious attempt at systematic instruction in certain branches of botany is connected with the care of the grounds, many lessons which it would be an irksome task to acquire otherwise will be learned without effort, and even with positive delight. From the knowledge thus gained, and the interest aroused in the school-garden, we may reasonably look for a growing love of nature—an increasing appreciation of the beauty of trees and their value. If this generation of children were reared under such influences ours would be a land of fair gardens in a quarter of a century, and there would be no difficulty in securing proper legislation for the preservation of our forests. Indeed, it is to be feared that a distinctively American forest-policy which shall embrace in its scope the wisest administration of the Nation's forests, and the most intelligent care of the farmer's wood-lot, will never be adopted until the interest and sympathy of the children are enlisted, so that they will grow up with sound views and generous sentiments as to the importance of trees and forests as an element of the National welfare.

Of course grounds sufficiently spacious for a garden can not now be found connected with every school-building, and in crowded cities large school-gardens will not be practicable. But there is room for a beginning everywhere. A narrow border along the foundation of the school-house may be made beautiful with flowers from the time when snowdrops appear until frost kills the latest aster. There are few school-yards where a place can not be found for some tree or shrub, or where a vine can not be trained so as to show its own beauty and hide some unsightly object. At all events, some house-plants can be used to brighten up the school-room and to illustrate by living examples the elementary facts in botany and horticulture. One disadvantage will be that of the teachers and trustees who must take the lead in this enterprise know so little themselves of the subjects in which it is proposed to instruct the children. The beginnings of this reform—for a genuine reform it will be—will be feeble, and much honest effort will be misdirected. Unsuitable trees and shrubs will often be selected and they will be badly planted in improper places. But the very fact that the lack of knowledge on these points is so lamentable is the strongest reason that a beginning should be made. The attempt will excite inquiry and criticism, and knowledge will come from the study and discussion thus aroused. Fortunate are those places already provided with teachers like Mr. Chase, and Mr. [illegible], master of the Gibson School in Dorchester, who, at the meeting above mentioned, added some valuable testimony to the soundness of the positions taken in Mr. Chase's paper.

A final suggestion made by Mr. Chase is worth considering in other States as well as in Massachusetts. It was that prizes be offered for the best-kept and most tastefully embellished school-grounds.

REWARDS OF INVENTORS.

Fortunes Realized from the Barbed Wire and Grain Binder Patents.

The ups and downs of inventors are remarkable, especially the ups, says W. H. Oakey in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. While acting as a patent solicitor several instances came to my notice. The barbed wire patents, which have netted fortunes to their owners, have an interesting history. The first patents were issued to a man named Kelly, living down East. About two years later a farmer of De Kalb, Ill., conceived the idea of keeping his unruly cattle in the pasture by putting short barbs of wire and then twisting it with a plain wire. This is known in the market as Glidden wire, being named after its inventor, Joseph H. Glidden. One day while he was experimenting with it a neighbor going by shouted: "Joe, you better be out harvesting your oats instead of foolin' away your time with patents." Glidden thought otherwise, and in less than two years received a bonus of $60,000, with the guarantee of a royalty on all made under his patents. For the year 1881 his royalties exceeded $174,000. The Appleby grain-binder, which, in being perfected, bankrupted the owners, Appleby, Parker, Stone and Bishop, by a loss of $17,000, eventually came to the surface with $150,000 for each of the owners, while its present owners have realized over $1,000,000. In this record, however, the fact should not be lost sight of that hundreds of inventors in this and other lines have wasted the best years of their lives, and as many capitalists have witnessed the fading of their last dollar in schemes that never panned."

Novel Escape and Capture of a Swindler.

A swindler in Vienna, who had borrowed large sums of money and had collected a great deal of jewelry which was unpaid for, knew he could not get away from the city by train, so he advertised a balloon ascension and a parachute performance. He got the balloon made on credit, also, and, in company with his wife, not only went up, but went off. His capture was as curious as his escape. That evening a pigeon came to Vienna bearing a dispatch from a correspondent to the Carrier Pigeon Club announcing the descent of the balloon and the man was soon caught.

FREEHOLDERS PROCEEDINGS.

[OFFICIAL.]

ELIZABETH, N. J., July 2, 1889.

Regular meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union, held on Tuesday, July 2, 1889, at 2:30 P. M.

Present—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Briant, Doty, Donahue, Howard, Houston, Jones, Kyte, Kleinhans, Pierson, Roll, Thompson, Vanderbeek, Van Saum, Wright, Whaley—16.

Absent—Freeholder Ward—1.

The minutes of last meeting (omitting list of bills ordered paid) were read and on motion, approved.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

From Committee on Clark township bridge:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

GENTLEMEN—Your Committee appointed at a meeting of this Board held June 5, 1889, to examine the condition of the bridge over the Robinson branch of the Rahway river, in the township of Clark, near the residence of George Bender, would report that they met at the bridge above mentioned and upon examination found it to be in a very bad and unsafe condition, liable to give way, and go down at any time while carrying loaded teams.

Your Committee would therefore recommend that they be authorized by this Board to proceed to have the present bridge replaced by an iron structure of 34 foot span and 20 foot roadway, at a cost not exceeding $800, or as much less than that sum as the same can be built for.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM J. THOMPSON,
JAMES T. PIERSON,
BRADFORD JONES,
GEORGE KYTE,
Committee.

Freeholder Vanderbeek moved the report be received and recommendation adopted.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

RESOLUTIONS.

By Freeholder Howard:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to prepare and have printed blank form of bonds to be hereafter issued for the purpose of building county roads and to be known as county road bonds.

On motion of Freeholder Roll adopted unanimously.

The Director named the following committee:

Freeholders Howard, Van Saum, Vanderbeek.

By Freeholder Whaley:

Resolved, That the bill of Charles H. Schmidt, editor of the Elizabeth Freie Presse, amounting to one hundred dollars, for publishing the county collector's report be paid.

Freeholder Donahue moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted as follows:

Ayes—Freeholders Briant, Doty, Donahue, Houston, Jones, Kyte, Kleinhans, Thompson, Wright, Whaley—10.

Nays—Director Hubbard and Freeholders Howard, Pierson, Roll, Vanderbeek, Van Saum—6.

By Freeholder Houston:

Resolved, That the committee on the Spencer street draw-bridge, Elizabeth, N. J., be authorized to expend in building the same the sum of fifteen hundred dollars in addition to the amount already appropriated, or which they have been heretofore authorized to expend.

Freeholder Donahue moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

The Clerk then read the specifications on the county road leading from Elizabeth to Rahway, which on motion of Freeholder Doty was received and adopted unanimously.

On motion of Freeholder Howard the time for opening bids or estimates for St. George's avenue road was fixed for Monday, July 29, 1889, 2 o'clock, P. M.

By Freeholder Thompson:

Resolved, That a notice specifying the work and materials, and inviting bids or propositions to perform and furnish the same for regulating, grading and paving with macadam pavement St. George's avenue through the township of Linden, from the boundary line of the city of Elizabeth to the boundary line of the city of Rahway, and also through the city of Rahway, from the boundary line of the township of Linden to the centre line of Grand street, in said city, be published for three weeks, at least once in each week, in the Central New Jersey Herald and the Rahway Advocate, and also the Engineering News and American Railway Journal of New York City.

Freeholder Howard moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Vanderbeek:

Resolved, That the County Collector be directed to advance to the engineer on county roads the sum of $637.09 on account of services rendered as shown by the bill of F. A. Dunham, engineer, dated July 2, 1889.

Freeholder Thompson moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

Freeholder Roll moved when we adjourn it be to meet on Tuesday, July 16, 1889, at 2:30 o'clock P. M.

Carried.

The following bills, audited and approved, were read and ordered paid by a unanimous vote:

CITY OF PLAINFIELD, N. J., WATER WORKS

SEALED PROPOSALS for the construction of Water Works in the city of Plainfield, New Jersey, will be received up to AUGUST FIFTH, 1889, to be publicly opened on that day at the hour of 8 o'clock, P. M., in the Common Council chamber.

Bids are so listed for water works, either on franchise plan with privilege of purchase by city shortly after completion, or after ten years, or on plan of contracting with city solely for constructing the works.

Water supply by wells or from Passaic River or other neighboring source. About twenty miles of water pipe required within city limits.

Bidders to furnish all plans and specifications of such works as they propose to build.

General specification of requirements may be obtained by addressing the City Clerk.

Time allowed for completion of works, twelve months from date of contract or passage of ordinance.

All proposals should be delivered to the City Clerk and marked, "Proposals for the Construction of Water Works in the City of Plainfield, N. J."

The Common Council reserves the right to reject any or all bids.

O. B. LEONARD, City Clerk.

AN ORDINANCE

Relating to vaults and cisterns in the streets of Plainfield.

The inhabitants of the City of Plainfield by their Common Council do enact as follows:

SEC. 1. That no person shall construct any vault or cistern in any street, except by and with the consent of the Common Council, or the committee on streets thereof, and then only on the payment of such sum as shall be from time to time established by resolution of the said Common Council, and in all cases the same shall be completed and furnished within the time prescribed by the said committee on streets under the penalty of twenty dollars.

SEC. 2. That all vaults shall be constructed of stone or brick, and the grating or opening into the street shall be within twelve inches of the coping or area in front of the house to which said vault shall belong or within twelve inches of the curbstone, under the penalty of twenty dollars to be paid by the owner or person making or causing the same to be made.

SEC. 3. That no person shall remove, or cause, or procure, or permit to be removed, or insecurely fixed so that the same can be moved in its bed, any grate or covering to the opening or aperture of any vault in the city of Plainfield, under the penalty of ten dollars.

SEC. 4. That the last preceding section shall not be construed so as to prevent the removal of any such grate or covering; provided, the aperture of such vault, during the removal of such grate or covering, shall be enclosed with a strong box or curb, at least twenty-four inches high; and in no case shall such grate or covering be removed and left off the opening except while said opening is being continuously used, for the purpose of passing anything through said aperture.

SEC. 5. That no person or persons shall suffer or permit the aperture or covering to any such vault in the streets or sidewalks of the city of Plainfield to remain open for any period between sunset and sunrise the next morning, under the penalty of ten dollars.

SEC. 6. That all grates to vaults shall be made of iron, the bars whereof shall be three-fourths of an inch wide and one-half of an inch apart, or such vaults shall be covered with patent vault lights or iron, under a penalty of ten dollars, to be paid by the owners thereof or the occupant of the house to which the same shall belong.

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of every owner or occupant of any lot in the city of Plainfield during the construction of any vault or cistern in any street, and also during the use of any portion of any street for temporary storage of building materials, and also during the making of excavations in any street, and also during the obstruction of any street for any other purpose, to keep and maintain a passage way over the sidewalk in front of said premises for the width of five feet, if the sidewalk be of that or greater width, and if not then for the entire width of said sidewalk in a condition passable and safe for the travelling public, under penalty of fifteen dollars to be paid by the owner or occupant thereof for each offense, and the further penalty of ten dollars for every day the same shall be continued in condition not passable and safe as aforesaid, after being notified by due process of such fact.

Approved by the Mayor July 2, 1889.

JOB MALE, Mayor.

Attest: O. B. LEONARD, City Clerk.

THE KING'S DUST.

"[illegible] shalt die," the priest said to the King;
"[illegible] shalt vanish like the leaves of spring;
Like the dust of any common thing
One day thou upon the winds shalt blow!"
"Nay, not so," the King said. "I shall stay
While the great sun in the sky makes day;
Heaven and earth, when I do, pass away.
In my tomb I wait till all things go!"

Then the King died. And with myrrh and aloes,
Washed with palm-wine, swathed in linen bands,
[illegible] in [illegible]-gum, and under guard
Of his steadfast tomb, they laid the King.
Century fled to century; still he lay
Whole as when they hid him first away—
Sooth, the priest had nothing more to say,
He, it seemed, the King, knew every thing.

One day armies, with the tramp of doom,
Overthrew the huge blocks of the tomb;
Arrowy sunbeams searched its chambered gloom,
Bedouins camped about the sand-blown spot.
Little Arabs, answering to their name,
With a broken mummy fed the flame,
Then a wind among the ashes came,
Blew them lightly—and the King was not!
—Harriet Prescott Spofford, in St. Nicholas.

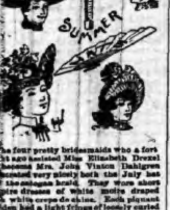
PRETTY JULY MILLINERY.

Flower-Laden Chapeaux as Worn By the Summer Girls.

Seaside and Country Marvels in Posies and Mulls—The Lace Hat and the Catogan Braid—The Sailor Hat's New Estate.

COPYRIGHT, 1889.

The July hat with its low crown necessitates a complete change in the dressing of the hair. No more locks brushed up and piled on top of the head, leaving the nape of the neck uncovered. The head is now free, the hair dressed low, scarcely an aigrette of curls rising above the forehead; loose plaits or ringlets often fall at the back over the shoulders. What the Psyche knot was to the summer girl of 1888, the catogan braid is to her of 1889. The simple, loose plait looped low in the neck and fastened with a ribbon or a single pin of silver or gold goes equally well with the sailor hat on an outing or the skeleton of wires covered with puffs of tulle which constitutes the flower-laden chapeau, the hat of the afternoon.



The four pretty bridesmaids who a fortnight ago assisted Miss Elizabeth Drexel to become Mrs. John Vinton Dahlgren illustrated very nicely both the July hat and the catogan braid. They wore short Empire dresses of white moire draped with white crepe de chine. Each piquant maiden had a light fringe of loosely curled hair on her forehead, in spite of the oft-pronounced decree that there are to be no more bangs. The rest of the wavy mass was combed straight back, braided in a long, fluffy loop that touched the shoulders and thrust through with a golden dagger whose hilt was studded with gems. With this picturesque and juvenile coiffure, which accords with the season's picturesque and juvenile gowns, was set a broad low hat of white felt of the style the lovely and graceful Hading left us, piled with long and heavy white ostrich plumes.

The sailor hat we have always with us and an olive-skinned maiden with wicked eyes and winning dimples, at the Staten Island Athletic Club on regatta day, displayed its new estate and powers. Her hair was left loose in the old-time popular fashion, its black masses drifting about her shoulders. A single creamy-yellow magnolia blossom in its setting of waxy leaves caught the flowing curls back from her face. The brim of the black ship sailor hat was rather narrow, and the crown, instead of being made of straw, was left open and filled with loose folds of yellow crepe meeting in a round crepe rosette in the centre. A black bird balanced behind, his tail and the tips of his spread wings pointing saucily forward. Black and yellow are the club colors, and the hat was matched by a fan of yellow ostrich feathers, on one plume of which perched a jetty-winged humming bird.

Mrs. Langtry's hats are among the objects of interest to Long Branch cottagers. She has taken the house of Miss Hattie Russell, the actress and a member of her troupe, and sat on its veranda a day or two since in a white Directory gown. The whole front of the white silk underdress was covered with gold braiding. The coat was of fine white cashmere of the new pattern with revers turned back all the way about the neck and down the fronts, braided with gold and looking deliciously cool. A long scarf of white gauze was tied at the throat and the wide lace trimmed ends filled the space between the coat fronts. The flat pockets were set very far back, adorned with large mother of pearl buttons and braided in gold. To complete the outfit was a tulle hat, frail as a butterfly's wing but quite as lovely. Broad-brimmed and flat, the front was brought into a poke shape and the wire frame was covered with some four thicknesses of white tulle, puffed full on top and shirred loosely about the face inside. Pond lilies carelessly twisted into a garland by their long, brown stems formed the trimming, and over these walked dragonflies, with shimmering, irridescent wings.

Mrs. Langtry can play sweet simplicity very prettily, and when she walks on the beach of a morning it is often in a broad flat leghorn encircled by a simple ribbon which waves in long streamers behind. On such occasions she follows or leads the "lambs" and braids her hair in a shining flat catogan loop hanging below the nape of the neck and pinned by a broad-shafted arrow.

Ever since March we have been getting ready for the genuine gauzy field flowery July hat and, behold, it is here. It is absolutely laden with blossoms. Roses, honeysuckle and azaleas have been favorites for a month past, and as the season changes so must the posies, and the only field flowers of mid-summer, the poppies, small yellow sunflowers, blue corn flowers, sweet clover, chickory, tropic meadow lilies, the blue iris, the white arrowhead, wild morning glories, mallows and meadow grasses are to be seen. Fruits, also, are coming back as fashionable decorations, and currants and cherries hang lovingly, cheek by jowl, from the same brown twine to puzzle the gardener who looks for congruity in millinery. Nuts are coming a little later, and bunches of hazelnuts and chestnut burrs have already appeared. In the spring there were butterflies, but the summer girl cared for nothing but devil's darning needles and small reptiles, things which hint at the abandon, the touch of recklessness which gets into us well along in the vacation season.

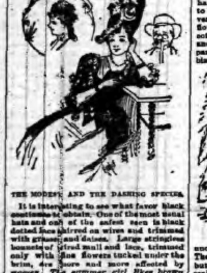
JULY VANITIES.

A dashing woman with a peculiar grace to her long, lazy, half shut eye attracted much attention one race day at Sheepshead Bay in a big black lace hat with a slightly drooping rim which had a rakish bend at one side. Black plumes shaded it, and a black scarf falling from it was drawn around on the left shoulder outlining the white throat where a string of silver beads gleamed. A peasant cloak of black transparent lace enveloped her figure and the fullness of her gown was confined at the waist by a heavy chain of old silver. She bet indolently but shrewdly and she always won.

A score of dainty conventional bonnets, very small, very flat, mere coronets of flowers, divided by a wisp of crepe or tulle or twists of velvet ribbons, the ends of which did duty for strings, all in shades of green or gray, old rose or ecru, and then the eye sweeping the grand stand lit on a tall slender girl with a lot of fair hair caught with gold pins fold on fold against her head, reaching from crown to neck, in the fashion affected by young Mrs. Blaine. On these blonde coils was set a turban of black tulle, the sides toward the front being stiffened by black velvet and cut in the shape of bat's wings meeting duskily just above the brow. A few small sparkling black and steel beads gleamed from the darkness of the crown, the whole bringing out the pink and white skin with an effect that was almost startling.

Some very pretty hats were noted on the tennis grounds the afternoon the finals were played in the tournament in "gay little Orange." One particularly noticeable feature of many was the pretty fashion of setting a spray of posies under the rim just in the fluffy curls of the front hair. The afternoon affords a fine study of ribbons. As the season advances it is in every way likely that ribbons will largely supercede flowers as hat and bonnet garnitures. Flowers are ruined by a breath of sea air or a touch of damp or fog, while the superbly brilliant color effects always brought out in late summer can be obtained in the new ribbons in far more substantial material. Meantime the hat of white silk muslin worn by a tiny scrap of a blush rose woman was quite enticing. It was drawn upon slender wires and trimmed with white feathers and a small spray of pink Malmaison carnations matching the real blooms twisted in the belt of her gown. That same gown was rather out of the common order, and suggested something butterfly-like and aerial. Silk muslin like that on the hat was let into the seams at the back, and brought in loose sash ends over the shoulders and tied demurely upon the bosom, the long ends hanging on the skirt, making a combination of a nun and a fairy, which many people seemed to find pleasing.

A pair of wide questioning girlish eyes looked out from a black mull bonnet of the old fashioned deep cape bonnet shape, newly introduced and shirred round and round on wires in the style of our mothers' little girl days. It had no trimming but a spray of fine white flowers and a bunch of black bows.



THE MODEST AND THE DASHING SPECIES.

It is interesting to see what favor black continues to obtain. One of the most usual hats and one of the safest seen is black dotted lace shirred on wires and trimmed with grasses and daises. Large stringless bonnets of shirred mull and lace, trimmed only with fine flowers tucked under the brim, are more and more affected by women. The summer girl likes brown twigs roughly woven into a flat rustic hat, trimmed with wild pink roses. The yachting girl takes to white felt trimmed with white wings and ribbon bows.

ELLEN OSBORN.

Business Women's Dress.

The business women of New York are actively discussing the style of dress best suited to self-supporting women. With competition in every line daily growing keener they find that they cannot afford to be hampered by their clothes. The woman who makes a success in any occupation is not the woman who is a bundle of nerves. An unyielding bodice which prevents full deep breathing, the high "dog" collar which is heating in summer and rasps the neck all the year round, the absence or inaccessibility of the pocket in which to carry the articles which business life requires are sources of annoyance and nervous irritation. It is not long since one of the largest working girls' societies of the city adopted the blouse waist and straight gathered skirt as club dress for the members. Mrs. Jenness Miller, the successful dress reformer, has among her costumes an office dress for business women, the principal features of which are a full Fedora vest front of surah silk with short jacket of fine wool, and straight undraped skirt laid in wide box-plaits in front and gathered on to the waist behind. Another dress which Miss Mary L. Seymour, the successful type-writer and stenographer is advocating, is a modification of the Directoire gown, with seven pockets, almost as many as are owned by that lucky creature, the boy with his first pantaloons. Four of these pockets are inserted in the vest, one for the watch, one for a pencil, two for car tickets and small change. Under one of the panels on the right side is a long pocket for the purse and handkerchief. Two pockets for memorandum book and card case are tucked away among the rear draperies. When the owner has another dress made she proposes to add an eighth pocket on the left side for keys and miscellaneous belongings. Think of such luxuries, ye women, who have no pocket at all, but carry umbrella, handkerchief, three bundles and a baby in one hand, while you hold up your skirts, open doors and pay fares with the other.

COMFORTABLE CAMP LIFE.

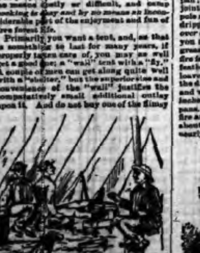
What Provisions, Cooking Utensil, Etc., Are Necessary.

How to Build a Fire That Will Warm the Interior of the Tent—The Best Method of Cooking Game and Fish. Other Valuable Suggestions.

COPYRIGHT, 1889.

The number of persons who leave the cities for a few weeks during summer to enjoy the novel and healthful delight of "camping out" increases annually and would doubtless be yet larger but for the baleful ignorance generally prevalent concerning its modus operandi. Those who have never tried it are very liable to have exaggerated ideas of its cost and difficulties. To commence with, the outfit actually necessary is small and simple. The proper provisioning of a camp is by no means costly or difficult, and camp cooking is easy and by no means an inconsiderable part of the enjoyment and fun of free forest life.

Primarily you want a tent, and, as that is something to last for many years, if properly taken care of, you may as well get a good one; a "wall" tent with a "fly." A couple of men can get along quite well with a "shelter," but the superior size and convenience of the "wall" justifies the comparatively small additional outlay upon it. And do not buy one of the flimsy muslin ones that are very imperfect shelters while they last, and soon wear out, but a good "duck" tent with a "fly" of lighter body. Next, your cooking apparatus is a most important essential. By no means permit yourself to be beguiled into taking along an oil stove. It is a thing that inevitably leaks, no matter what the dealer may say to the contrary, and by some infernal fatality—explicable only by the little understood law of "the innate cussedness of inanimate things"—always dribbles its evil-smelling contents on your blankets, or, worse yet, on your provisions. Take along with you a couple of alcohol lamps, of that kind that afford good big flames. They do not cost much and may come in very handily for small cooking or making coffee in the tent during exceptionally bad weather, or for quickly and conveniently getting up an early breakfast. But, remember, they are only for emergencies. As a rule you must do your cooking by an open fire of wood coals. And, by the way, do not carry your alcohol in bottles or demijohns, but in tight tin cans. Eschew glass as far as possible in your camping outfit.



IT RAINED AND THEY HAD NEGLECTED TO DIG A TRENCH AROUND THE TENT.

You want a good sized iron pot for making stews and soups in; a "Dutch oven;" two sheet iron mess pans, one of them with three long, low "ears" riveted on its edge; two frying pans, or three, of different sizes, so that they will nest together; two wire "broilers;" a big galvanized iron pot and two tin pails; one coffee pot and one tea pot of heavy tin or "granite" ware. Have iron "bails" on the two big pots and riveted handles and spouts on the coffee and tea pots, but no handles to stick out and be in the way on any of the other utensils. Use a pair of blacksmith's pliers to handle them with about the fire. Get a couple of stout iron spoons with handles cut off to three or four inches long and cylinder sockets soldered to them, so that you can put stick handles to them when wanted of any length you desire. One stout meat fork and two keen butcher knives, one large, the other small, will be all you will need. For tableware there is nothing better than bright, new clean tin plates, cups and spoons, and nothing is less expensive. Plain wooden-handled knives and forks, of course. You want pepper and salt holders with double tops, the under ones perforated, and for them tin is as good as anything. Cayenne pepper you had better keep in a strong bottle well corked.

The selection of provisions to be taken along depends so largely upon the supplies probably obtainable subsequently and the tastes of the persons concerned that it is difficult, if not actually impossible, to give any specific instructions. If you are going where there is a reasonable certainty of getting an abundant supply of game or fish, you will, of course, take a smaller quantity of meat with you than you would require if that were problematic or improbable. One thing you will have to bear in mind is that the appetites to be provided for are pretty sure to be very good. The essential supplies are flour, corn meal, pilot bread, salt pork, coffee, tea, sugar, salt, pepper, potatoes and onions. The flour should be the "prepared" kind, which is handy for making biscuit, requires no monkeying with the uncertainties and is easily understood. The corn meal ought to be fresh, but if it is not, should be either scalded or slightly roasted—according to what is to be done with it—before use. Pilot bread must not be neglected. It does not mould, is nice, nutritious, always ready and can be made the basis of several very good and easily prepared dishes. Be careful in selecting your salt pork to get that which is dry, firm and sweet. You want your coffee ground and packed tightly into air-tight, screw top, tin cans, a pound in each can. The salt pork is not meant to be itself eaten to any considerable extent, but for cooking purposes is useful and indeed necessary in certain dishes.

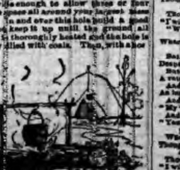
FLOPPING THE FLAPJACKS.

It is at all events always better than the tried out lard that you buy in cans. In almost all the places where lard comes into service in camp cookery, pure olive oil would be infinitely nicer, cleaner and more healthful. And it is not severely expensive. You can procure it in tight tin cans for about $2.50 per gallon, and that the best.

Opinions differ as to whether whiskey is an essential or not. Some persons take a few gallons for use in case of snake bite.

A primary requisite when you get into camp will be a fire upon which to cook your food. One person should get to work at building it immediately, while the others are raising the tent, ditching around it, cutting spruce or hemlock branches for the bed, erecting a table and cleaning out the spring. Here is the best way to make a fire for camp cooking. Have two solid green logs, 6 feet long and 12 or 14 inches in diameter, one side of each flattened so as to support utensils. Lay these logs together at one end and about a foot apart at the other, making a narrow V, with the flattened sides uppermost and the open end of the V to windward. Between these logs start your fire with paper, splinters of dry wood and dry twigs. And, by the way, have a plentiful supply of matches, not the fancy "parlor" variety, the heads of which become soft in damp weather, but stout old fashioned "brimstone" ones, and keep them in a strong glass jar or tin can with a water-tight screw cap. Only feed your fire as fast as the fuel is consumed brightly, and increase gradually the size of the sticks you put on it, using dry hard wood if obtainable, and in a little while you will have a pile of clear glowing coals. Not until then will your fire be fit for cooking over. While it is reaching this point, you may profitably busy yourself with planting firmly in the ground, say eight or nine feet apart, in a straight line with the longitudinal centre of your V, a couple of strong posts, forked at the top, supporting a straight pole between them at such a height that, when your S-shaped iron hooks are placed upon it, the pots hung on them will be almost down to the logs. When your fire is good, each dish, cooked over the coals may, when done, be set on one of the logs to keep warm until all are completed. The apex of the V is a good safe place to keep the coffee pot hot.

You will want two other kinds of fires. The one just described is for cooking things just over it. But it is not well adapted for roasting or cooking hoe-cakes. For that special service, drive two stout stakes in the ground four feet apart and [illegible] three feet high; pile against these two or three green logs five feet long and high enough to reach the top of the stakes, like a wall; and against these, on the windward side, build your fire. In front of it, set your bread or hoe-cake on edge against a flat stone, or pan; or, if you want to roast, hang the joint, bird or beast by a bit of wire from a pole supported on crotched sticks, with a dripping pan under it. Never try roasting over a fire, but always in front of it, unless you are fond of scorched, smoky, burnt-grease scented meat. Your third kind of fire is for cooking game—scaled, furred or feathered—"hunter fashion," for baking loaves of bread and baking beans. Dig in the dry ground a hole twelve inches deep and wide enough to allow three or four inches space all around your largest mess pans. In and over this hole build a good fire and keep it up until the ground all about is thoroughly heated and the hole is nearly filled with coals. Then, with a hoe if you have one, scoop out most of the coals. Now your fire is ready for cooking but from this point your proceedings must vary according to what you propose to cook. Let us suppose that it is a fish or a bird. If you are in the neighborhood of a trout stream you will be likely to find in its bottom, somewhere near, a bed of creamy or blue clay. Dig this out with your hunting knife and work it with water into a stiff batter or soft dough. Having taken the entrails out of your fish or bird (unless it is a woodcock), roll it in that dough until it is completely encased in a clay mould half an inch thick. In this condition lay it down on the coals in the hole and draw in coals and hot ashes, and a layer of earth over it so as to cover it deeply. Then if the thing to be cooked is large, start a small fire over it and keep burning steadily until the cooking is done. The time requisite for that is a little longer than would be required in a good kitchen range, but is so dependant upon the quality of wood used, the length of time the fire has been heating the ground, the dampness of the clay envelope, and the fire maintained above, that only a certain measure of experience and good judgment can inform you, with any exactitude, when the moment shall have arrived for you to rake out the dinner. Where you cannot possibly get clay; you may wrap your game in wet brown paper and bed it down in a mass of fresh grass, leaves, or sea-weed, if you happen to camp near to salt water. The sea-weed is only preferable where fish, clams, oysters, lobsters or crabs are to be cooked.



HOW TO HANG THE KETTLE.

You may take it for granted that some portion of the time you are in camp, there will be heavy rain and long continued drizzles, when the air will be humid and cold in the tent, and if you go to the out-door fire for warmth, your clothing will be saturated, your eyes filled with smoke and you will only get one side of you warmed at once, anyway. To provide against this, dig a trench 18 inches wide and of the same depth across the space your tent is to occupy and cover it with flat stones and earth, to a depth of 3 or 4 inches. Slope out one end so that you can conveniently poke long sticks into it for fuel. At the other end build up a chimney 5 feet high with crossed sticks and mud, which you may finish with a barrel both for style and good draught if you want to. The first dry days during which you are going to be out of the tent all the while, raise its sides and start a good fire in that underground furnace to dry well the ground above it. Then hoe out the ashes, pile in splinters, twigs, sticks and split logs in readiness for another fire and let it alone until the evil day of east wind and drizzle comes upon you, when the application of a shovel of coals from the cook's fire, or a blazing newspaper, to the fuel will speedily convert your tent to a bower of such comfort as will make even a wet day in camp seem a few.

HISTORY OF A SONG.

An Anecdote Which Is as Touching as It Is True.

How the Veteran's Wife Wearily Waited "Where the Willow Makes a Shade"—Rhymes Written at the Request of General Sheridan.

The fact has been widely and truthfully printed that General William T. Sherman dislikes to hear the tune of "Marching Through Georgia." It is not that he is unmindful of the fame which his Georgian march made for him, but that on every occasion when a band of music plays knowingly in his hearing they feel in duty bound to render "Marching Through Georgia," and he has heard it so many, many times that it has become tiresome. He listened attentively, however, the other evening to a war song with the making of which he had had something to do, writes the New York correspondent of the Kansas City Star. There was once a dinner at the Ohio Club, in Fifth avenue, and Generals Sherman, Sheridan and Carr were there. Stories of curiously wounded men were told, and one of the narratives was by General Carr, and it related to a soldier in the Second New York Volunteers, of which Carr was Colonel at the outset. In a battle a piece of an exploded shell struck the man on the head and gave him what would ordinarily have proved a fatal wound. He lay insensible among the dead for several hours, nobody supposing that he was alive. Those who went to him found gripped in one hand a small portion of a letter from his wife. In this she spoke of a furlough which had been granted to him, and which he was going to use for a visit to his home, his health being poor. She wrote affectionately of their wedlock, reminding him of a willow tree under which they had done some of their courtship, and told him that the day for his arrival she would meet him there. In the hurry and confusion he was left lying with this paper still in his grasp. Night fell upon the battle-field with the dead unburied and the living busy with the defense of themselves and care for the wounded. In the morning the bodies of the slain were hastily buried in a trench. It was supposed that our soldier was among them; but he was not.

During the night he had revived and wan*dered away.* Word was sent to his home that he was dead, and this was regarded as beyond doubt, but as a matter of fact he wandered off to a distant hospital, remained there unidentified until his wounds healed, and was discharged utterly without memory of the past. It happened that he retained the merest scrap of his wife's letter, but without name or place left on it. This he retained, and with a vague knowledge that it was from his wife, who was waiting for him somewhere, he wandered here and there over the country for four years. Then mere chance or a shadowy recollection of his home led his tramp to the spot where his wife had promised to meet him. It was the willow tree close to his old home, and there he actually found her. The shock of joy and recognition nearly if not quite cured him of his malady.

General Carr told the story touchingly, and it made a pathetic impression upon his hearers. One of them was a rhymster, and turning to him General Sheridan said: "You ought to make verses out of that."

"It should have music, too," General Sherman suggested. "It ought to make a splendid song."

The rhymster promised to undertake the job and to get a friend to compose an air, with the proviso that the three Generals mentioned should get together to hear it sung. The words that resulted were as follows:

WHERE THE WILLOW MAKES A SHADE.

The last flash of battle, the last glint of gun,
Lit lurid a blood-trampled plain;
But twilight was waiting, when carnage was done,
To throw a pall o'er the slain.
'Midst them lay a soldier nigh unto death,
With agony bravely borne;
Fainting and bleeding, and gasping for breath,
For a shell had his head had torn.
A letter he drew with strength all sped,
And to read it an effort made.
"I will wait," his wife in the writing said,
"Where the willow makes a shade."
Though his mind was blurred and memory dead,
Those words from his heart could not fade;
"I will wait," his wife in the letter said,
"Where the willow makes a shade."

On the day and the hour when the soldier held
His fond distant wife's letter fast,
She stood at the tryst tree, nor feared he was felled,
Till the time for coming passed.
He lived, but to wander far and long,
In his head a ceaseless pain,
A sense of quest and of going wrong—
Half thoughts of a wounded brain.
He knew that he sought a home and mate
By her call that his love obeyed—
No name and no place—only: "I will wait
Where the willow makes a shade."
Though his mind was blurred and memory dead,
Those words from his heart could not fade;
"I will wait," his wife in the letter said,
"Where the willow makes a shade."

Where the willow was drooping its leaves of tears
Sad a woman as at a grave;
Despairing had followed the hoping of years,
But this hour to tryst she gave.
A veteran came tramping along the lane,
And he walked as in a daze;
An instant—then in a flash he was sane,
And joy was his only craze.
"My wife!" he cried, with a quick embrace,
And with kisses of love delayed,
"You have waited here," he said, "at the place
Where the willow makes a shade."
Though his mind was blurred, and memory dead,
Those words from his heart could not fade:
"I will wait," his wife in the letter said,
"Where the willow makes a shade."

General Sheridan died before these verses were musically arranged. General Carr underwent a severe surgical operation some weeks ago for the removal of a cancer. It was in [illegible] apartment that a half-dozen friends, including General Sherman, assembled to hear the song. The singer was a professional vocalist, who gave effective expression to the story of the tramp veteran, and it was a sight to see the two Generals listening raptly to the melodious strains of the war story which one of them had told.

Two Maine Snake Stories.

Here are two startling snake stories from Maine. The first comes from Waterville, where the post-mortem examination of a horse that died from unknown causes revealed in its stomach a "snake four and one-half feet long, with head and eyes perfect, six inches in circumference, and the color of blood with the exception of a white stripe on the back." Another snake came from the stomach of Mrs. Frank Kenny, of Portsmouth, N. H., who was in Biddeford under medical treatment. In August, 1886, at a camp meeting in Alton Bay, she drank water from a brook, and afterward became ill. She was treated for cancer of the stomach, but stoutly insisted that something moved within her. The other day, by means of a powerful drug, "a light-colored snake twelve and three-eighths inches long was disgorged from her stomach, and she has gone home happy."

TERRIBLE CALAMITY.

A Flood Drowns Eight Out of a Family of Eleven Persons.

Captain Newton, Faulkinbury, Deputy United States Marshal, tells the Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette the following story: On his trip to Conway and Van Buren counties the other day he learned that during a heavy rain-storm in that section of the State a colored man named Emmerson had the misfortune to lose his wife and seven children in a flood. As near as he could learn there had been a tremendous rain near Clinton, the county seat of Van Buren County, on the upper Red river. Emmerson, who is an old settler in Van Buren County, was with his family in his house when the storm was raging. After an hour's rain the water gradually flooded his house, and fearing danger inside he gathered two of his children in his arms and made for the door to escape. As the door opened a huge log afloat dashed in the entrance and knocked the little ones from his arms. They fell at his feet into the swift current and were lost.

He then took up two more, one in each arm, and succeeded in getting out with them safely, telling his wife to follow with the others; but in attempting to escape in the same manner the mother, with two children in her arms and three clinging to her dress, was carried down with the flood and drowned. The father and two children, the only ones left in a family of eleven, escaped with their lives.

The night was dark and the father, with the only two survivors of his large family, stood in water above his waist clinging to a tree for several hours, and when the waters subsided in the morning a search was made for the dead bodies of the mother and seven children. They were discovered scattered here and there for a considerable distance around the place, their clothing having caught in the underbrush, and the bodies were held fast in that way. Two were found in the garden lot a short distance from the house, where they had been carried by the force of the water, and others as far as fifty yards from the house.

A HABITABLE HACK.

An Ingenious Idea of a Road-Car for Summer Excursions.

A. J. McMaster first conceived the idea of getting up a road-car for summer excursions into the country a number of years ago, says the Buffalo Courier. He gradually evolved its many conveniences from out his inner consciousness till last fall, when he had the body built in this city. The remainder of the vehicle was built at Lockport, where it was put together, and painted and christened the Niagara.

The car weighs one thousand seven hundred pounds. It is a trifle longer than a hack, but not as heavy, owing to there being very little iron-work about it. The woods used are ash, cherry and whitewood. In front is the driver's seat, which, by turning over deftly, discloses two oil stoves and all the paraphernalia of a miniature kitchen. Behind this is a little compartment where are arranged, with a compactness truly remarkable, drawers for dishes and provisions, a washstand, water for drinking, a closet, and a reversable table. The rear compartment is separated by a sliding door set in a regular partition. Here is found the living room. Red plush seats run along the sides; at night the backs may be raised, a screen let fall, and behold two sleeping-rooms with a couple of berths in each. Beneath the lower berths are lockers for additional provisions. On the floor are handsome rugs and at the end original hand paintings. Curtains rustic with a homelike air and camp-stools furnish seats around the festive board. Below is slung the driver's bed in a sort of patent hammock, while oil and tools are suspended at his feet. To be appreciated the car must be seen.

The car was built simply as a pleasure car for Mr. McMaster, and he has never had it patented as an entirety, only a few of the devices being covered.

HIS MAIDEN SPEECH.

What the Prince of Wales Said Upon His First Public Appearance.

The earliest public appearance of the Prince of Wales as a speaker was at the Royal Academy banquet, May 2, 1863. It was in the old rooms at Trafalgar square, when Sir Charles Eastlake was president. The public mind was full of mingled sorrow and pleasure at two recent events—the death of the Prince Consort and the marriage of the heir-apparent. In replying to the toast of his health, the Prince of Wales spoke very briefly, but with the good sense and good taste manifest in all the public speeches: "Sir Charles Eastlake, Your Royal Highness, my Lords and Gentlemen: It is with the most contending feelings of pleasure, pride and sorrow that I rise to return you thanks in the name of myself and the royal family for the kind terms in which you, Sir Charles, have proposed our health, and for the very cordial way in which this distinguished assembly has received it. I can not on this occasion divest my mind of the associations connected with my beloved and lamented father. His bright example can not fail to stimulate my efforts to tread in his footsteps; and whatever my shortcomings may be, I may, at least, presume to participate in the interest which he took in every institution which tended to encourage art and science in this country, but more especially in the Royal Academy. Adverting to my marriage, I beg you to believe how grateful I feel for, and I may be permitted to add how sincerely I appreciate, the sentiments you have expressed in reference to the Princess. I know that I am only speaking her mind in joining her thoughts in mine on this occasion. We neither of us can forget the manner in which our union has been celebrated throughout the nation; and I should be more than ungrateful if I did not retain the most lasting, as well as the most pleasing, recollection of the kind expressions and reception which my attendance at your anniversary meeting has evoked this evening."

Story of a Keg of Nails.

A Hartford (Conn.) lady tells this true relation concerning her ancestor, who was a direct descendant of John Eliot, the great missionary and scholar. This lady lived in New Haven, and had occasion to send to Boston for a number of kegs of nails, New Haven at that time (about 1765) not producing these necessaries. In due time the kegs arrived, and, on opening them, it was discovered that one was filled with Spanish dollars. The family wrote to the Boston merchant, telling him that one of the kegs held something more valuable than nails. He replied that he had bought them for nails, and his responsibility therewith ended. Well, they were kept among the family treasures for many years untouched and unclaimed until the death of the head of the house, who, in her will, ordered that they be melted and cast into a communion service for the New Haven church, which was done, and it is still probably in use.

Wonders of Philosophy.

The polypus, like the fabled hydra, receives new life from the knife lifted to destroy it. The fly spider lays an egg as long as itself. There are four thousand and forty-one muscles in the caterpillar. Hook discovered fourteen thousand mirrors in the eye of a drone; and to effect the respiration of a carp, thirteen thousand three hundred arterial vessels, veins, bones, etc., are necessary. The body of every spider contains four little masses pierced with a multitude of imperceptible holes, each hole permitting the passage of a single thread; all the threads to the amount of a thousand to each mass, join together when they come out, and make the single thread with which the spider spins its web; so that what we call the spider's thread consists of more than four thousand united.

PRINCIPLES.

It is indisputable that business methods and material developments have undergone a radical change in this country within the past fifty years.

Steam and electricity have wrought a widespread and wonderful revolution in human affairs, and they are still working on the line of new achievements.

It is folly to assert that such changes are in the main antagonistic to the welfare of mankind.

The practical triumphs of science and mechanism have been signally and to such an extent, that their prediction half a century ago would have savored of lunacy.

Yet there remains a fact equally indisputable and as fully important, and that is, the principles of freedom, embodied in our system of government, the undisputed end of vital moment.

Men, manners and methods may change, but right principles never die.

They are everlasting.

The Government of the United States was established as a plain, honest and effective means of protecting and preserving, with equal and exact justice, all classes of people and all departments of trade, industry and labor, and to exemplify the dignity and enduring worth of popular sovereignty, the right and capacity of men to govern themselves for the general public welfare.

That was the spirit of the Declaration of Independence and the animating purpose of the American Constitution.

The patriotic founders of the Republic never for a moment imagined that politics would degenerate into a scramble for partisan spoils and power.

That revenue measures would be permitted to accumulate surplus funds in the treasury, far beyond the legitimate needs of government, and for extravagant expenditures.

That laws for the enrichment of special and monopoly interests, largely at the expense of the toiling masses, would ever discredit the national statute books.

Nevertheless, such is in effect the political condition of affairs at the present time, and denotes aught else than public health and security.

Principles live as worthy of observance now as ever.

To trample them under foot, for any possible consideration, is to court defeat and disaster.

To faithfully maintain them against every species of opposition, is to honor the past, provide for the future, and to lay an acceptable offering upon the altar of present duty.

Would that political rectitude, regardless of partisan name, now led the march and wielded the sceptre of supremacy.

Who Will Help Entertain the Poor Little Ones.

Two or three of the ladies of Plainfield are intending to entertain some of the children sent out by the Fresh Air Society. If others wish to do so, and will send within a week to Rev. C. L. Goodrich, 23 West Seventh street, their address, the number and sex of children desired, the length of time for which they will take them and the date, all arrangements will be made.

It is guaranteed that the children will receive a physician's examination for cleanliness and absence of everything contagious or obnoxious.

A Summer Traveler Tells of What He Sees in Praise of Netherwood.

A correspondent of the Richfield [illegible], the gem of all summer resort journals, says: "Netherwood Hotel is situated on Netherwood Heights, overlooking the city of Plainfield. It is built entirely of brick, surrounded by spacious piazzas, affording a superb view of the surrounding country and the Orange Mountains. Beautiful lawns surround the hotel, and grand old oaks and pines cluster about the lawn. The hotel contains 175 spacious, handsomely-appointed rooms, 50 of which are bathroom suites. It is furnished with all the modern conveniences—electric bells, speaking tubes, and a new Otis elevator, and a perfect system of steam heating. Its close proximity to New York, express trains running half hourly, morning and evening, and making the trip in 45 minutes, render it convenient for business men and their families. The neighborhood of Netherwood is proverbial and well attended by its permanent residents, who have erected elegant and superb residences upon these charming heights.

"Mr. Frank E. Miller, proprietor of the hotel, belongs to the younger generation of hotel men. His thorough fitness for the position is too well known by the traveling public to need comment. His courteous manner to his guests, combined with his zeal and energy, place him in rank with the leading hotel men of the country. The chef who presides over the cuisine is an artist, therefore the table is all that could be desired. The dining room is a spacious apartment capable of seating 300 persons comfortably," and is handsomely furnished. Pianola, the chef of this department, served seven years at Delmonico's. The office is under the guidance of Chief Clerk Col. Frank W. Whiting, whose long experience in the hotel business, combined with his courtesy, has made him popular. The excellent orchestra is under the leadership of Hon. Richard Stoeber. The hotel has about 125 guests and will probably reach 200 by Saturday, and with the excellent prospects may be predicted of a brilliant season. The drives are superb throughout the country. In connection with the hotel is a commodious stable and livery, with ample room for 50 horses."

The correspondent continues, "In conclusion I desire to give you a brief description of the apartments occupied by the proprietor and his charming wife. You enter their apartments on the parlor floor. The first is Mrs. Miller's boudoir or reception apartment. The ceilings are about 12 feet in height; the walls are covered with blue and gold paper; the hangings are made of Oriental fabrics, windows, [illegible] and portiers; a grand old clock stands in one corner of the boudoir imported from London over 200 years ago; on the floor in front of the clock is a beautiful rug, made by the grandmother of Mrs. Miller, now over 80 years of age. This is a marvelous piece of handiwork. Another antique is the chair of Mrs. Miller's grandmother. This chair is known to be 150 years old. Persian rugs cover the floor. Furniture of exquisite design is placed about the room. Cases of books by old and modern writers, among them rare and valuable works, silver plate and goblets of rare and antique pattern. In the centre of the room is a [illegible] reached by winding stairs, which lead into the sleeping apartment, which is a lofty room furnished in exquisite taste. In this room and the boudoir are some rare engravings and etchings."

Where is This?

Janitor Hope had the windows of the Bryant school building wide open Friday, for ventilation, when a tired pigeon flew in and perched on one of the desks. The bird was so exhausted Mr. Hope had no difficulty in capturing it.

It was a handsome homing numbered 1667 X. It is being taken care of awaiting an owner.

Printed Catalogue of the Public Library Wanted.

It is an important matter of public service that the Trustees of the Library should have catalogues printed giving a list of the books in the shelves for reference and circulation. The additions to the library recently have been printed in THE PRESS in full, and these lists are cut out and preserved by the public, but the people have no means of knowing whenever they want to, what other books have been purchased for their entertainment and benefit.

New Suits to Sweep Clean.

Black caps like those worn by the "New Yorks," the Worlds Champions at base ball, will grace the heads of the Crescents this week. The nine were measured for their two-hundred dollar suits, last week, and they are to be done by to-day.

Besides black caps there will be black stockings, black belts and black letters on a light gray cloth of which the shirt and trousers will be made. The shoes will be of Kangaroo leather, soft and of the latest style, costing alone six dollars a pair. The boys will wear the suits in practice to break them in, every evening before the game with Somerville.

Shooting Game Out of Season.

Mr. Percy C. Ohl, President of the "New Jersey Game and Fish Protective Society," is a terror to the pot hunter and violator of the game laws. Last week he caught a young lad with a dead half-grown rabbit under his coat, which he had shot with a double barrel gun he was carrying. After securing the name and residence of the party he was allowed to go for the present, with the assurance that his case would be brought up for prosecution by the Society.

The heavy penalty imposed by law for those illegally killing game would have a salutary effect on those youngsters who are allowed by their parents to carry a gun out of season and slaughter song birds and game contrary to law. We refrain from publishing the name of the lad who was caught in the act by Mr. Ohl, and trust that this may be a warning to him and others.

Tennis at Fanwood.

The lawn tennis tournament of the Fanwood club which was postponed from the Fourth, took place on Saturday. Prizes were offered for ladies' and gentlemen's singles. In the former Miss Julia Neely beat Mrs. J. H. G. Mills 6-0 6-0.

Miss M. B. Backhouse beat Miss Jean Poole 6-1 6-0.

Finals—Miss M. B. Backhouse beat Miss Julia Neely 6-2 6-2.

Gentlemen's singles preliminary round.

A. T. Pendleton beat C. W. Smith 6-0 6-0.

A. D. Sheppard, Jr., beat H. C. West 6-0 6-0.

Burrill Sheppard beat R. R. Duyckinck 6-3 6-0.

F. H. Moore beat Harry Kyte 6-4 6-1.

Dr. A. H. Oliver beat A. P. Poole 6-5 6-3.

H. Carter beat Mr. Bolton 6-4 6-1.

Gentlemen's singles will be finished on Saturday, July 27.

In the evening the club gave a progressive euchre party at the club house. Prizes were won by Miss Poole and Mr. E. H. Rowley.

They Amused Themselves With [illegible].

Probably one of the silliest exhibitions of ball playing ever witnessed, was the match between the Metropolitans of New York, and the West Ends of Somerville, on the grounds of the Morristown Driving Park, Friday afternoon. Big posters all along the line of the Morris & Essex railroad, and stuck up in every available spot in the neighborhood, announced the game with the statement that the West Ends were the "Champions of New Jersey."

In spite of the rain quite a number of spectators assembled, including many from Somerville and Plainfield. The game was played entirely through the nine innings, with the players thoroughly drenched and up to their ankles in mud. At the finish the score stood ostensibly 8 to 0 in favor of the Mets, but could easily have been 50 to 0 the same way.

It was not a match game in any way. The Mets hit Harkins as they pleased and dropped their long flys in any spot that was vacant. After knocking out eight runs in the beginning of the game without an effort, they amused themselves with the Somerville employes for the balance of the game. They did not run even to first base, but merely got out as quickly as possible so as to have the West Ends at the bat again and while them around in the mud as they would try to run the bases.

If the West Ends are the "Champions of New Jersey," as they advertise themselves, what are the Crescents, each man of whom plays more good ball individually than the whole Somerville nine? By the way, speaking of the "Somerville" nine, the Somerville part now consists of two home fielders, Davenport and Frelinghuysen. Even Conklin is gone from first, and Carbonell from second.

BOROUGH COUNCIL MEETING.

Messrs. Emmons, Needham, Bettman and Smalley, constituting a quorum of the Borough Council, met in special session Friday night, and fixed the Collector's tax levy as follows: for street lights, $2,000; for fire department purposes, $1,100. The latter amount will also pay off a $500 bond, together with $150 interest.

Mr. N. B. Smalley, Ch'n of the Street Committee, submitted the following report of work done on the streets, which was accepted:

To the Honorable Mayor and Council:—Your Committee on Streets would report as follows: At the beginning of the first work done this year, your committee determined to have as much of the appropriation go into crushed stone as it was possible to get, and the following figures will show how well that was done. The cost of grading and repairing the various streets and Green Brook road, filling in on Grove street and other repairs was $196.90 of which $36.25 was chargeable to Grove street and Green Brook road. Westervelt avenue was then macadamized at a cost of $492.26, of which the labor cost $75.26, the stone and carting of the same $417; the property owners paying 50 per cent. of the whole cost, leaves the actual cost of that avenue to the borough, $201.13. Jackson avenue came next with a cost of $1374.91, of which the labor cost $272.42, stone and carting $1102.94. We received from the property owners and dirt sold $215.80, leaving the cost of that avenue to the borough $960.11. On Somerset street, we have exceeded the appropriation a trifle because the delay in receiving the dressing made it impossible to know just how far to go with the second size. For labor we expended $161.83, for stone and carting $643.16, making the total cost less dirt ($21.60), 777.39, all of which we respectfully submit. N. B. SMALLEY.

Accompanying the report was a financial statement, showing these figures:

Total receipts	$2,701.06
Total expenditures	2,372.[illegible]
Balance	$[illegible]

Next Saturday's Team.

The nine that will wear the Crescents' new suits, and stand up against the West Ends of Somerville, next Saturday, will probably be: Gately, pitcher; Bowers, catcher; McMurray, first base; Condon, second base; Lee, third base; Oatman, short stop; Haydon, left field; Demarest, center field; McLaughlin, right field.

Temperance Day.

Wednesday, August 7, will be Sons of Temperance day at Boynton Beach, and the members of the Order will assemble from all parts of the State and other places. Addresses will be made by Rev. A. G. Lawrence of Boston, Edward Carswell of Camden, Rev. John H. Hick, Secretary of the American Temperance Publication Society, and Gen. S. C. Ransom. The divisions of this city will be well represented.

The Barry Boy Heard From.

THE PRESS told July 17, of the sudden disappearance of Cornelius Barry, a fourteen-year-old lad, from his home in Siger Alley. Next afternoon the following telegram was received at THE PRESS office:

July 18, 1889.

Coleman House, Asbury Park, N. J.

DAILY PRESS OFFICE:

Barry boy applied for work Tuesday. Haven't seen him since.

CHAS. P. KEARWOOD.

The Prosperous Summer Opera.

"The Oolah," presented by Francis Wilson and Company still continues its unprecedented record at the Broadway Theatre, N. Y., and the beautiful house is crowded nightly in spite of July weather and the exodus to the Summer resorts. The opera will begin the twelfth week of it prosperous run on Monday, July 22, and the management state that its receipts have been thirty per cent. larger than those of any Summer production ever given in New York. It is surprising to find a theatre in these midsummer days filled with an audience whose interest and appreciation are as great as can be seen on a night in January, and Francis Wilson has clearly demonstrated to his fellow managers that there is good big business to be done in New York in Summer time if one has only the pluck, tact and discrimination to provide the right kind of amusement for the thousands of stay-at-home people and the strangers who congregate there.

There is so much that is bright and mirth-provoking in "The Oolah" that its auditors find no dull moments in the opera from the beginning to the end, and both eye and ear are charmed by the succession of scenes which pass in review, as it were, while they are enjoying their comfort in the cool and elegant Broadway. The 100 performance will be given in the middle of next month and it is intended that the mementoes for that occasion shall exceed in richness and value any souvenirs that have ever been presented to an audience in America. At least so the managers represent them, and thus far there have been no idle boasts put forth by Mr. Wilson or the Broadway management. In fact Wilson has ably won his success without resorting to any of the fictitious, blustering methods so common in these days of flash advertising.

THE GUBERNATORIAL FIGHT.

"There is now little doubt" says the Trenton True American, "but that Leon Abbett will be the successor of Robert S. Green in the Governor's chair. E. F. C. Young, of Jersey City, is his only opponent, and his chances are not to be compared with Abbett in the convention. There are a number of candidates on the Republican side, but Senator Nevius will probably be the successful man. The railroads want him, and General Sewell has only to crack his whip and the deed is done. General E. Burd Grubb, ex-Mayor Magowan and John Kean, Jr., are also candidates, but their chances are not worth speaking of."

This is an important election because of the large patronage at the disposal of the successful man. All the most important offices in the State will become vacant during the term. Among these are the following: Secretary of State, Attorney-General, Clerk of the Supreme Court, Keeper of the State Prison, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, two Justices of the Supreme Court in place of Justices Scudder and VanSyckle, three Lay Judges of the Court of Errors and Appeals, a District Court Judge for Newark, three members of the State Board of Assessors, an Inspector of Factories and Workshops, in place of Lawrence T. Fell, Law Judge for Camden, Essex, Mercer, Middlesex, Monmouth, Passaic, Somerset and Sussex counties; Prosecutors of the Pleas for Bergen, Burlington, Cumberland, Hunterdon, Ocean, Passaic, Salem, Union and Warren.

Lay Judges will have to be appointed in the following counties: Atlantic, 2; Bergen, 1; Burlington, 2; Cape May, 2; Cumberland, 1; Essex, 1; Gloucester, 1; Hudson, 1; Mercer, 1; Middlesex, 1; Monmouth, 3; Morris, 1; Ocean, 1; Salem, 1; Somerset, 1; Union, 1; Warren, 1.

The first named offices have large salaries attached to them, and those who want the positions will do some hard work in the campaign. This will add interest and vim to the contest.

PROGRESSIVE EUCHRE AT NETHERWOOD.

The first progressive party of the season at Hotel Netherwood took place evening July 17, and a pronounced success of course. The brilliant party of 64 who took part, filled the spacious parlors as they were gathered in quartettes at the euchre tables spread about.

The prizes were unusually handsome, and cost about one hundred dollars. They were selected by Mrs. James R. Plum to whom is also due the credit of getting up the party. The prizes evidenced good taste and judgment.

The first prize for ladies, an elegant lamp, was won by Mrs. W. Yelland; the second, a pair of costly pearl mounted opera glasses, by Mrs. F. H. Richardson, and the third, an elaborate fan, by Mrs. W. E. Smith.

Mr. W. E. Smith won the first prize for gentlemen, a silver-mounted umbrella; the second, a silver cigar box, was won by Mr. A. E. Benary; and the third, by Mr. Clarence Smith.

The consolation prizes were won by Miss Florence Lummis and Mr. W. E. McCready. Those who played were:

Mr. James R. Plum, Mrs. J. R. Plum, Mr. F. H. Richardson, Mrs Richardson, Miss Richardson, Benj. R. Lummis, E. C. Kirk, Colin S. Carter, Mrs. C. L. Dana, Mrs. Jos. E. Spencer, Mr. Jos. E. Spencer, Mr. F. Martin, Mrs. F. Martin, Mrs. Oliver B. Brigman, Mrs. Geo. W. Grossman, Mrs. M. Benary, Mr. Albert E. Benary, Mr. C. A. Myers, Mrs. C. A. Myers, Mr. Clarence E. Smith, Mr. W. E. Smith, Mr. V. R. Smith, Mrs. W. V. R. Smith, Mr. Geo. C. Wood, Mrs. Wood, Mr. S. H. Tobey, Mrs. S. H. Tobey, Mr. E. J. Haney, Mrs. E. J. Haney, Mrs. Wm. R. Lummis, Mr. Chas. A. Lummis, Miss Florence Lummis, Miss Ella Lummis, Miss Carrie Plum, Mr. Weber, Mr. Weeks, Mr. S. E. Buchanan, Mrs. S. E. Buchanan, Mrs. H. D. Brewster, Mr. H. D. Brewster, Mr. Yelland, Mr. H. T. Stillman, Mrs. J. W. Gillespy, Miss Gillespy, Miss Lydia S. Gillespy, Mr. J. Aug. Hinchman, Mrs. Yelland, Miss Yelland, Mr. F. E. Miller, Mrs. F. E. Miller, Mrs. Farlee, Mr. W. E. McCready, Mrs. W. E. McCready, Mr. H. W. Martin, Mr. Jas. R. Plum, Jr., Mr. F. C. Vanliendt, Mrs. F. C. Vanliendt, Mr. G. W. Farlee, Mr. Geo. W. Grossman, Comte de Vermont, Mr. A. P. Cumming, Mr. J. F. Douglas, Miss Jackson, Mr. Walter M. Smith, Mr. Arthur C. Rice.

Mashed His Fingers.

Charles Belknap, a young man aged about twenty-years, who is employed as an apprentice at the Scott Press Works, had the misfortune to lose three of the fingers on his left hand, just before closing time, Monday, when his hand was caught in the machinery and three of the fingers were horribly crushed.

The injured man was taken to Dr. Manning's office in a carriage, where it was found necessary to amputate the fingers, Dr. M. B. Long assisting in the operation. Later he was taken to his home on New street.

PLAINFIELD'S ORGANIZATION OF THE GENTLER SEX.

An Association of Women for Intellectual and Social Culture—Its Officers, Members and Committees—Papers and Lectures of Last Year.

The Monday Afternoon Club, of Plainfield, organized in 1888, and incorporated in 1889, is a select organization of the women of the highest standing in the city, associated together for intellectual and social culture. The membership is limited to one hundred, and each member of one year's standing may propose one member annually.

Honorary members are elected at the discretion of the club. Members may bring to meetings, as guests, non-residents only. Persons who are not members are admitted to the afternoon and evening lectures by paying the prescribed fee. The annual dues are five dollars.

The regular meetings of the club are held on the first and third Mondays of each month, at 3:30 o'clock P. M., from October to May. The exercises are arranged and directed by the Executive Committee. This Committee also arranges plans for study, and the subject for discussion is given out at least a month in advance. All the members are required to prepare themselves on the subject, and when notified must take part in the discussion.

The papers and lectures of last season, 1888-89, and those who prepared and delivered them, were:

Matthew Arnold and his works. Oct. 1st, 1888. Biographical Sketch, by Mrs. John Erskine. General Criticisms of Arnold and his Works, by Miss Isabel Tweedy. Oct. 15th. Mr. George Wharton Edwards is the only man who so far has been admitted to the list of honorary membership.

Millions Made by a PRESS Advertisement.

The man who thinks it does not pay to advertise should look into the facts a little more clearly. Recently a settlement was made in the Royal Baking Powder firm, and the retiring member drew out $2,300,000 as his share of the property. This represented a total value of the plant of more than $4,600,000. Aside from the inherent value of the commodity, all this is the result of judicious newspaper advertising. This firm advertises continuously in THE PRESS and The Constitutionalist. It has made many fortunes and will make many more.

A Plainfielder Pardoned.

The Court of Pardons held a lengthy meeting Friday and finished up all the business before them this term. Arthur Ogilby, the New Brunswick embezzler, whose sentence of four years expires next month, was granted a pardon, and his fine of $500 was remitted. Ogilby was Cashier of the Dime Savings Bank in New Brunswick and embezzled a large sum of money. A petition was presented to the Court from the counsel for the bank, asking that the fine be remitted, and letters were presented, showing that his health was not good. Ogilby will leave the prison this morning.

Thomas Conway of this city, sentenced from Middlesex county for atrocious assault and battery in June, 1888, for two years, was also pardoned Friday.

BASE BALL BABBLE.

It is reported that the Somerville team has added to its list of employees, four members of the New York Metropolitans for next Saturday's game. If the Crescents are defeated by such means, it will reflect no credit on Somerville but make the glory of Plainfield's fight shine forth all the brighter. Plainfield will win with its own team of local players, or not at all.

The Managing Committee of the Bowling Club that has in charge the affairs of the ball nine, have decided not to fence the grounds this Summer. The season is so far advanced, and the weather so treacherous, it would be bad policy to assume so great an expense this year.

Saturday's grand stands will be fifteen cents as usual, but those who want seats must go early. A few hundred camp stools in addition will be provided. The game will be called at four o'clock if it does not rain too hard.

One of the greatest nuisances about the Crescents' ball grounds, is the fact that smoking is allowed on one of the grand stands. Ashes from vile smelling cigars and cigarettes are blown about, landing on the backs and heads of those seated on the lower tiers.

A Matter of Principle.

The League scheme has not yet been definitely settled. The Rahway club has refused to join as has also the Crescents of Plainfield. It is to be hoped another strong club can be secured, as the scheme is one that would benefit all the clubs participating. If the fourth club does not come in the three clubs will play out a schedule.—Somerville Gazette.

The reasons the Rahway and Plainfield clubs refused to join, are: first, they have games scheduled for the balance of the season and are bound in honor to play those games. Second, they are well supported by a home patronage that amounts to more in attendance at each game than the West Ends attract in probably the entire Summer.

The West Ends are already being criticised among the amateur nines of the State, as ready to throw off an arranged game when it suits them. If they join the proposed "league" they will violate long standing agreements to play with other clubs. This the Crescents have too much principle to do now, no matter how much they may be willing to join a league at the beginning of next season.

But the most ridiculous part of the item quoted above, is the intimation of the three clubs—Bergen Point, Somerville and Perth Amboy—having a State championship series among themselves. As Plainfield has already beaten Somerville and as Rahway can probably defeat Perth Amboy in five innings, what will the championship title stand on?

ENTIRELY CONSUMED.

At about 4 o'clock Friday morning, Andrew Wilke, who occupies a house at the corner of Raymond and Mountain avenues, North Plainfield, was awakened by suffocating smoke in the room where he was sleeping in the second story. He was all alone in the house, his family being out of town. He found the house afire in the upper part and immediately started out for assistance.

He aroused the family of Mr. George Liesignolo, but found no telephone there. Mr. Marx, another neighbor, sent him still further out of the way where he, however, discovered a police alarm box on a district telegraph pole, but he had no key to open it. An hour or more after the fire started Mr. Wilke got communication with this city by telephone from Mr. Charles Hyde's.

Chief Doane was called up and with his Second Assistant, James Martin, went over the brook and aroused Chief H. J. Martin of the Borough Department. The Plainfield officers then drove to the scene of the fire and arrived just ahead of Warren Engine Co., No. 1, which turned out well manned, and with dispatch. It was then too late to be of any assistance. The house and its contents were entirely destroyed. Mr. Wilke had not a chance to remove any of his belongings, which, however, were covered by insurance. The house belonged to the Washington Life Insurance Co.

The cause of the fire is unknown. This same house was badly damaged by fire that started in the same mysterious way, about twenty years ago. It was the first fire that Gamble Engine Co. went to. The steamer got stuck on the centre and would not work for some time.

The Rev. Mr. [illegible]'s First Letter Home.

From a private letter—the first written by the pastor of Trinity Reformed church since his departure for Europe—THE PRESS is permitted to quote the following:

"On Tuesday, July 9, at 7 o'clock A. M., sailed promptly. It rained at the time, but soon cleared off. For three days the ocean was phenomenally smooth, just like a lake. Friday the wind blew harder and the sea grew very rough until Saturday, when I had the pleasure of enjoying a storm at sea. It was a grand sight! Stood watching it until my clothes were wet. Nearly one-half on board were sick; I was not, though felt a little inclined that way. Perhaps it would have been good for me had I been genuinely seasick. Did not miss a meal. It was laughable to see the ranks thin out at the table. At first everybody was in his place; then one after another dropped out, until there was left only a corporal's guard.

"How agreeably surprised I was Friday morning at the breakfast table, when the steward handed me a box which contained my 'mail.' I cannot express my appreciation not only of the deed, but the many kind expressions contained in the letters. I shall sacredly preserve the bag and contents. I have met with a gentleman on board from North Plainfield—Mr. Fawcett—a fine Christian young man, with whom I spend most of my time. Our vessel has not made as good time as she usually makes; with head winds and green hands they have not been able to make their usual run. We will not likely reach Liverpool until Thursday evening. The distance from New York to Liverpool is about 3,000 miles. Am very well and in good spirits."

—North Plainfield pays enough for her gasolene lights, to have good ones. Along Grove street and Craig place in particular, they are not half turned on. Then they should be lighted every night, and all night long.

—The novelty of seeing a female smoking cigarettes was witnessed by several persons on Park avenue, last evening. A young woman, evidently not yet out of her teens, was seen to pass along that thoroughfare with a male escort, each of them smoking a cigarette.

Oh, No! Gately's Good Enough.

The Somerville papers say: "Stagg, the famous Yale pitcher, it is reported, will pitch for the Crescents of Plainfield when they meet the West Ends July 27."

Hours of services in Grace church on Sunday next will be as follows: Holy Communion at 7:30 A. M. Morning service and sermon at 10:30 A. M. Evening song at 5 P. M.

A Sunshine Party.

At the home of Mr. Wm. V. Dunham, at New Market, July 16, an all day picnic was held on the lawn. The friends assembled, numbering about sixty, had a most pleasing time. There were games, singing, a social feast generally, and speeches by the Rev. Messrs. Cubberly and Livermore. A table loaded with good things was spread in the open air.

Among those present were: Mr. James V. Dunham and family, Mr. W. V. Dunham and family, Mr. C. C. Dunham and son, Mr. H. V. Dunham and family, Mr. Chas. E. Dunham and family, Mr. George H. Dunham and family, Mr. and Mrs. James R. Dunham, Mrs. Elizabeth Dunham, the Rev. Mr. Cubberly and family, the Rev. R. E. Livermore and Mrs. Livermore, Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Demarest, Mr and Mrs. P. A. Runyon, the Misses Field, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Randolph, Dr. and Mrs. D. P. Vail, Mrs. Belle Runyon, Mr. Berrill, Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Giles, Mrs. and Miss Kilgore, Mr. Theodore Lane and family, Mrs. & Mrs. Jos. Force, Mrs. John Emmons, Miss Todd, Miss Emma Randolph and Mrs. Sadie Randolph.

Their Tenth Re-Union.

Mr. George B. Titsworth a member of the '79 Class of the High School, is arranging for the proper observance of the tenth re-union of the class which is to take place during the coming Fall. The place for holding the re-union has not yet been announced. The graduating exercises of the class of '79 took place in the First Baptist church on Thursday, June 26, of that year. Mr. Oscar V. Roberts was the first speaker, and Miss Mary Gardner was the valedictorian. Of the eighteen members included in the '79 class there are but two residing in Plainfield, namely, Mrs. C. F. French (nee Miss M. Aline Randolph,) and Mr. George B. Titsworth.

In connection with the re-union, we quote the following from the Constitutionalist of Friday, June 27, 1879:

"This class has a strong foreign element in its composition. Of the eighteen graduated, one is from France, two from Scotch Plains, one from "Canada" (sometimes called North Plainfield), one from Westfield, one from the Short Hills, and one from the indefinite locality known as "up the road." The girls predominate (as girls always will) by a score of 10 to 8. Only three of the class have come all the way through from the primary department of their Alma Mater. In intellectual ability, it is maintained by at least eighteen of the Alumni, that '79 is superior to every other class that has graduated. All the members are exceedingly handsome. The class is ninety feet long and weighs about a ton. The number of its years is fourteen score and ten. A clairvoyant, employed by THE CONSTITUTIONALIST at an enormous expense, to read the future of the class, gave forth the following to us, unintelligible, responses: 'In spite of elevated roads, they will always cling to the 'ox car.' One is peculiarly frank; beware! for he'll ever be wily; there is a tendency to hector; this will in time become confined to a single individual. A gard'ner and a cooper will not always remain such. Happy the fate of one who shall be vexed by a lien. Though joyous hopes in May I see, I ne'er should say let Cor a B.— Have a care lest old Harry Ketch'em.'

Mary L. Bolton—Norse Mythology.
Emma L. Cadmus—Unfinished Work.
Anna Davis Cooper—The Sea.
Mary Gardner—Harmony.
Adelaide Gillette—The Destruction of Pompeii.
Anna B. Gillies—Voices of Nature.
Carrie W. Ketcham—Whither.
M. Aline Randolph—School-girls.
Julia E. Runyon—Patrons of Art.
Cora B. Smalley—The Ballad.
J. D. Hector Alliot—France.
Charles Bullman—Lessing said: 'If I were given Truth, or the search for Truth, I should choose the search for Truth.'
Felix G. Fernandis—Mirabeau.
Courtlandt P. Hull, Jr.—The Seabeach.
Henry C. Munger—The Knight [illegible]
[illegible]
Oscar T. Roberts—Martyrs to Liberty.
G. B. Titsworth—American Antiquities.
Franklin B. Wiley—New Jersey."

Burglars on East Fifth Street.

Early on the evening July 17, burglars attempted to gain admission to Mr. Seely Edsall's residence on East Fifth street, by breaking out the glass in one of the cellar windows. Mr. Edsall and his family are absent from the city, and some of the neighbors who were sitting out of doors on that evening, hearing the crash of broken glass, stole around the house just in time to see the robbers depart. The next morning Mr. Edsall's clerks were notified at the store, and they went to the house and nailed up the window.

He Told a Story and Gets the Bounce.

Barney Quinn, a young man, who for the past six months has been employed to care for a team and do chores about Messrs. R. W. Rice & Co's grocery store in North Plainfield, is at present minus a job. The story is told to the effect that Barney attended a picnic at Dunellen, on Thursday evening last, and on the following day he was found seated in the barn crying. When asked the cause of his trouble by Mr. Rice the young man is alleged to have said that he had received a telegram from Bridgeton, announcing the death of his mother. Mr. Rice kindly advanced him his week's wages, which were to be used to defray "funeral expenses," but, subsequent developments proved that there was no truth in the young man's statement, and Monday morning when the latter returned to work he was told that his services were no longer needed.

—Oh, for a Y. M. C. A. building.

—THE PRESS is [illegible] to urge the necessity of better street lighting in North Plainfield.

—The man who wears a Grand Army button now without the right to do so is liable to a fine of from $20 to $100 for false pretense.

—It is thought that fully 1,500 persons will witness the ball game between the Crescents and the West Ends of Somerville on the 27th inst.

—The school boys are having high old times during the days of vacation, and appearances indicate that all of them have not left the city.

—The city park is now utilized for picnic parties. On Tuesday a party of children spent the day there, taking their lunch baskets with them.

—The Dunellen Presbyterian church Sunday school will go with the Warren Union Mission, on their annual excursion, August 9, to Ocean Grove.

—The next excursion to Ocean Grove is on August 9. The Warren Mission will take all their members and friends, and the Dunellen Presbyterians.

—Among the recent real estate transfers in Somerset County, was a lot in North Plainfield from Mr. Elias R. Pope to Mr. Patrick Mc[illegible], for $150.

—There is talk of a scoop tank being laid by the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co., so that their passenger engines need not stop to take water at Bound Brook.

—Chicken thieves visited the premises of Mr. Claward at New Market, Sunday. Several shots from Mr. C's gun interrupted the thief's plans. The loss was not large.

—If there is a man, woman or child in this community who has the faintest idea that marriage is a failure, they should take a walk through the Boulevard on a fine evening.

—Superintendent W. A. Codington's Sunday school at Chimney Rock netted about $25 from their festival held a short time since. The affair was a success, socially and financially.

—The Britannic arrived at Queenstown at 4:30 o'clock Friday morning, with the party of ladies from Plainfield aboard—Mrs. Bulkley, Miss [illegible], Miss Butler, Miss Frittz and the Misses Kirkner.

—A kerosene lamp exploded in the restaurant under the post office, a little before 7 o'clock Monday evening. No one was injured, however, and little or no damage resulted from the accident.

—At the regular meeting of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., held in the S. of T. rooms, Thursday night, Mr. Chas. F. Stephens, was installed Financial Secretary for the next three months.

—One of three carloads of watermelons consigned to Mr. Charles Clifton of this city, was broken open near the Washington street railroad crossing on Sunday night, and robbed of a number of melons.

—The annual reunion of the Fourteenth Regiment, New Jersey Volunteers, will be held at Trenton on September 19. Of the fourteen members who joined the regiment from here, there are but seven living.

—Mr. Collier is having the Olympia Alley greatly improved. The alleys are all lengthened ten feet, giving plenty of run way. An addition has also been added on the front, making a commodious pool room.

—The Netherwood bowling alley has been entirely resurfaced and the apparatus put in order. It is now open to private parties and the public in general. Application for time may be made at the Hotel office.

—Some religious papers are noting it as a curious fact that the bigger a clergyman's salary is the longer is his vacation. The poor fellow who receives just a little more than nothing a year find it hard to get any vacation at all.

—Mr. J. P. Laire's public pump at the Park avenue entrance to his store, is liberally patronized these hot days. It is not an uncommon occurrence to see persons grouped about the pump waiting for a chance to get a drink.

—Sunday evening's sermon in the Crescent Avenue church, was nipped in the bud when the electric lights suddenly went out and left all in total darkness. They came up again in a few minutes, and the services proceeded.

—Since the work of rebuilding the burned portion of the Crescent Avenue church was begun, access to the sheds in the rear has been cut off, and the posts have been located in front of and along the Broadway side of the church property.

—The man who advertises liberally in what is known as "the dull season" is pretty apt to capture what trade is going. Persistent and politic [illegible] is likely to be accepted by the purchasing public, while he who doesn't believe in advertising waits in vain for patrons.

—Henry Vandervoort, a colored man, while engaged in hauling brick from Dunellen on Tuesday, encountered a four foot adder snake on Front street near Grant avenue. Mr. Vandervoort threw a brick at the snake, and finally ended the latter's career with a horse whip.

—The six men composing the jury in the case of Fleming & Anderson, against Mr. John Coard, before Justice Wadsworth, Thursday, were discharged about seven o'clock. They stood five for no cause of action against one stubborn juryman who was ready to hold out forever to the contrary.

—Chief Carey has received word from St. Louis to the effect that the brother of Lena Flege, the demented woman, now confined in the City Jail, is a wealthy and influential resident in that city. The Union County Freeholders have not yet taken any action with reference to sending the woman back to St. Louis.

—The mystery surrounding the sudden disappearance of Mr. Hugh Higgins who wandered away from his home on Plainfield avenue, on Monday, deepens. Although searching parties have been scouring the surrounding country, no trace of the missing man has been found, and his friends fear that he has committed suicide.

—Constable [illegible] of North Plainfield, Monday, arrested Israel C. Coon, on complaint of Ancel [illegible], Jr., who charged in the complaint that Coon had threatened his life. Both parties reside on Grove street near Green Brook road. The case came up before Justice Hardy, Monday afternoon, and it required two hours to try it. Justice Hardy held the accused in the sum of $100 bonds to keep the peace.

—Farmers and wives are often subject to headaches in Summer. Dr. Dean's Remedy will stop it.

Death of Mrs. John H. Coward.

The death occurred morning July 17, at the home of her daughter in Keyport, of Mrs. Phoebe E. Coward, wife of John H. Coward, and mother of Joseph B. Coward of this city. Mrs. Coward died of paralysis, in the 82d year of her age.

The funeral services were held at the home of her son, No. 79 East Front street, Saturday afternoon at three o'clock.

A Boy's Record of Local "News."

The local page of the news, Saturday, consisted of credited clippings from the Newark Journal, Bound Brook Chronicle, New York Tribune, a "Somerset County paper," Washington Star, New York Press, Flemington Democrat, New York World, Monmouth Inquirer, and "Ex.," besides other items not credited but stolen from other Somerville, Trenton and Newark papers, and the Plainfield PRESS.

TROTTING ON SATURDAY.

Despite the fact that the track of the Gentlemen's Driving Park Association was very heavy on Saturday, there were the usual number of spectators present, and some fast time was made. There were also several new horses on the track. The judges for the day were Messrs J. W. Johnson, Fred Williams and Edward Waring.

The opening race was between Charles Brower's grey mare, "Daisy," John Hayes' "Andy," and John Chandler's "Rambo." The grey mare won two straight heats with "Andy" second. Time 2:47½ and 2:44.

In the second race there were three entries, namely: Philip Jenner's "Blanche," John Osborn's "Marcancar" and Nate Robbins' "Doctor." "Blanche" crossed the line first in each of the two heats in 2:55½ and 2:53 respectively, with "Marcancar" a close second.

Then came a race between "Lucy," owned by Mr. M. Quinn, Sam Allen's "Lady Allen," and Chas. Brower's sorrel mare. But one heat was trotted. "Lady Allen" crossing the line in 2:55, with "Lucy" second.

The concluding race was between Edward Waring's "Ledger Boy," to wagon and Sam Allen's "Lady Allen," to harness, owners driving. But one mile heat was trotted, "Ledger Boy" winning in 2:45.

On Saturday next, it is expected that some close and exciting races will take place. It is also thought that several new horses will be on the track that day.

TWENTY-SEVEN TO SEVEN.

It was not a Tempest in a Tea-pot, Saturday afternoon, on the Bowling Club's ball grounds, it was the Tempests in the Soup. The Crescents fell upon the elements and smote them hip and thigh—not with a jaw-bone but with their wagon-tongues.

It was a good practice game and served the purpose of gauging some of the Plainfield players before next Saturday's battle. The personal result will be that Marrar, Smock and Schultz will not play against the Somerville employees. Demarest, who was under the weather Saturday, will be on hand ready to make at least one of the winning runs again and "Little Mac" Laughlin will be back again in the field, as he deserves.

Smiling Patrick Gately pitched as good a game as was necessary, Saturday. He probably could have shut the Tempests out, but he was not required to exert himself. Next Saturday he proposes to show the Plainfielders who doubt his ability, that he is a better pitcher than Harkins ever dreamed of being. It is a fact that some of those most prominently interested in the success of Plainfield's team of ball players, have insisted that it would be better to give Powers or Currie a trial, but Messrs Gavett, Doane, Hallock and others of the Managing Committee, have great faith in Gately yet, and they believe and THE PRESS believes, that supported by so strong an in and out field, Gately is the right man in the right place.

All the Crescents' errors Saturday were committed by Marrar and McMurray. Those of the former were inexcusable and proved that the team is traveling too hot a pace for him. McMurray's errors were casual and not costly. One was a rather high ball that sailed through his hands, and the other two were drops in the last inning of a couple of hot liners that Demarest nailed at him from third base where he had taken Lee's place. They were entirely and unexpectedly different from Lee's throws that Mac judges correctly every time.

Lee, Gately and Cadmus led in the batting—the last named doing better than he has before this season. Condon undertook a big contract when he started in to catch Gately for nine innings, but he staid there just the same and did great work. Not a ball got by him but one during the whole game, and that was a wild pitch.

The Tempests had no suits, no bats, no organization, nor "no nothing." Libman who pitched the first five innings, was batted freely. Armstrong of the Perth Amboys was then put in the box, and only one hit was made off of him during the rest of the game, but Hines couldn't hold him. Then the fielding of the visitors was very bad all around—Gabriel being the only player who did not fall all apart. Their throwing to first was rank. The thousand people present, however, seemed to enjoy the free batting, base stealing and run getting of the home team, and so it was a very satisfactory game in some respects besides giving the Crescents another day's practice before the all important match of next Saturday with the West Ends of Somerville.

Arrests in the Borough.

Frank Moncton and wife were arrested on Grove street, North Plainfield, Saturday evening, for disorderly conduct. Mayor Cooley fined them each ten dollars. Moncton paid his fine, but left his wife in durance vile. One other unfortunate was gathered in by the Borough Marshals on Saturday night for being drunk. He was fined $2.

The War on the Telegraph Poles.

War against the telegraph poles has been started by the Board of Freeholders of Union county, N. J.—at least against all such telegraph and telephone poles as interfere with proposed improvements of the county roads. The Freeholders evidently mean business, for they have served notice upon the companies that unless the poles are removed they will be taken down at the expense of the county. This is the first action of the sort instituted in any country district, if we are not mistaken. It seems to foretell the ultimate doom of the telegraph poles everywhere. Putting the wires under ground in the open country would be a simple and not very costly matter, and the companies will probably find it to their interest to stop putting up poles, even if they do not begin at once the removal of those already in use.

Concerning the Exemption of Firemen.

In reply to a communication from the Finance Committee of the City Council, with reference to the exemption of firemen from taxation, Corporation Counsel Marsh has given his opinion as follows:

"As to those taxes included in the tax warrants now in the hands of the delinquent tax collector for the years prior to 1888, there is no exemption to Plainfield firemen either of poll taxes or taxes on property. This is the law however much the Common Council and the community at large may regret it. The city authorities have always been willing to strain a point to allow firemen exemption, but we are obliged to take the law as we find it.

"As to taxes of 1888 and 1889, Plainfield firemen are entitled to exemption from poll tax and from taxation on property real and personal or both not exceeding five hundred dollars.

"It is proper to say that but for the recommendation of Mayor Male and the approval of the Common Council of an amendment to the law then existing which was introduced and passed last Winter, exempt firemen of Plainfield would be entitled to no exemption from taxation whatever, owing to the fact that formerly the fire department was not controlled by the city."

That Demented Woman.

Chief of Police Tunis J. Carey presents the following card to the public, which is worthy of general support:

To The Public:

The circumstances attending the arrival in this city of Miss Lena Fleig, the unfortunate demented woman now in my charge, already have been made known by THE PRESS. Miss Fleig has a brother in St. Louis who has taken the name of W. R. Bensar, and who, according to the best information obtainable, is of ample means to properly provide for his sister. He refuses to have anything to do with her. George Ebner, of Brooklyn, is a nephew of Miss Fleig, and I am satisfied would cheerfully care for his aunt if it were in his power to do so. He is ill and unable to provide even for his own family.

Under these circumstances it has been proposed by some to send the woman back to St. Louis, and by others to get her out of the State in the easiest way practicable and throw her on some other town. Either course would, in my judgment, be cruel in the extreme. Miss Fleig has lucid intervals in which she expresses her desire to return to her home in Prussia. To send her South in this weather would increase the violence of her affliction; to set her adrift would be inhuman.

It is a case that should appeal strongly to the sympathy of this community. If a sufficient sum of money should be contributed to pay her passage and other expenses, I believe that with the assistance of her nephew, I can find some intending passenger to undertake the care of Miss Fleig on the ocean voyage.

This I propose to undertake, and I therefore appeal to the never-failing charitable instincts of this community to provide the necessary funds. Subscriptions may be left at the office of the subscriber, or sent to him by mail, and will be promptly acknowledged.

TUNIS J. CAREY,
Chief of Police.

Death of Ex-Judge Geo. P. Suydam.

A telegram was received in this city today announcing the death at Minneapolis, Mich., at half-past 10 Thursday evening, of ex-Judge George P. Suydam of this city. Mr. Suydam was about forty years of age. He went West for the benefit of his health, having reached Minneapolis only a little over a week ago, and was accompanied by his wife and nurse.

Mr. Suydam has been in delicate health for a long time past, but it was not until a few months ago that he was obliged to give up active labor. Since then he was on the decline, despite the skill of eminent physicians and surgeons. A few months ago after an operation was performed upon him it was thought that he would entirely recover, but a subsequent trip South did him little or no good, and he gradually kept sinking until last evening, when his death occurred as above stated.

Judge Suydam was perhaps one of the best-known and universally esteemed men in Union county. Coming to this city from Middlebush several years ago, he engaged with Mr. John H. Jackson in the law business. In late years he has been associated with Mr. Wm. M. Stillman, under the firm name of Suydam & Stillman, lawyers, in this city, the junior member of the firm having succeeded him to the office of City Judge, which position Mr. Suydam was obliged to resign on account of failing health. His death resulted from lung troubles.

Besides being a prosperous lawyer Judge Suydam was a member of the Young Men's Christian Association. He was also a member of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. & A. M., and of the Middlesex Gun Club. He leaves a widow and one daughter.

In relation to Mr. Suydam the following quotation is from THE PRESS of Wednesday, January 11th, 1888.

"The election by the Common Council, Tuesday eve'g, of Geo. P. Suydam, Esq. to the office of City Judge for the unexpired term of Hon. John Ulrich, resigned is a choice upon which the people are to be congratulated. Judge Suydam is fitted by both experience and professional ability, to fill the office and administer its powers with skill, capacity and justice. Mr. Suydam was Corporation Counsel of the City during the years of 1874, '77, '78, '79 and '80; previous to which terms, when the office of City Judge was created by an act of the Legislature in 1872, Mr. Suydam was the people's first choice for that honor, and he served them most satisfactorily as City Judge during the years of 1872 and '73."

The remains of the late ex-Judge Geo. P. Suydam, arrived in this city from Minneapolis Tuesday, and were taken to the deceased's late residence on East Fifth street. The funeral took place from the house this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, and from the First Baptist church at 3 o'clock.

—The weather today is delightfully cool, just right for the "stay-at-homes."

—Mrs. M. H. Cooper, 151 Duer street, says: "Since using Dr. Dean's Remedy have not had a sick headache. I was subject to them."

Baptized in Green Brook.

Six converts to the First Church of Christ, were baptized, Sunday afternoon, in Green Brook near Elm street. Owing to the illness of the pastor, the Rev. Mr. Cleaver, Mr. Andrew Jackson Stewart, officiated. Mr. Stewart is one of the oldest officers in Mr. Cleaver's organization. Owing to the late heavy rains the water was very high and muddy.

A Simple Remedy of a Great Danger.

For the safety of the public, flagmen should be stationed on the Park avenue and Peace street railroad bridges, to warn anyone driving along those thoroughfares of approaching trains. It is impossible to see the track from the street, and the sudden coming of a train over the bridge, startles nervous horses and every few days there is a runaway. Readers of THE PRESS will remember the death a short time since of Mr. Davis of Dunellen, which resulted from just such a cause.

Fay's Automatic Fan Attachment.

This grand invention for keeping cool, and the flies off at the same time, is just being introduced, and will have an enormous sale during the hot months. It can be attached to any Rocking Chair made, and will fan the occupant of the chair while he rocks himself. It can be attached to Cribs or Cradles, and will fan the sleeper. It is a comfort to the sick and invalids, who will require less care from the nurse. It is invaluable in every household. It is cheap, ornamental and useful, and will last for many years. The Company wish to secure an Agent at once in every county. It is a bonanza for Agents during the hot months. Over one thousand sold in Pittsburgh in two weeks. Pays one hundred per cent profit. Sample complete, handsomely nickel plated, sent on receipt of $2.00. Circulars and terms to Agents sent to all. Address

Pantaloons Given Away.

That is about what Watson & Co. are doing with their broken lots of pantaloons, as they are selling the finest $5, $6 and $7 cassimere, cheviot, silk-mixed and handsome worsteds at $3 a pair, and are making the rush of business you see when you pass the corner of Broad and Market streets, where many are getting bargains that they will remember, as the finest silk and satin-trimmed garments now go at $3 a pair, and for $10 you can take your pick of their elegant suits and certainly get $15 or $18 in value for a $10 bill.

Watson & Co. say they have had the biggest season on record, and now propose to divide their entire stock among their customers as an advertisement for future business. Secure a couple of pairs of those elegant, perfect-fitting pants quickly. You can buy two pairs for the usual price of one, but remember the first buyers get the finest goods and handsomest patterns, and a few days will close out the entire stock at the rate they are now going. Three dollars for pants worth $5, $6 and $7, and $10 for $15, $18 and $20 suits will draw buyers from even New York and Brooklyn when the garments are of the well-known handsome cut and careful make of Geo. Watson & Co., the Broad and Market street clothiers—Newark Press.

—Two young men were arrested in the borough, Monday evening, for driving off with Mr. Samuel Allen's horse. They gave bail for their appearance to stand trial, and were released.

Why Should I Go to Montana?

Great Reservation. Because 18,000,000 acres of free Government land, with a delightful climate, and equally suited for general farming and stock raising, have just been opened to the homeseeker, in the Milk River Valley and near Benton and Great Falls.

Stock Raising. Because the favorable climate and superior grasses of Montana make it the natural home of horses, cattle, sheep and other domestic animals; and because Winter feeding is not required, as stock graze at large the year around.

General Farming. Because a rich soil and abundant Summer rains produce wheat, oats, rye, barley and the grasses and vegetables of a quality, size and yield unsurpassed.

Mining. Because Montana produces more of the precious metals than any other state or territory, and abundant opportunities remain to secure valuable properties at nominal cost.

Immigration. Because the Great Reservation is the meeting point of settlers from the Pacific Coast and from the Eastern States, and is the only extensive tract of good land left, suitable for settlement.

Business. Because the rapidly growing towns along the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. offer splendid opportunities to engage in business.

Manufacturing. Because the [illegible],000 horse-power water-power at Great Falls, the extensive coal veins, the wool, mineral and grain raising resources of Montana offer exceptional opportunities to the manufacturer.

Tourist. Because the canon of the Gates of the Mountains, the Great Falls of the Missouri, the Giant Fountain and Continental Divide offer the most sublime and diversified scenery to be found on the Continent. Take a Summer tour.

Why Travel by the St. P., M. & M.? Because only by it can you travel through the largest body of free land left for settlement. Because it reaches the Great Falls, with the largest water-power on the Continent. Because it reaches Helena, the richest city of its size in the world; and because it is the shortest and best route to Butte, the largest mining camp on earth. Special tourists' and landseekers' rates. Daily trains through solid to Montana. Choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. THREE KINDS!

I know
The past, and thence I will essay to glean
A warning for the future, so that man
May profit by his errors, and derive
Experience from his folly.—SHELLEY.

Three kinds of men start out to buy Clothing. The foolish man is hauled in by a bait and buys cheap shoddy clothing from the "hurrah" fake.

Then comes the thoughtless man, who wends his way to the fashionable tailor, gets a good suit, but pays a very big price for the same.

The wise man deals with some reputable manufacturer of Clothing and secures garments fully equal to those made to order at about half custom prices. Thus the wise man gets his Clothing, with quality and workmanship thrown in, as cheap as the foolish man his miserable trash. An unusually large number of wise men are being attracted to our store this Spring. Whether it's a case of "once bitten twice shy" or not, we don't know, but certainly their patronage of us does credit to their good judgment, and we don't think, once having traded here they'll be caught by clap-trap again. We know what we sell. We make it, and neither time, effort or money is spared to produce garments that will do us credit and still further establish our reputation. It's a selfish interest we take, we'll admit, but the effect is the same. It's there, and it pays both you and us.

FOUR DAYS IN OVENSVILLE.

Why Mr. Fielding Will Not Go to the Country.

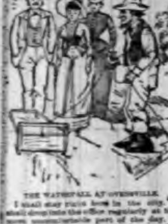
The Ragtime Was too Attractive and the Sleeping Accommodations too Full of Novelty and Variety—Life in the Adirondacks.

[copyright 1889.]

I have drawn up my plan for a Summer vacation and it [illegible] to death.

Shall I go to the country? Not unless I get kidnapped.

Shall I go to the sea shore? Oh dear, no. I have learned to read the most mendacious hotel circular without a quiver.



THE WATERFALL AT OVENSVILLE.

I shall stay right here in the city. I shall drop into the office regularly at the most uncomfortable part of the day. I shall put my feet on a desk and watch the boys work, and perspire, and swear. It will be so restful. A diet of anxious contemplation like that will build me up much more than the mosquitoes and cream of the country could do.

I know, because I have been there. I lost twelve pounds in four days up in the Adirondacks last Summer and they can stay there. I wouldn't go back after them if I knew that I could find them the first day. The experience was painful but the record of it may be useful.

It was my old school friend—of course it was my old school friend; it always is your old school friend who gets you into a scrape. As I said before, this man, Sam Benson, lured me up into the Adirondacks. He didn't exactly invite me to visit him, but he said that as we had been boys together he would let me his second floor room on the north corner of the house for $7 a week, including all the milk I could drink and all the scenery I could find. His wife was to have a few friends visit her later on, young ladies, who would add to the attractions of the place, and he thought that it was no more than fair that he should write and give me a chance to engage the best room in the house.

I was just foolish enough to reply that I would take the apartment. It was an awfully hot day when I left the city, and it grew hotter all the way up. For further particulars I quote from my diary:

Aug. 1.—Reached Ovensville at 11 a. m. Town is in a [illegible] half a dozen hills, so arranged that the sun is always right overhead. Wind never blows in Ovensville. Ventilation of the town is very bad. Inhabitants don't care. They're proud of it. Claim that they're breathing the same air that Hendrick Hudson breathed when he visited the place three or four hundred years ago. During all that time the black flies have been dropping in, and haven't been able to find their way out again over the hills. They're all here to-day. Every time a fellow gasps he swallows some of these flies. If he doesn't gasp he suffocates. I spend the entire day trying to decide which I'd rather do.

One of Mrs. Benson's friends has arrived. Miss Addie Four—big, fat girl. Not much in conversation but she perspires freely. Don't blame her. It's as hot as blazes.

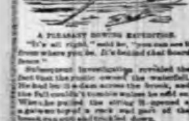
Sam asked me as a special favor to his wife if I would give up the second floor room to Miss Addie. Didn't make the request until the lady had retired. Sam is considerable of a diplomat. I complied.

Aug. 2.—Slept in small room under the roof—very close under the roof. Sat up suddenly in the night and put my head out through the shingles into the quiet starlight. Thought I perceived a delicious breeze through the hole in the roof which partially atoned for a fractured skull. When the sun rose it shone through the hole in the roof straight into my eyes. Dragged my bed all over the floor but the sun chased me. Went down stairs and had breakfast of crackers and milk.

Two more of Mrs. Benson's friends have come. One of them has red hair and the other plays on the piano. What shall I do?

I've locked the piano with a nail while nobody was looking but I'm afraid they'll pry it open.

Sam suggested that we go out and see the waterfall. We found an aged rustic who agreed to show us the fall for a dollar apiece. Sam had left his pocketbook at home and his credit appeared to be bad. I paid for the scenery, and told the rustic to lead on.



A PLEASANT ROWING EXPEDITION.

"It's all right," said he, "you can see it from where you be. It's behind that board fence."

Subsequent investigation revealed the fact that the rustic owned the waterfall. He had built a dam across the brook, and the fall couldn't tumble unless he said so. When he pulled the string it opened a gate on top of a rock and part of the brook ran out and trickled down.

"It ain't nothin' Niagary," said the rustic, "but it's the only waterfall within nineteen miles o' this place."

He let it run for five minutes and then shut it off. Just then Miss Addie arrived, and she could have wept to think that she had missed seeing the fall. I paid another dollar all around and the natural phenomenon was exhibited again.

An evening [illegible] Sam took me aside.

"Howdy," said he, "as an old friend I know you won't object to giving up your room to these two young ladies. One of them has money, and there's no knowing how a little courtesy of that kind might be appreciated."

"I might sleep in the barn," I suggested.

"Well, the trouble is," said Sam, "that I've let the barn to one of my neighbors, who's putting up some of her people there, that she can't accommodate in the house. It's the rush season now and everything is crowded."

"I might try the roof."

"Too steep," said Sam, shaking his head.

I thought it would be a little steep at $7 a week, but I didn't say so.

"I can give you one of the most comfortable places in the house," said Sam. "It's [illegible] for you. It's the big wood-box back of the kitchen stove. Just make up a bed in the bottom of it [illegible] kindlings, jump in, shut down the cover to keep the flies out, and there you are. You'll be the only man in this part of the country that the mosquitoes won't bite to-night."

Aug. 3.—Last night has given me some [illegible] on the proper construction of a coffin. If my last resting place does not fit me better than that wood box I will kick the roof off it and rise before I am buried.

This morning we had a little boating party on the village lake. Two more of Mrs. Benson's friends arrived, and joined the party. I rowed. The girls [illegible] among themselves and left me out in the cold. They held parasols over themselves and left me out in the sun. I [illegible] the girls, [illegible] of the lake in search of pond lilies but they had all dried up and blown away.

When we returned home Sam told me that he and Mrs. Benson had been seriously considering an important question.

"Look here, Sam," said I, "you don't mean to put those girls in the woodbox and turn me loose in the world?"

"No," he replied, "I will see that you get the best there is of everything, and [illegible]. My wife has decided to make a place for the girls on the kitchen table, and I suggested that if you would get into the woodbox first, and let me nail down the cover, all danger of [illegible] could be avoided."

"If you'll put a silver plate on it bearing my name, age, and an appropriate passage of Scripture, the plan would be perfect," said I, losing my temper. "No, no, Sam, won't do. I dreamed of funerals all last night but this would be too painfully realistic. With your permission I'll try the stairs."

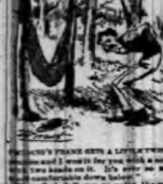
"The stairs," said Sam, "they're engaged. An old friend of my wife's brother is [illegible] sleeping on the two steps, and's saving one stair for him."

The old friend arrived on time. Then he and his wife had a consultation while I sat on the piazza enjoying the mosquitoes and a banjo solo by Miss Addie. Presently Sam came out and grasped my hand warmly.

"It's all right, old friend," said he, "I've fixed it for you. You're to have a lower berth."

"A lower berth, where?"

"Why on the stairs. The other fellow's going to take the top. My wife and I concluded



FIELDING'S FRAME GETS A LITTLE TWISTED.

[illegible] and I would fix it for you with a [illegible] two heads on it. It's ever so much comfortable down below."

Then Sam left me to enjoy the music while he and his wife's brother's friend drank hard cider and played forty-five at the railroad station. When they came back I had already taken the lower berth. They both fell over me, and I was much pained to observe their condition. I carried them to the head of the stairs where they both went to sleep. At frequent intervals during the night they fell down the stairs, sometimes singly, sometimes together; but, either way, they broke my ribs and several of the banisters.

Aug. 4.—They have succeeded in opening the piano, and I have spent the day wandering on the hills. The air was too thick to permit of any enjoyment of the scenery. Full of flies. Couldn't see from one [illegible] the next.

Another guest has arrived and Sam's got a new scheme. I am to sleep in a hammock out under the open sky. I like the idea.

Aug. 5.—Did you ever sleep in a hammock? Don't you try it. Did you see a lop-legged sailor, with one shoulder higher than the other, and a twist in his back? That's because sailors sleep in hammocks. My hammock was slung between two trees that were too near together. I lay on my back at first in the shape of a letter V, and gazed out at the polar star between my knees. It was comfortable enough at first and I fell off into a doze. When I awoke my back felt like the toothache, and I turned over on my side. That was how I got so mixed up. In the morning when Sam found me standing beside the hammock he said my frame was so twisted that he couldn't tell after I began to move whether I was coming in to breakfast or going back to town.

There was a suggestion involved in his remark which struck me as good, and I took the 11:20 train home. They were sorry to see me go but I told them that the attractions of Ovensville were so numerous that I was afraid some one might come up during the day and steal my hammock away from me.

A.—You are in error. I know more about the book than yourself, for I am the author.

B. A.—You wrote this book?

A.—I did.

B. A.—Well, sir, I appreciate your good sense in not putting your name to it. Keep the identity of its authorship quiet, please, till I can book a few orders in town.

DEADWOOD DICK.

He Plays the Part of a Destroying Angel in the Bowery.

The Orchestra Plays "Johnny Get Your Gun" While the Fur Flies and Blood Runs Like Water—But Honesty and Virtue Triumph at Last.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

The dramatic critics of New York have been strangely silent regarding a play of thrilling interest which has held the boards at the National Theatre lately.

The name of the exciting drama in four acts which has had such a successful run there is "Deadwood Dick." It has been well billed and so could not have failed to attract their attention had those above [illegible] been keeping their eyes open. They must surely have noticed the following ing poster which, printed in big letters on staring yellow paper, has decorated many of the Gotham fences and bill-boards:

$500 REWARD
For the Notorious Road Agent,
DEADWOOD DICK,
Alias Richard Bristol, Ed Harris, &c.

Who upon the 14th day of last April stopped and robbed the Stage Coach between Silverton and Leadville, of the Wells Fargo and Adams Express Company's cash box of its contents. The above reward will be paid for him

DEAD OR ALIVE!
JOHN LEE, Sheriff,
Leadville, Col.

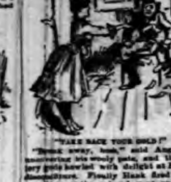
I am not a dramatic critic, but I know a good play when I see it, and having "[illegible]" "Deadwood Dick" from an orchestra stall, for which I paid 25 cents, and being impressed with its merits, I propose to let the public know something about it.

After the orchestra had kindly played an overture from "Johnny Get Your Gun" and the occupants of the boxes had been supplied with beer, the curtain rose and the play began.

The first scene represented a wild western bar-room in a mining camp. There was a bar-keeper with a [illegible] and a [illegible], a variety stage Dutchman with a small cap and a large stomach, Sheriff Bill Stokes, (true as steel,) in a Bowery flannel shirt, high boots, a wide brimmed hat and a Mexican five-shooter, one or two villains with pistols, and Baltimore, (introducing songs, etc.) The latter was a [illegible] young girl dressed like a cowboy, [illegible] that she was a remarkably [illegible]. She carried a six-shooter. Her sombrero was wide and her [illegible] hair fell in a glittering [illegible] down her back. She wore [illegible]. After all hands had taken a drink at the bar, Hickory Hank (the hard [illegible]) [illegible] remarked that Baltimore was a [illegible] gal" and that he was going to kiss her. Baltimore pulled out her pistol and talked real hard to Hank in the most approved dime novel slang. While she was doing this the orchestra gave a [illegible] and Deadwood Dick, the Outlaw Prince, [illegible] into the room from the [illegible]. He took in the situation with one glance of his eagle eye and then informed Hank that he had done wrong to treat a girl that way on first acquaintance. Then [illegible] Hank and he gave some back talk [illegible], the upshot of which was that a [illegible] was proposed and promptly [illegible] in the bar-room.

As [illegible] Bill Stokes gave the word to fire Dick neatly shot Hank's pistol out of his hand. Then Hank had to apologize [illegible] with a bad grace and then sat down at the table, where he was soon joined [illegible] Malvern, the heartless one.) They talked together about a [illegible] and then Deadwood Dick, who [illegible] [illegible].

The [illegible] person to enter the woodland [illegible] John Henry Augustus, the colored [illegible]. He said that he was hungry [illegible] and went off on the o. p. side. Then Adolphus Fitznoodle, the dude, came in with Hank. Hank immediately shot the heel off the dude's boot and the latter ran off. Then the colored gent came back and the Hard Crowd immediately went for him and threatened to break his head.



"TAKE BACK YOUR GOLD!"

"Break away, boss," said Augustus, uncovering his wooly pate, and the gallery gods howled with delight at Hank's discomfiture. Finally Hank fired one or two shots at the colored gent and they went off—the characters did.

Scene third represented a wild gulch with May Reed, the Persecuted One's cabin on the left. It is important to note that the cabin was on the left because, later on it shifted over to the right of the stage in another scene, and did duty as a court house. May Reed and Baltimore are discovered talking together in the cabin. The dude enters and presents a letter which purports to be from May's father, whom she had thought was dead. May reads the letter and then Malvern, (the heartless one,) comes in and tells May that her father once lent him $2,000 which he wishes to return to her. He passes over the green goods to May and then proposes marriage. May won't have him. He insists. She tells him that she believes that he forged the letter which the dude has just handed to her and which tells her to put her trust in Malvern.

"Take back your gold," cries the noble girl, forgetting in her excitement that the Heartless One had given her nothing but paper money. "Take back your gold. I am a poor, p-o-o-o-or gyurl; but I'd rather be the p-o-o-o-r gyurl that I am than to be rolling in wealth as your wife, yes, though you were the last man in the wide, wide world!"

That brought down the house and an encore was called for but, for some reason was not given. The Heartless One seemed to be very slow to take a hint for he keeps on insisting. May tells him incidentally that "fine clothes don't make a lady, and there's many a true woman's heart beating under the rags of honest poverty," but this has no effect upon him either. Finally Baltimore steps in from the other room and points her pistol at him. Then he suddenly remembers a pressing business engagement and departs.

He comes back in a few minutes with the Sheriff and the Judge to have May arrested for stealing $2,000 from him. The Sheriff, Col. Bill Stokes, (true as steel,) tells Malvern that if the charge is not true there will be a "necktie party" in that vicinity, but the Heartless One goes right ahead and accuses May of the theft. Baltimore comes in and tells him he lies. Malvern tells her that she's another. She again threatens him with her pistol and he subsides. The money is found in May's house and things look equally for her. The judge says he will admit her to bail. Baltimore offers to go on her bond.

"Huh," says the Heartless One, "you haven't any property."

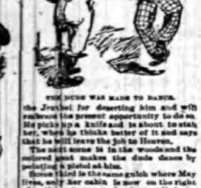
"Haven't I?" answers Baltimore with fine scorn, pointing her pistol at his eye, "I'll let you know that I'm a graveyard and that there's a hole in it waiting for you."

All the villians come in led by Hickory Hank. Hank yells "Lynch her!" and immediately pistols are pulled by every one on the stage. The villians are overpowered, virtue is triumphant, and May is admitted to bail in the sum of $1.10.

Scene first, act second, is a drawing room in Blanche, the Jezabel's house. Deadwood Dick enters and discovers the Jezabel. She wears diamond earrings and looks real well. She pretends she does not know her visitor, and tells him confidentially that she is the wife of Deadwood Dick. She asks him if he is armed. He says he never goes armed in the presence of a lady.

"Ah! Then you are in the toils," she says as she points a pistol at him. "I have but to press this trigger and you cease to live."

Dick merely smiles and tells her that when his time comes he will not weaken. Then he informs her that she has neglected to cock her pistol. She cocks it and is about to shoot when Baltimore steps in and gets the drop on her. Dick secures the Jezabel's pistol and Baltimore leaves. Then Dick says that he has sworn to kill the Jezabel for deserting him and will embrace the present opportunity to do so. He picks up a knife and is about to stab her, when he thinks better of it and says that he will leave the job to Heaven.



THE DUDE WAS MADE TO DANCE.

The next scene is in the woods and the colored gent makes the dude dance by pointing a pistol at him.

Scene third is the same gulch where May lives, only her cabin is now on the right of the stage and is called a courthouse. All the characters are on hand to see May tried for stealing the $2,000. Before court opens Deadwood Dick gets into a little dispute with Hank, the dude and Malvern. He knocks down Malvern and the dude with a pistol and kicks Hank in the shin. Everybody leaves the stage except Deadwood Dick. The Jezabel comes in and is about to shove a knife into Dick's back when Baltimore steps to the front with her pistol. Jezabel retires. The characters come back. The trial opens. Malvern gives his testimony. Baltimore says that he is lying and the Sheriff arrests him. The Judge tries to brain the dude with a hammer. The dude confesses that he forged the letter and May is discharged. Malvern is fined $1.50, which the Sheriff collects with a horse pistol from the Heartless One for contempt of court. Then May says:

"Heaven bless you for your kindness to a poo-o-or orphan gyurl."

All except Dick leave the gulch and he walks about in it to get the air. Jezabel comes in and stabs him with a knife in the back. Malvern, Hank, the dude, and the other villians come in with a rope to hang Dick, but they are surprised by Baltimore, Bill Stokes, (true as steel,) the Judge and the colored gent. There is a lot of shooting and Dick is rescued.

Before the next act was on Malvern (the heartless one,) came out on the stage and announced to the audience that the National Theatre was now under a new management and that hereafter positively no drunkenness would be permitted on the stage. "Every lady or gent who acts on this stage hereafter will be duly sober," he said and the audience applauded vigorously.

In the last act we see May's cabin once more. Dick and Baltimore are making love to each other, when Jezabel enters with a knife. She listens to the cooing of these gentle doves and is stricken with remorse and pity. Malvern enters to kill Dick with a pistol. Jezabel threatens Malvern with a knife. Malvern shoots her. The other villians come in. They try to get into May's cabin. The Sheriff and the vigilants come in and a general free fight takes place in which the villians are overpowered. Dick promptly murders Malvern and Hank in cold blood and Baltimore falls into his arms. May marries the little Dutch judge, who turns out to be Fred Cartell, the detective.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

From committee on issue of county road bonds.

To the Honorable the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

GENTLEMEN—The committee appointed in regard to having bonds issued to be known as "county road bonds," for the purpose of raising money to pay for the improvement of county roads, would report and recommend as follows:

First—That said bonds to be what is known as ten-twenty bonds and bear date October 1st, 1889.

Second—That they shall be coupon bonds and that the denomination of said bonds to be of $1,000 each, with interest at 4 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually.

Third—That said bonds be signed by the Director and Clerk and countersigned by the County Collector.

Fourth—That said bonds to be sold and disposed of in such manner and at such times as this Board may hereafter direct.

Fifth—That the total amount of said bonds to be issued for above purpose to be in the sum of $150,000.

Sixth—That the form and necessary words to be placed on said bonds and the printing of the same, be left to the discretion of this committee, the County Collector and County Attorney, and that the same be printed forthwith in accordance with this report by such person or persons as may be selected by this committee:

Dated July 15, 1889.

WILLIAM HOWARD,
A. VANDERBEEK,
P. D. VAN SAUN,
Committee.

Freeholder Kyte moved the report be received and recommendation adopted.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

From committee on Roselle bridge:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

GENTLEMEN—The committee charged with the examination of bridge over West Brook, near the residence of C. V. Banta, Roselle, would report that the present walls are in an unsafe condition, and in the judgment of your committee beyond economical repair.

They would therefore recommend that the present superstructure be replaced upon a new and substantial foundation at a cost not exceeding $600.

Very respectfully,
WM. T. WEST,
P. D. VAN SAUN,
A. VANDERBEEK,
GEO. W. DOTY,
GEORGE KYTE,
Committee.

On motion of Freeholder Thompson received and ordered placed on file unanimously.

RESOLUTIONS.

By Freeholder Kleinhans:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed with power to make repairs on bridge over Elizabeth river at Westfield avenue, Elizabeth, N. J., at a cost not exceeding $600.

Freeholder Roll moved its adoption.

On roll call, adopted unanimously.

The Director named the following committee: Freeholders Kleinhans, Houston, Doty, Vanderbeek, Roll.

By Freeholder Howard:

WHEREAS, It appearing that certain roads in this county have been adopted as "county roads," under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to enable Boards of Chosen Freeholders to acquire, improve and maintain public roads," approved March 19, 1889, and that a certificate has been duly signed by the justice of the circuit court and entered upon the minutes thereof, showing the assessed value of the real estate within the county for the preceding year, and also the total amount of the debt of the county for all purposes, as directed by said act, and it being further provided in said act that said Board shall be authorized and empowered to issue bonds to provide for the cost and expense of improving and maintaining said county roads; therefore be it

Resolved, That new bonds, to be known as "county road bonds," to the amount of $150,000 be issued by this Board in accordance with the provisions of said act, and for the purpose of paying the cost and expense of grading, macadamizing or otherwise improving the said "county roads" in the manner heretofore or hereafter adopted by this Board.

And this Board hereby determines that they shall be coupon bonds of the denomination of $1,000 each and to be dated October 1, 1889, and shall bear interest at the rate of four (4) per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, and shall be what is known as ten-twenty bonds. And that the Director and clerk of this Board are hereby authorized to sign, execute and affix the corporate seal to said bonds, and that the county collector to also counter-sign the same.

Said bonds to be sold and disposed of in such manner as may hereafter be directed by this Board.

Freeholder Vanderbeek moved its adoption.

On roll call, adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder West:

Resolved, That the County Attorney be instructed to communicate forthwith with the Baltimore and New York and the Lehigh Valley corporations with a view to having their new roads, now in course of construction in various parts of Union county, cross the county roads above grade.

On motion of Freeholder Howard adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder West:

Resolved, That the County Attorney be instructed to take such action as will cause the removal of all telegraph and telephone poles that now encroach upon any of the county roads.

On motion of Freeholder Vanderbeek adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Roll:

Resolved, That the committee on bridge near the residence of C. V. Banta, Roselle, N. J., be authorized to proceed with the work as recommended in their report at a cost not to exceed $600.

Freeholder Howard moved its adoption.

On roll call, adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Roll:

Resolved, That a notice specifying the work and materials, and inviting bids or propositions to perform and furnish the same for regulating, grading and paving with macadam pavement, Morris turnpike through the township of Union, from the boundary line of the city of Elizabeth to the boundary line of the township of Springfield, also along Morris turnpike and Springfield avenue through the township of Springfield from the boundary line of the township of Union to the boundary line of the township of Summit, also along said Springfield avenue and Morris avenue, through the township of Summit from the boundary line of the township of Springfield to the boundary line of the township of New Providence, also along said Springfield avenue through the township of New Providence, from the boundary line of the township of Summit to the centre line of South street in the township of New Providence be published for three weeks at least once in each week in the Central New Jersey Herald and Elizabeth Daily Journal, and also the Engineering News and American Railway Journal of New York city.

Freeholder Doty moved its adoption.

On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Thompson:

Resolved, That the opening of bids or estimates for road leading from Elizabeth to New Providence, be fixed for Monday, August 12, 1889, at 2 o'clock p. m.

On motion of Freeholder Roll adopted unanimously.

The specifications for county road leading from Elizabeth to New Providence was then read in sections and a ballot being taken on each section were unanimously adopted as read.

The following bills audited and approved were read and ordered paid by a unanimous vote:

SNAKE CHARMING.

Some Interesting Information from a Missouri Observer.

Three different incidents of snakes charming birds have fallen under my own observation, writes a New Madrid (Mo.) correspondent of the St. Louis Republic. Once I saw a bluejay charmed by what is commonly known as the "blue racer" snake. The next instance was a redbird charmed by a "blue racer," and the next was a "catbird" charmed by a "cow-sucker." As these snakes are classed as non-poisonous, they could not have bitten the birds and then quietly awaited their death, as some very learned gentleman has stated in your paper. In the first case the bird was in an apple tree, some ten or twelve feet from the ground, when its attention was first arrested. The other two were somewhat under the influence of the snake's charm when first observed. I would judge that it takes from one to two hours for a snake to bring a bird completely under the spell, which they can most certainly do if not disturbed after the bird's attention is once gained.

I have never seen a snake charm a frog, though I have seen them catch frogs often. They are more than a match for the frogs in a foot race; consequently they have frog legs to eat whenever they wish, provided the frogs can be found. The greatest trouble is to swallow the frog after catching him. The frog is swallowed hook first. Whether this is a preference on the part of the snake or whether it is because this is the first part overtaken and laid hold of, I do not know. When caught the poor frog cries out in the most pitiful terror. Then the struggle of life and death begins, with determined animal instinct on the part of the snake; nay, I might say with devilish triumph—for he knows that victory is sure in the end—and almost human horror on the frog's part. The instant a snake seizes a hind leg it is swallowed, and the hard part of the job is to get hold of the other leg without releasing the one he already has. The frog even finds it useless to struggle to release the leg already swallowed by the snake, and seems to realize that its only hope is to keep the leg that is free out of that horrible mouth which has such wonderful suction power. I once saw a garter snake push a frog over thirty yards endeavoring to force the leg of the frog that was free against some obstruction, that it might get a hold upon that also. It finally succeeded, and the struggle was soon over after that. When both hind legs are safe in the snake's power a deeper horror seems to take possession of the poor little creature who has battled so hard for life; its eyes dilate with terror and assume a glassy stare, its whole body is stupefied, paralyzed with an awful dread of its impending fate. The snake does not swallow, it crawls over its prey. It does so by means of strongly contracting muscles in the throat.

THE GOVERNOR'S SPEECH.

It Was Excellent, But His Hearers Didn't Understand a Word.

A correspondent of the Times of India tells the following story, which will doubtless fit in with the reminiscences of a great many Americans of their experience with French waiters, cabmen and such: "I heard a capital story the other evening, which shows how sometimes the most high-flown and choicest Hindustani, culled, as it were, from the rarest flowerbeds of the 'Bag-o-Bahar,' is thrown away and wasted on the soldiery of the more southern presidencies. When the late Sir Charles Trevelyan, who will always probably be remembered because he married Macaulay's sister, and not because he was an Indian big-wig, was Governor of Madras, he had to give away some order of merit or other reward for distinguished service to a native officer of sappers. The occasion was a great one, and the sappers mustered strong to see one of their number decorated. Sir Charles, accompanied by a large and brilliant retinue, all in full dress, rode up to the ground, and then, in the purest and best Urdu that he had learned in the Bengal Presidency, congratulated the native officer about to be decorated on the distinguished honor the Government was doing him, dwelt on the valor and loyalty always displayed by the Madras sappers and miners and recounted the particular services now about to be recognized. The address was given without a pause or check in faultless Hindustani, and when it was finished Sir Charles turned to the Colonel of the sappers and said: 'Do you think your men understood all I said?' 'Not a single word, sir,' was the unexpected reply. 'Then please get some one to explain it to them,' was the not over-pleased remark of the Governor. Whereupon the Colonel called out a native officer, who, in very excellent English, explained to his comrades the flattering remarks which his Excellency the Governor had been pleased to make."

AN ORDINANCE

Relating to vaults and cisterns in the streets of Plainfield.

The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield by their Common Council do enact as follows:

SEC. 1. That no person shall construct any vault or cistern in any street, except by and with the consent of the Common Council, or the committee on streets thereof, and then only on the payment of such sum as shall be from time to time established by resolution of the said Common Council, and in all cases the same shall be completed and furnished within the time prescribed by the said committee on streets under the penalty of twenty dollars.

SEC. 2. That all vaults shall be constructed of stone or brick, and the grating or opening into the street shall be within twelve inches of the coping or area in front of the house to which said vault shall belong or within twelve inches of the curbstone, under the penalty of twenty dollars to be paid by the owner or person making or causing the same to be made.

SEC. 3. That no person shall remove, or cause, or procure, or permit to be removed, or insecurely fixed so that the same can be moved in its bed, any grate or covering to the opening or aperture of any vault in the city of Plainfield, under the penalty of ten dollars.

SEC. 4. That the last preceding section shall not be construed so as to prevent the removal of any such grate or covering; provided, the aperture of such vault, during the removal of such grate or covering, shall be enclosed with a strong box or curb, at least twenty-four inches high; and in no case shall such grate or covering be removed and left off the opening except while said opening is being continuously used, for the purpose of passing anything through said aperture.

SEC. 5. That no person or persons shall suffer or permit the aperture or covering to any such vault in the streets or sidewalks of the city of Plainfield to remain open for any period between sunset and sunrise the next morning, under the penalty of ten dollars.

SEC. 6. That all grates to vaults shall be made of iron, the bars whereof shall be three-fourths of an inch wide and one-half of an inch apart, or such vaults shall be covered with patent vault lights or iron, under a penalty of ten dollars, to be paid by the owners thereof or the occupant of the house to which the same shall belong.

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of every owner or occupant of any lot in the city of Plainfield during the construction of any vault or cistern in any street, and also during the use of any portion of any street for temporary storage of building materials, and also during the making of excavations in any street, and also during the construction of any street for any other purpose, to keep and maintain a passage way over the sidewalk in front of said premises for the width of five feet, if the sidewalk be of that or greater width, and if not then for the entire width of said sidewalk in a condition passable and safe for the travelling public, under penalty of fifteen dollars to be paid by the owner or occupant thereof for each offense, and the further penalty of ten dollars for every day the same shall be continued in condition not passable and safe as aforesaid, after being notified by due process of such fact.

Approved by the Mayor July 2, 1889.
JOB MALE, Mayor.

THE ARTFUL MAIDEN.

One night when it was raining fast,
And wild the wind was blowing;
A maid unsheltered hurried past,
Her shawl about her throwing.

Straightway I hastened to her side,
With brand new silk umbrella.
"Stay, maiden!" 'gan I to implore—
"Matilda—Mary—Ella—"

"My name is June," she sweetly said,
Her face was touched with sorrow;
The silk I spread above her head;
"There—bring it back to-morrow."

A tear rose to her soft, blue eye,
She murmured: "Thank you, kindly!"
I saw her vanish with a sigh—
I trusted her so blindly!

A week—the maid does not return;
Chagrin within me smothers.
Till, by the Press, I chance to learn
That girl has fooled ten others!
—Paul Pastnor, in Once a Week.

A MODERN LEANDER.

Unique But Rather Damp Courtship of a Romantic Pair.

A few evenings ago, as I was walking down Wall street to take the ferry for Brooklyn, my attention was arrested by a young gentleman going the same way on the other side of that thoroughfare. His face was handsomer than common, his step was as graceful as a young fawn's, his hair, which was long and inclined to curl, gave him rather a picturesque look. He wore a suit of dark blue which fitted him perfectly. But these were not the things which caused me to keep my eyes fixed upon him. It flashed upon me as I sighted him that his dark blue suit concealed another of an unusual sort. There was that in the way he carried himself, notwithstanding his springing step, which suggested some concealed panoply. I conjectured that he might be bound for Brooklyn to attend a masquerade party, and that having thrown aside his blue suit in the dressing-room he would appear in the drawing-room as Richard Cœur de Lion or one of the knights that fought at Agincourt. While I was thus speculating the young fellow and I reached the wharf. But he didn't enter the ferry-house; he turned and walked up the dock.

So I dismissed him from my mind, bought my ticket and went on the boat. Pretty soon there was a commotion. Something in the water arrested the attention of passengers whose eyes were sharp. Gazing where they pointed I beheld the young fellow from whom I had parted a few minutes previous lustily swimming out in the direction of Brooklyn. He was perhaps one hundred feet north of the ferry-boat, he took a long, slow stroke and it must have been evident even to the dullest observer that he would have resented any assistance. I noticed that the men who were in charge of the boat seemed to take but a languid interest in the spectacle. One might have thought that a man swimming from New York to Brooklyn was an everyday sight to them. Addressing the one who seemed the best natured, I inquired if he knew who the swimmer was, if he had ever seen him before?

"No," was the reply, "I don't know who he is, but for the last few weeks I've several times seen him going to Brooklyn that way."

"Perhaps," I suggested, "he is a professional diver whose work takes him into the North river but whose home is in Brooklyn. By swimming across the East river he saves ferriage."

"He ain't no diver," remarked my companion in decided tones. "If you get a close look at him you'll see that he looks a blanked sight more like a professional dude."

By this time the boat was entering the slip on the Brooklyn side. My curiosity having become thoroughly aroused, I determined, if possible, to find out who the swimmer was and what made him do it. Accordingly, leaving the boat, I took my position on the Heights just above the ferry-landing waiting for the bold swimmer to land. When I reached the Heights he seemed to be about half way over. Presently the shadows gathered over the river and I lost sight of him. I had gone to Brooklyn for two objects, one of business for the Tribune and one of pleasure for myself. Having transacted my business I hastened to a reception which was being given at the house of one of my old friends on —— avenue. I hadn't been long in the house before I noticed an immensely pretty girl. And when I glanced enviously into the face of the young fellow upon whose arm she was lightly leaning, I saw, to my amazement, that he was the swimmer whom I had lately left in the East river. Naturally, I lost no time in getting to my hostess to find out who this mysterious merman was, and why he did it, and all about it.

The particulars which Mrs. —— imparted to me were so novel and interesting that I urged her to allow me to print them. At first she stoutly demurred, but finally consented on my agreeing to suppress names. This is substantially what she told me; I give her own language, as far as I can recall it:

"The young man's name is Richard ——. He lives on Madison avenue, New York. He graduated at —— College, class of 1884. If you are familiar with boating matters, you will recollect that he pulled the stroke oar in the crew of that year. His fondness for all sorts of athletic sports would seem to be as great to-day as it ever was. Last summer he met the young lady with whom you saw him this evening. Never mind her name; we'll call her Juliet. Her father was at one time professor of Persian literature in an English college, and I am told was essentially a dreamer and a mystic. Her mother, the daughter of a famous prima donna, was born in France, within sight of the Rouen Cathedral.

"Juliet, herself, was born at Patmos. From his earliest youth her father had yearned for the opportunity of visiting the island whereon the apostle had had his sublime and magnificent vision. His imagination kindled whenever he thought of the island and the first year or two of his married life he spent cruising about the Grecian Archipelago, with headquarters at Patmos, among the simple fishermen.

"Perhaps it is not so strange, considering her parentage and her birthplace, that the girl should be such a romantic creature. Of course all nice girls are more or less romantic, but Juliet has as positive a passion for romance as—well, as Edison has for scientific discovery.

"Her mother has been a widow for a number of years, and it was while mother and daughter were summering on Cape Ann, near Pigeon Cove, last summer, that Richard became acquainted with them. He fell in love with Juliet—all the young men who were on the Cape that season were wild about her. But it was by no means so certain that Juliet loved Richard. He must have looked romantic enough, to be sure, with his brilliant eyes and his long hair. But Richard is not what might be called a romantic talker; his conversation lacks freshness and his profession (he is a lawyer) is not at all suggestive of romance. I have sometimes suspected that Richard might have won her directly after meeting her had he hired a vessel and borne her forcibly away from Cape Ann without stopping to ask her own or her mother's opinion of such a proceeding. Of course after the vessel had got well under way he would have fallen at her feet and swore that it was the might of her fair beauty that made him do it, and that he would proceed to plunge a dagger in his heart and jump overboard if she did not consent to allow him to make for the nearest port and marry her. But he didn't perform this romantic coup d'etat and he didn't get her. However, none of the other fellows got her. In September she returned to Brooklyn, and he to New York. He saw a good deal of her during the fall and winter, and I have good reason for believing that the more he saw her the more surely he became convinced that she was his fate, and that he could not win her in any conventional way. But just what to do he couldn't think. He was a good deal puzzled, but by no means hopeless. He realized that she must know that he loved her and the fact that such knowledge did not induce her to rebuff him he interpreted in his favor. It seemed as clear as it had been at Cape Ann that no man was preferred before him.

"Well, such were the circumstances when, one evening in the first week in May, he came over from New York and accompanied her to a meeting of a reading and dramatic club. Brooklyn has a number of such organizations, you know. During the evening Juliet was asked to read something, and consented, after a little urging, to do so. A volume of Hood lay on the table beside her. She is a beautiful reader, and gave the poem which she selected with inimitable spirit. I had the pleasure of listening to her and was charmed. Being a newspaper man, and newspaper men knowing every thing, you are doubtless familiar with the poem. It is the soliloquy of a discontented damsel, who has discovered, or thinks she has discovered, that romance has vanished from the earth. Every verse, and there are a good many of them, ends with her sigh:

There's no romance in that!

As Juliet was reading it occurred to Richard that the poem was meant for him. Before she had finished a daring plan of winning her flashed upon him, and the more he thought it over the better it pleased him. So as he bade Juliet adieu that evening he said to her: 'Miss ——, I thoroughly approve of the sentiments of the poem which you read, and I have determined to do what I can, in my own poor way, to revive the spirit of romance. Hereafter, when you permit me the honor of coming to see you, I shall use neither the conventional ferry-boat nor the prosaic bridge. I shall cross the East river as Leander used to cross the Hellespont when he went calling upon Hero.'

"If Juliet had not been so thoroughly enamored of romance this speech of Richard's must have struck her as just a shade funny. As it was she was immensely delighted.

"'How perfectly lovely!' she exclaimed when Richard had unfolded his new scheme of romantic, if not rapid transit. 'Leander has always been one of my heroes. How true and strong must have been his love for Hero to inspire him for her sake to brave the mad currents of the Hellespont night after night. You must admit, Mr. ——, that the figure which that dauntless youth presents to one's fancy is infinitely more winning than that of the modern young gentleman who is transported to his lady-love hanging to the strap of a car or crushed in the motley crowd of a ferry-boat.'

"'I don't believe,' Richard replied, 'that Leander ever would have been equal to the feat if he hadn't been sure that Hero cared for him.' You may well believe there was a light in Richard's eyes as he spoke that was not to be mistaken. It was as though he had declared, 'If you don't love me or won't love me, Juliet, then I shall only be able to drown as I come swimming to you through the East river. But if you love me the swimming of a dozen East rivers to reach your side would be an easy task.'

"'Of course Hero cared for him,' answered Juliet, with her eyes firmly fixed on the chandelier over their heads. 'None but the brave deserve the fair, and I imagine that they generally get their deserts.' Then her eyes came down from the chandelier and met his a moment. And fired by their tender glances I am sure that Richard felt equal to swimming the entire three-quarters of the earth's surface, which, if I remember my geography correctly, is all water. And so you understand why it happened that you saw my young friend in the East river this evening. Since the 11th of May, when he had this conversation with Juliet, he has come over to see her frequently and every time he has swum over from New York. Her home is on the Heights just over the water, not far from —— street. After leaving the river a quick run of three minutes brings him to the garden in the rear of the house. In the garden is a bit of an arbor, which he has appropriated and turned into a dressing-room. He enters it a dripping merman; he emerges in evening dress, with a flower in his buttonhole, and greets Juliet, whom he finds waiting for him just beyond on the broad piazza.

"Well, that's about all there is to tell. Her mother and she go abroad in the fall and our young friends, in accordance with Juliet's conception of the romantic proprieties, are to be married at Rome next Christmas Eve. I asked her the other day why she chose that time and place. She replied that Italy was the land of romance, and that Rome was the Queen of Italy, and that Christmas Eve was the loveliest eve in the calendar. Just now she is wild about falconry and Richard has promised her to devote a portion of their honeymoon to teaching her to hunt with a hawk. Then, of course, she will have her portrait painted with a falcon on her wrist. Perhaps you read the other day in the Brooklyn Eagle an account of a correspondence which was being carried on by a Brooklyn belle and her New York lover by means of carrier-pigeons. No names were mentioned, but I happen to know that Juliet and Richard were the persons referred to. He himself told me of the origin of the correspondence. A few weeks ago, in course of a fervent protest against the prosaic, Juliet quoted to him a verse from that poem of Hood of which I spoke. I think I can give you the lines. Let's see.

"'Of light guitar I can not boast,
He never serenades,
He writes and sends it by the post,
He doesn't bribe the maids;
No stealth, no hempen ladder—no,
He comes with loud rat-tat
That startles all of Bedford Row—
There's no romance in that!'

The result was that Richard concluded that instead of sending it by the post he would organize a romantic carrier-pigeon service."

Such, in substance, were the facts of this interesting episode of New York and Brooklyn life which I obtained from Mrs. ——, and which, with her kind permission, are printed in the Tribune. Naturally I asked her how she came to know so much of the affair. She replied that she had known both of these young people since they were children and that they were constantly at her house. "Besides," she added, with a laugh, "I am like Dean Swift's servant, I'm good at drawing inferences."—N. Y. Tribune.

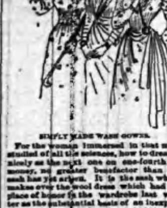
THE VACATION WARDROBE.

How to Dress on Nothing and Lay Up Money.

Points for Women Who Are Going on an Outing But Have Little to Spend—Ways and Means of Gowning One's Self for August at Small Outlay.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

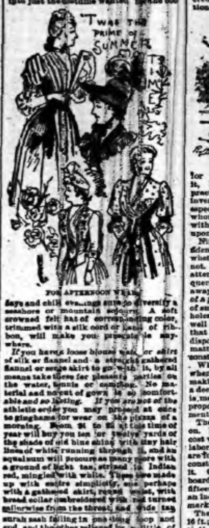
It costs a pretty penny to dress nowadays when Redfern will not so much as put scissors into a gingham short of $65, nor build you a simple wool gown to travel in for less than $90 or $100, and yet there is many a sweet girl who cannot say to the ladies' tailor, "Good sir, here is my Saratoga trunk; fill it and let my wardrobe blossom as the rose," but whose small bush, if it buds at all, must do so as the result of her own trowelling and sprinkling, and who goes forth on her summer vacation, nevertheless, decked with her bonny breast knot, that is to say, becomingly clothed and in her happiest frame of mind.



SIMPLY MADE WASH GOWNS.

For the woman immersed in that most studied of all the sciences, how to dress as nicely as the next one on one-fourth the money, no greater benefactor than the sash has yet arisen. It is the sash which makes over the wool dress which had the place of honor in the wardrobe last winter as the substantial basis of an inexpensive clothes supply for August at the seaside. Suppose that that same wool gown, green or tan or brown or blue, no matter what its color, has a bodice too short for beauty. A wide sash of soft folds of harmonizing or contrasting surah will lengthen the waist as many inches as may be desired and freshen it wonderfully. Suppose that this last season's standby was made with one of those plain, untrimmed basque bodices which are relegated for the present to the background. A little readjustment of its seams and of those of the upper part of the skirt will give you, with a sash, two gowns, instead of one, for your outing, the conventional basque for rainy days and for traveling, and, the skirt, being fastened above this and the silk or ribbon lengths prettily knotted, a modernized affair for small social occasions and afternoons. Many an economical woman has had one or more new dresses purposely built on the adjustable principle.

The detachable vest shares with the sash the heart of the woman to whom a dollar means 100 cents and often seems to mean 125. In her rummaging of the dry goods shops she is sure to come on remnants of delicately colored silk or bits of lace which can be bought for little money. One breadth of silk will make a dressy vest, which should have a collar of medium height fitting about the throat and hooking behind. The vest itself should be sloped to fit the curve of the neck and then gathered on full, shirred, smocked or laid in fine side plaitings. If the plaits are chosen, a pointed bit of ribbon makes a dainty finish, drawing flat down smoothly to the waist line. If the silk is long enough the loose front makes the prettier finish, fulled at the waist line and the remainder drawn to the right hip and allowed to fall in a fringe. The lace vest is cut on a silk foundation and has a jabot collar with front of figured lace fulled at the throat and again at the waist, where it is confined by ribbons. In any case the vest is adjustable and may be worn with any gown, turning the object of all this consideration, that serviceable wool dress, which, it is assumed, has already been redraped and provided with new facings into just the costume wanted for the cool days and chill evenings sure to diversify a seashore or mountain sojourn. A soft crowned felt hat of corresponding color, trimmed with a silk cord or band of ribbon, will make you presentable anywhere.



'Twas the prime of summer time

FOR AFTERNOON WEAR.

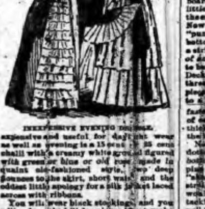
If you have a loose blouse waist or shirt of silk or flannel and a straight gathered flannel or serge skirt to go with it, by all means take these for pleasure parties on the water, tennis or camping. No material and no cut of gown is so comfortable and so lasting. If you are not of the athletic order you may proceed at once to ginghams for wear on the piazza of a morning. From $4 to $5 at this time of year will buy you ten or twelve yards of the shade of old blue shining with tiny hair lines of white running through it, and an equal sum will procure as many more with a ground of light tan, striped in Indian red, mingled with white. These are made up with entire simplicity, one perhaps with a gathered skirt, round waist, with broad collar embroidered with red turned sailorwise from the throat, and wide tan surah sash falling in one long loop and end, and the other relieved by a little of the point de gene lace, recently imported to sell at 29 cents the yard, which comes fully three inches wide and is one of the most effective of garnitures, will give you two serviceable low cost gowns, to be worn with a little rough straw white sailor hat with smooth gros grain ribbon band and flat bow.

For the necessary afternoon or calling gown you can choose a sateen, a challi—the daintiest material ever woven for poor folks who like pretty things—a linen lawn, a wash silk or a gloriosa, which will give the same effect as poplin or silk warp Henrietta at comparatively small figures. This season's sateens, especially the Japanese designs, are exquisite, and nothing can be prettier than one of them made up with pointed vest of white mull. The gloriosa is rather a wiry fabric and makes up best in the Directory style, in a soft gray or green—if you can wear the fashionable color—opening over an accordion-plaited front of white gloriosa or white nun's veiling. A long muslin fichu in pink or pale or deep yellow makes a pretty throat finish loosely tied or looped to one side.

Washable silk in narrow stripes of gray-blue and white at 65 cents a yard makes a not expensive afternoon costume. The waist is laid in loose folds from either shoulder over a pointed yoke of white surah. The fullness of the waist is confined by a wide surah sash knotting at one side. The straight skirt is gathered very full and the half long sleeves are puffed at the shoulder, then laid in accordion plaits and allowed to flare at the elbows. Ten yards of wash silk and two and a half of surah are the required materials. A black linen lawn, cut in Directory fashion over a blouse of white India silk, makes a cool and fresh August robe.

With any of these afternoon dresses a black hat will be in order, and the girl who counts her pennies must remember that it will outwear three in any shade. One of the new wide straws, with the crown raised barely an inch above the brim, and a band of openwork insertion for effect of coolness, is much more durable than the pretty but frail lace hats so much in vogue. Black ribbons and gay field flowers make suitable trimmings. If one does not wish to countenance extravagance, a single parasol will answer in a dark green or cool ecru pongee or black with plain, but handsome wood handle.

For informal evening occasions, such as a modest wardrobe can be made equal to, a cool light India silk or challi are the best materials. The India silk is a bit of a luxury, in delicate pink made in Empire style with modestly open throat, the fullness of the short waist disposed of in very narrow side plaits, laid back and front and then allowing the straight skirt to fall full to the ground. The three elbow sleeves are finished with lace frills. Less expensive and useful for daylight wear as well as evening is a 15 cent or 25 cent challi with a creamy white ground figured with green or blue or old rose made in quaint old-fashioned style, two deep flounces to the skirt, short waist and the oddest little apology for a silk jacket laced across with ribbons.



INEXPENSIVE EVENING DRESSES.

You will wear black stockings, and you will reduce the bill for gloves if you make yourself comfortable with black silk mitts. A white dress, if you have one, is a comfort, but will prove a bottomless pit of expense for washing. An outfit of this description, either expanded or simplified according to the pocketbook, would prove no serious drain on the most modest resources, and would make a girl more than presentable almost anywhere. A lace or cashmere scarf to tie across the bosom makes a pretty wrap, especially if worn with a poke bonnet of rough straw, which need not cost above a quarter and is trimmed adequately with white lawn and a pink rose or a couple of white wings. Taste is more necessary than money in planning a summer wardrobe, so pack your trunk, look well and have a good time.

ELLEN OSBORN.

Fashion Notes.

Parasols of white surah, with ivory or light colored carved wood handles, are in high favor.

The "fore-and-aft" jockey cap of white flannel or corduroy is again worn with boating and yachting costumes.

The French toque is much smaller than those worn here. It has a large, slender crown, only two inches high in front and slanting toward the back.

HOW TO BUILD A BOAT.

One for Fishing Purposes That Will Be Comfortable and Safe.

The Expenditure is Small and the Exercise Healthy—If a Man Can Drive a Nail and Handle a Saw It is all That is Necessary.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

Infinitely many men, whose occupations tend to the exercise of their minds rather than their bodies, find diversion in the use of tools for wood and iron working, generally the former, and very often these amateur workmen develop a degree of taste, ingenuity and skill that would do credit to the ablest artisans. The disposition is one that should be encouraged for the physical benefit derived from it, but still more because of the practical values of the exercise of inventive, creative and formative talent, especially among a people like ours, to whom it is impossible to make anything without at least endeavoring to improve upon their models.

PUNT AND SKIFF.

Nine men out of ten have an innate confidence that they can use carpenter's tools, whether they have ever tried to do so or not. It is not until one has made the attempt that he realizes the almost inconquerable tendency of a saw to squirm away from a straight line through a board; of a plane to make surfaces rougher instead of smoother; of an auger to bore crooked holes. Let us suppose that he has gone well beyond that rudimentary knowledge, that he has a good stock of tools and is disposed to make worthy use of them as a matter of recreation. What shall he construct?

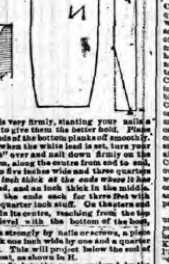
Why, if he has any water to float it in when it is done, there is nothing in the making of which he will be likely to have a deeper interest and from which, when it is made, he will derive more pleasure—proportionately to the effort for its attainment—than a boat. What sort of a boat?

The "punt" is the thing to commence on. It will not be difficult to build; will cost very little in either materials, time or labor; and you will almost love it if you are fond of fishing. If you decide then to construct a "punt," here is the way to do it. Obtain two sound and clear pine boards, smoothly planed, sixteen feet long, fifteen inches wide and three-quarters of an inch thick. Lay one on your bench and mark it like diagram T.

The distance between A and A will be 16 ft.; between A and B, 4 inches; from C to C, 8 ft. Saw your board out to the shape indicated by black lines, round the angles at C C to a gentle easy curve and smooth the edge accurately with the plane. Now lay the board so finished upon the other, scribe off its exact shape and finish up the second board so as to be precisely like the first. From an inch plank sixteen inches wide, cut out a piece shaped like the diagram X.

Its length must be 4 ft. on the upper edge and 3 ft. 4in. at the bottom of the bevel. The small projections at the ends of the lower edge are to aid in setting it correctly in the middle of the long planks, across them, where the dotted line D D appears in the T diagram. Nail it in place there not for permanency however. Now the long planks and the short one, looked upon from above, will resemble a lanky letter H. Cut two pieces of oak or ash 3 feet long and 4 inches wide, and an inch thick and give to their ends the same bevel that you have given to the piece of plank temporarily nailed in the middle. These are the end pieces. Put them in position and by means of ropes draw in the ends of the side planks, springing them exactly together, so that they will fit perfectly. Now fasten the end pieces permanently, by means of long screws and the frame of your "punt" will look like diagram Z.

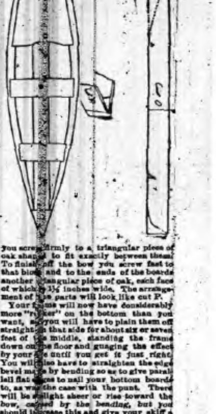
If you have bored the holes for your screws in advance, and done so correctly, the work of fitting the end pieces will be easier. The flare of your side boards will have made a bevel on their edges, which you must plane away, correcting them by a "straight edge" until their edge surfaces are parallel and smoothly level. Cut smooth and join your bottom boards so that they will fit very closely. If you will take the trouble to rabbet them the job will be all the better. Before nailing them on the bottom put a layer of thick white lead on the under edge of the side planks, and as you fasten them coat their edges heavily with the same material so as to ensure perfect joints. Nail the bottom boards very firmly, slanting your nails a little to give them the better hold. Plane the ends of the bottom planks off smoothly. Now when the white lead is set, turn your "punt" over and nail down firmly on the bottom, along the centre from end to end, a strip five inches wide and three quarters of an inch thick at the ends where it has to bend, and an inch thick in the middle. Deck the ends each for three feet with three-quarter inch stuff. On the stern end piece in its centre, reaching from the top to a level with the bottom of the boat, fasten strongly by nails or screws, a piece of oak one inch wide by one and a quarter thick. This will project below the end of the boat, as shown in H.



Now fit into the space enclosed by the dotted line between the post and the bottom of the boat a piece of one inch pine plank and you will have put on a "skeg" which will enable you to row straight, which without this attachment would not have been easy. Again attaching your boat on its upper side you nail two stout pieces of plank, each eight inches long and of the width of your proposed seats to each side plank and to the bottom where you propose to locate your seats. Upon these establish your seats, nailing them in firmly as they will do much to stiffen and strengthen the boat. Fasten an oak gunwale on the sides with screws between the end decks. Set a ring-bolt in the bow through the deck into the end-piece in its centre for attaching a line and another similarly placed in the stern will be of use, as you will sometimes desire, probably, to have two anchors out to hold your boat in a particular position when fishing. You had better buy iron row-locks as they are better than wooden ones and only cost seventy-five cents per pair. If you do, screw a couple of oak blocks to the gunwale and side to support them. But, if you cannot get iron ones, or prefer to make your own, here is the way. In a cleat of oak 9 in. x 2 in. x 1½ in. and 3¾ in. apart, cut two mortises ½ in. wide and 1½ in. long. Screw these on the inside of the gunwales opposite each other in a convenient position relative to the seat. Make two row-locks to fit the mortises half an inch wider above the cleats, projecting four inches above the gunwale and an inch below the cleat. Bore a small hole through each below the cleat for a string to lash it by so that it will not drop out and go overboard when it is worn and dry. Your "punt" is now complete all but painting or tarring, either of which you can do as you prefer, but one or other of which you must do if you propose to keep her dry and in good condition. It is a good way to tar the inside thoroughly and give the outside a couple of solid coats of paint or even three. If you want to, you can hang a rudder on the stern post, but that is a good deal of style for a "punt".

You ought now to be able to progress another easy step in maritime construction and make a skiff or bateau, which though not quite so solid a foundation as the punt for fishermen, will have a more jaunty look and be much easier rowing. Indeed the skiff is an exceedingly serviceable and pleasant boat, and you are liable to like it so well as to be led into lots of trouble by it, fitting it with a sail and even a centre-board. Here is the way your trouble begins with the building of the skiff. You proceed just as you have already done in the case of the punt, except that when you lay out your side planks it is only for cutting the stern end of them in that fashion.

The stern you gracefully slope, rounding it gradually from C to the straight bottom at D. You nail in a centre mould temporarily—at T—just as in shaping the punt, to give the bevel of the sides, and you fasten firmly in place by screws the oak stern piece. Then by tautening your rope on the bow ends of the planks you bring them close together, giving them the upward curve, roughly shown by the dotted line A B, in so doing, owing to the bevel they take from the mould. Those ends you screw firmly to a triangular piece of oak shaped to fit exactly between them. To finish off the bow you screw fast to that bit and to the ends of the boards another triangular piece of oak, each face of which is 1½ inches wide. The arrangement of the parts will look like cut P.



Your frame will now have considerably more "rocker" on the bottom than you want, so you will have to plain them off straight on that side for about six or seven feet of the middle, standing the frame down on the floor and guaging the effect by your eye until you get it just right. You will also have to straighten the edge bevel made by bending so as to give parallel flat edges to nail your bottom boards to, as was the case with the punt. There will be a slight sheer or rise toward the bow, caused by the bending, but you should increase this and give your skiff a more jaunty appearance by hollowing out the top edges in a gradual gentle slope, from 1½ or 2 inches in the centre to nothing at bow and stern, thus making an actual sheer both ways, which will seem considerably more to the eye than it really is. All the rest of your work on the skiff—bottom, centre batten, seats, gunwales, skag, row locks, etc., will be just the same on the punt, except that instead of decks you will fit into the bow and stern, well supported and firmly fastened seats, about three inches below the gunwale. From above your boat will then look like cut R. Great care should be taken to lay all the joints, when making them fast, in thick white lead and when completed your skiff will be well worth thorough painting.

J. H. CONNELLY.

PERSONATED A KING.

A Funny Incident in the Career of the Late Congressman Burnes.

"The late Congressman Burnes," said a well-known politician to a Kansas City (Mo.) Journal reporter, "was a whole-souled gentleman, and no one enjoyed a joke better than he. One instance of this was impressed upon my memory. Some years ago, you will remember, King Kalakaua of the Sandwich Islands made a tour of this country. He came down from Omaha to Kansas City, and at St. Joseph the party was joined by Congressman Burnes, for whom the foreign monarch at once conceived a strong admiration, both on account of his size and jovial qualities. At Kansas City King Kalakaua was booked for a speech, and a very brief but excellent one had been prepared. An unforeseen obstacle to compliance with this programme arose, however. As every one knows, the dark-skinned potentate is addicted to the variety of cup that cheers and also inebriates, and the result on this occasion was that when the time arrived to prepare for the Kansas City speech his highness was oblivious to all mundane affairs, and lay in his berth as drunk as the proverbial specimen of nobility.

"What was to be done? It wouldn't do not to make the speech, and the royal party were at their wits' end. But at this juncture Congressman Burnes came to the rescue.

"'Leave it to me,' said he, 'and I'll fix it; only do just as I tell you.'

"There was no time to be lost, so by Colonel Burnes' instructions Kalakaua was quickly divested of his royal costume, which was promptly donned by the big Missouri representative. Colonel Burnes was of dark complexion—quite so—and he didn't make a half-bad Sandwich islander when he stood arrayed in all the regal paraphernalia. Just as the toilet was completed the train rolled into the Union depot at Kansas City. It was quite dark, but there was an immense crowd of people who had assembled to see the island monarch. When Colonel Burnes stepped with stately tread on the rear platform of the Pullman the crowd outside cheered lustily. The Colonel cast a fierce look at the multitude and then commenced to utter the most remarkable string of jargon I ever heard. Laugh! We all laughed until we were almost dead, but Colonel Burnes remained as solemn as an owl. The speech took immensely, and when with a dignified wave of the hand the Colonel ceased, his audience cheered him to the echo and gazed with admiration at the manly proportions of the supposed King.

"In majestic silence Colonel Burnes stood until a moment or two later the train pulled out, and I suppose there are people here to this day who believe they heard King Kalakaua talk in his own language. I'll never forget," continued the gentleman, "Colonel Burnes' appearance on that occasion, and I can see him now, when, after re-entering the car and sitting in solemn silence for a moment, he turned to his laughing friends and said: 'Boys, don't you think after that I'm entitled to a drink?'"

Encouraging Honesty.

Mr. Holdfast, to the editor—"Yes, sir, there was more than $10,000 in my pocket-book when I lost it. You can add to the notice that I will pay a liberal reward for its return. I'm always willing to encourage honesty." Mr. Holdfast, the next morning—"So you found my pocket-book, did you, little boy, and brought it back to me with its contents untouched? That's right, sonny, that's right. Here's ten cents for your trouble."

Both Were Taking Chances.

Woman (to tramp): "And if I give you a nice piece of hash, you promise to saw some wood?"

Tramp: "Yes, 'm."

Woman (doubtfully): "I don't know whether I can put confidence in you or not."

Tramp (reproachfully): "You ought to, ma'am. I have confidence enough in you to eat the hash."

Proof of His Love.

"Yes, Mr. Baker loves me more than he used to, Mr. Parker."

"Indeed! What leads you to think so, Mrs. Baker?"

"Why, the dear fellow has discharged the handsomest servant girl in the house."

[illegible] the Doctor's Dinner.

On Saturday night the cellar of the residence of County Physician Westcott, of Fanwood, was entered by a thief, who cut out the wire netting over one of the windows, and carried off some meat, and other eatables, which had been prepared for Sunday.

The Contract Awarded.

A committee from the Somerset County Board of Chosen Freeholders met at the Fisher house in Bound Brook on Thursday and examined the bids for the construction of a low truss iron bridge over Middle Brook near Bound Brook. The bridge is to be 70 feet long by 20 feet in width. The contract was awarded to the New Jersey Steel and Iron Company, for $1,900.

Racing on Saturday.

Weather permitting, on Saturday next there will be a series of exciting contests on the track of the Gentlemen's Driving Park Association. The races of Saturday last were postponed on account of the rain, and these together with additional races will make up next Saturday's budget. It is also expected that several new horses will be produced on the track that day.

Why Not Enclose the Grounds?

Is this city ever to have baths and an enclosed base ball grounds? The last question may be taken as a suggestion and if the merchants here will post up the management of the Crescent Club will see that their advertisement is properly painted on the space allotted to them, and the ball grounds will soon be enclosed. Outside of a newspaper advertisement, there is nothing better.

Middlesex Gun Club.

At a regular meeting of the Middlesex Gun Club, held at Force's Hotel, Saturday evening, July 27, the following named were appointed a committee, with power, to conduct the coming tournament of the club, Oct. 8, 9, 10 and 11: Seymour M. Smith, W. Fred Quimby, Thos. H. Keller, Nief Apgar, M. W. Mulford, Wm. Smalley. A number of names were dropped from the roll for non-payment of dues.

Life is Too Sweet!

A local ball match is being arranged between the heavy weights of Somerville, and one of the town's papers suggested through a correspondent that "the reporter of the Plainfield Press act as umpire."

No, thanks! Our reporter does not want to die yet. His best girl and her understudy are both in the city, just now, and he is feeling in remarkably good condition.

The Miles From Ocean to Home.

All have been interested in the marvelous and courageous fly of Chas. Doane's homing "Leander," told of in THE PRESS. His latest fly from ocean to home, as told exclusively in these columns, is officially figured as follows:

"Leander" and his loft-mate "Hermes," were liberated from the City of Rome, bearing a message from Julian Hawthorne, Thursday, July 25, at 5.40 P. M., in latitude 40.25, longitude 69.36. They arrived home together, Friday, July 26, at 7.50 A. M. The air line distance from steamship, to Plainfield, was 230 miles.

A Guide for Hearts and Homes.

Mr. G. A. Lockwood, a worthy man with a worthy cause, will begin his calls upon the residents of the city and the Borough, next week, offering the Rev. Madison C. Peters' new work, "The Path of Glory." THE PRESS can heartily recommend both him and the book.

The latter treats of the moral and religious life of man and of matters peculiarly important as relating to woman's enjoyment in social life; and it teaches of the church, spiritual and future life at all. The book is a treasure house, and only a hint can thus be given of its beauties and excellencies. Every phase of life is embraced—babyhood, childhood, youth, manhood and old age. The book is profusely and handsomely illustrated.

Sanders Heard From.

Many will be interested to know that the anxiety of the relatives of George Sanders has been allayed by news of his good health and whereabouts. Chief of Police Carey assures THE PRESS that the missing man is safe and sound.

Sanders has written from Newtown, Queens county, L. I., to his late employers, Messrs R. W. Rice & Co. He expresses in the letter deep penitence for his wrong-doing and a desire to return and prove by future service and faithfulness that his regret is sincere and his penitence honest.

Mr. Rice has answered the communication and proposed a meeting between himself and Sanders for the purpose of a personal consideration of the matter.

Dismissed the Charge.

The case of Mr. S. C. Allen vs. Messrs. Stall and Murray, whom the complainant charged with driving off with his horse and buggy from a road in North Plainfield, a few evenings since, came up before Justice Hardy in Spencer's Hall, Monday afternoon, Mr. W. L. Hetfield appearing for the prosecution. Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh appeared for the defence. Considerable time was occupied in hearing the testimony, and at the close the Justice dismissed the charge, likewise the defendants.

Counsel for the defence then gave notice that he would bring suit against the complainant for $10,000 damages each, on behalf of his clients, for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment.

HIS CONFIDENCE BETRAYED.

Mr. L. A. Ebenezer, lumber dealer, of this city, made an assignment, on Saturday, to Mr. Bushfield of North Plainfield. Mr. Ebenezer's assets figure up to $[illegible], but in round numbers, but his liabilities amount to considerably less.

The assignment was brought about by certain parties taking advantage of confidence reposed in them by Mr. Ebenezer. The assignee, however, hopes to be able to realize something near the full value of the assets, in which case creditors would be paid in full.

All the creditors who have been heard from, concede that Mr. Ebenezer's entire good faith and sterling honesty have never been questioned, and are now free from the slightest taint even of suspicion. This will be confirmed by any Plainfield citizen who knows Mr. Ebenezer.

Equestriennes of The Netherwood and Their Escorts.

The horseback party from Hotel Netherwood, Tuesday, July 30, consisted of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. McCready, Miss Bostwick and Mr. O. B. Bridgman, Miss McCormick and Mr. C. S. Buchanan, Miss Cummins and Mr. T. S. Ormiston, Miss F. B. Whiting and Mr. W. J. Weber, Miss Bradley and Mr. Edw. Laidlaw, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Miller, and Messrs J. R. Brown, Jr., T. W. Weeks and G. W. Porter.

A ten-mile ride through the charming country roads in Plainfield's suburbs was intensely enjoyed by every one of the company. Upon returning to the Hotel a special course dinner of game and fish chops was served, Mrs. F. E. Miller acting as hostess. Subsequently the party wound up the evening with a [illegible] dance and a Virginia reel, the ladies in their handsome habits and the gentlemen in riding boots and spurs.

Where Was This Marriage?

The Sea Bright Sentinel of Friday, says: "Among recent arrivals at the Hotel Normandie-by-the-Sea, were Mr. and Mrs. F. K. Harte. Mr. Harte is the son of the celebrated novelist and litterateur, Bret Harte, and both he and his entertaining wife were delighted with the beautiful scenery at this famous hostelry."

Killed by a Mad Dog.

The farmers and villagers of Fanwood Township are alarmed because so many of their cattle are dying off. A mad dog was seen roaming about the fields near Fanwood, recently, and Mr. James Lambert shot the animal. Within the past week, Mr. H. S. Little has lost two cows and Mr. Isaac Lambert has also lost two valuable cattle. All the animals showed marked signs of the rabies, and it is believed that they were bitten by the dog.

Mr. John Lambert has one mad cow at present, and two more of his herd are reported sick.

A Rumor for Mr. Daft's Attention.

Something happened in New York, recently, that might easily happen in this city when Mr. Daft gets his electric cars running.

A woman got in a Fourth Avenue car who made quite a sensation. She was very tall and dressed in a two inch plaid and blue striped tennis gown, made tight behind and loose like a house wrapper in front. Her face was as odd and ugly as her Mother Hubbard costume. After she had paid her fair and settled herself in a corner, the passengers noticed that the car went slower and slower, until it stopped altogether. The conductor, after holding a consultation with the electrician, who was much perturbed at the strange conduct of the machine, finally stepped up to the penitentiary dress and politely requested the owner to take the next car. She did so, and all went on their way rejoicing.

The reader has often heard of the proverbial ugly woman who stopped an eight-day clock, but never before of one who would stop an electric motor. But as there are a number in Plainfield who dress unconscionably giddy, their effect should be provided against before the street cars are started. Possibly Mr. Daft could invent a switch opposite each seat that would ground the shock of a woman's ugly looking clothes.

Township Committee Meeting.

The North Plainfield Township Committee held a meeting on Thursday evening, with President Coddington in the chair. All the members were present.

The Chairman reported that the Colthar matter had been settled, Mr. Colthar agreeing to accept $400 in settlement of all claims against the Township. The money, he said had been paid over to Mr. Colthar, and the receipt for the same has been filed with the treasurer.

The claims of Jasper Wilson, $138.36, for stone, and Wm. Pangborn, $7.20 for taking Mrs. Cuff to the asylum, were ordered paid. The bill of the Times Printing Co., for printing assessment notices was sent back to be properly sworn to.

The treasurer reported that four bonds amounting to $2,000 and $200 interest would fall due on August 1, and he was authorized to pay the same.

The committee decided to offer a reward of $10 for information that will lead to the arrest and conviction of the person or persons creating fires in the woods on the mountains within the township limits, and the Clerk was authorized to have notices of the reward printed and furnished to each of the road-masters to be posted by the latter; also to advertise the same in the Plainfield papers.

The Overseer of the Poor submitted his book for inspection, and it was ascertained that Noah Drake was drawing largely from the poor fund. The committee decided to take steps to have Mr. Drake placed in an asylum so as to relieve the township of his support.

The meeting then adjourned.

PRAISE FOR A PLAINFIELDER.

The Rev. Charles E. Dunn, son of Mr. Solomon F. Dunn of this city, and whose wife is the daughter of Mr. Wm. P. Demarest of East Fifth street, preached in New Brunswick, Sunday. The Times of that city, said the next day: "The Rev. Mr. Dunn is gifted with a fine voice, graceful gestures, an easy flow of choice language, brilliant descriptive powers, and a magnetic style of eloquence combined with a logical arrangement of ideas."

Other local papers had the following: "The Rev. Charles E. Dunn of Albany, N. Y., preached two excellent sermons yesterday at the First Reformed church, the pastor, the Rev. P. T. Pockman, being off on his vacation."

"Yesterday the pulpit of the First Reformed church was very acceptably filled by Rev. Chas. E. Dunn, of Albany, N. Y. At the morning services his text was: Philippians II, 12: "Work out your own salvation." Salvation, he said, had two functions, an inner and outer function. The inner function is God given—seed planted in the heart. The other function is the work of cultivation.

"The question, 'How can we work out our own salvation?' was answered negatively. It cannot be done for us. Joining the church will not do it. In this connection it was stated that too many get in the church by proxy. Grand organs, fine music, brilliant preaching and fashionable people tempt men to join the church and enjoy that which they have not earned—have not worked out for themselves. A man really possesses only what he uses; what he gets himself, by hard work. The club man and millionaire do not enjoy or appreciate their privileges because they are provided by others. A man may know all the creeds and rituals and be well read in sacred and profane history; that does not profit him, unless he has worked them into the woof and web of his soul. Salvation is not a heart jewel to be hidden in the bosom and taken out occasionally to look at. It should be a brilliant glow in the heart all the time.

"At the evening service his text was from St. John XXI, 6: 'Cast the net on the right side of the ship.' His introduction was a thrilling description of scenes that had taken place prior to the morning when Christ appeared on the banks of the Sea of Tiberas and uttered the memorable words of the text.

"He announced that his sermon was addressed to business men. His application was direct and personal. Which side of the boat are you casting the net? What are your relations to the great questions that are agitating the minds and thoughts of this busy world? What are your relations to intemperance—the greatest curse and scourge of the country? Are you countenancing the traffic that ruins body and soul? It is not necessary to wallow in the mire and filth to be [illegible]. If you are tacitly consenting to a wrong you are on the left side of the ship and on the opposite side from Christ. He said 'cast your nets on the right side of the ship.' He referred to the weariness and disappointment of the disciples at the time Christ appeared to them, and was conscious of Christ. He knew their disappointment. Christ was also omnipotent and had the power which was manifested in the draught of fish when the net was cast on the right side of the ship.

"Christ comes to-night with the same words. Do you hear him? If there be one here to-night that does not know Christ, God grant that he may hear and heed the command, 'Cast thy net on the right side of the ship.'"

Gesang and Turn Verein Notes.

The Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein has collected and forwarded $40 for the relief of the two German societies of Johnstown, Pa., the Cambria Maennerchor and the Johnstown Turn Verein.

Additional Mails.

Postmaster Force has secured a direct mail pouch to Elizabeth on the 2.25 P. M., train, and a pouch also for Philadelphia and intermediate stations on the 5.04 P. M., train. Both these mails will hereafter reach above points several hours earlier than heretofore.

The Commissioners Did Not Meet.

Wednesday was the time set for a meeting of the Commissioners appointed by the District Court to examine and assess damages in the case of Herman Winter vs. the New York and New Jersey Telephone company, but as the Commissioners did not meet, it is thought that the matter has been amicably adjusted between Mr. Winter and the telephone company.

ABOUT OUR NEIGHBORS.

We are right in the middle of the Summer season, with its diversions and dissipations. These are not very violent, to be sure; the long, warm days make people inclined to take things easy, and a great many go so far as actually to leave the place. Example: The family of Mr. David P. Hall, which has departed for the cooler country of Newport, all except Mr. Hall himself, who remains at home, and Mr. Samuel P. Hall, of the second generation, who has gone on a horrible tour in the Adirondacks, where he will stay for several weeks, and whence it is to be feared he will return with wonderful stories of the slaughter of bears and deers that will create consternation in the village, if anyone listens them. Not to insinuate in any way that young Mr. Hall is unusually addicted to relating tall stories, but this is one of the bad effects of a trip of that character. I am something of a liar myself, and know how easy it is for campers-out to acquire such habits.

For those that stay at home, lawn tennis and iced cream are the principal sources of fun. The effects of these two are directly opposite, but combined their tendency is quite cooling. They play tennis at the Fanwood Club from one end of the week to the other, Sundays of course excepted, and they have iced cream on Saturday afternoons. The lawn tennis is restricted to club members and visitors, but the iced cream is available to anyone possessed of fifteen cents. The club was started with the intention of being very exclusive, and as a rule they have lived up to it, but supplies are necessary, even for a club, and when exclusiveness and the mammon of unrighteousness come together, the weakest must go to the wall.

But there is another place where you can find iced cream, with the great advantage of being at Scotch Plains, and as no sane person would think of going to Fanwood for anything that he could get anywhere else, the chances are that this place will be well patronized. This establishment is none other than our old friend the Women's Exchange. At this place you only have to pay ten cents a plate. A weak sign on the door explains that the Exchange is open on Wednesday and Saturday evenings, in addition to the regular afternoons. Iced cream is only to be obtained on Wednesdays and Saturdays. There is a very agreeable custom that prevails quite generally throughout the country, that of sending to the local newspapers specimens of large strawberries, watermelons, etc. This idea could very easily be extended to iced cream; the undersigned would feel honored by the receipt of specimen bricks, and under their cooling influence might be enabled to explain to the readers of THE PRESS the multifarious advantages of the Exchange as an iced cream rendezvous, how cool and quiet it is, etc., etc.,—topics on which at present he must preserve a silence unbroken and profound.

Mr. Samuel P. Hall, above referred to, while out walking a short time ago, killed a large and exceedingly venomous puff adder. The scene of this exploit was Mountain avenue, near the residence of Lewis V. Miller. The animal was from two to twelve feet long.

It seems that the parrot belonging to Station-master Brown wasn't dead after all. He has come back to his old corner, and once more his cage swings in the ticket office. But Mr. Brown is the greatest man for animals you ever saw. On Friday morning, the day of the accident, there was a great crowd at the station, including the passengers for the 8:07, the 8:24 and the 8:43, and people had a good opportunity for examining Mr. Brown's curiosities. Just as we were getting aboard the train Mr. Townsend told me that Mr. Brown had a young alligator in his office. I thought at the time that this was only a July yarn, but that evening Mr. Brown showed me the reptile as large as life, and which he said was the crowning glory of his collection of quadrupeds and bipeds. The alligator lives in a tin pail on top of the stove, and when the cold weather comes Mr. Brown is going to try the experiment of building a fire under him. The animal is about a foot long, more than half of which is tail and the remainder pretty evenly divided between head and body. His color is black, with bright yellow bands. Mr. Brown is going to take care of him until he is large and dangerous and old enough to run around and look out for himself. Then there will be fun. When he is of a proper size Mr. Brown expects to skin him every month for shoes, at least that's what he says.

Mr. Silas Brower visited Scotch Plains, last Thursday, and called on his old friends. He is now with an architect in Temple Court and has displayed great architectural ability, having evidently chosen the right vocation.

Mr. Laughton, a graduate of Belfast University, and teacher in the High School there, is visiting with his sister, Mrs. Olaff Johannesen.

The roads and sidewalks in the Fanwood district are kept in fine order—it is a pity that the example is not contagious. Martine avenue presents an appearance that is really refreshing. The maple trees between Midway avenue and the residence of Mr. Charles Kyte have been trimmed and their lower boughs cut away; this is a great improvement in appearance, and will be appreciated most of all by the bicyclists, to whom the low boughs overhead have been a source of great annoyance. Why can't the same thing be done on Park avenue and Front street?

Mr. Brown has hitherto controlled the newspaper traffic of Fanwood, but now he has a rival. Mr. Wilbur Miller has started in the business of selling morning papers. Mr. Brown has the advantage of having his papers right in the station, always ready when called for, and so Wilbur hit upon the expedient of going to meet his customers half way. Then Mr. Brown employed a boy, Frank Fisher by name, to do the same thing, and this rivalry may end in our having our papers brought to the door before breakfast. If the custom of charging an extra cent upon all New York papers should be broken up, it would be a good thing for the place.

It is my pleasing duty to announce the arrival of a son to the Hon. George Kyte. Mr. Kyte and his family will be the recipients of many congratulations on this happy event. There are two boys in the family already, but the presence of a third will be of service in confirming the hope of the community that a worthy successor may be found to succeed to Mr. Kyte's rare public spirit and enterprise when he shall be too old to continue his arduous works; an event, however, which we trust will not happen for a great many years to come.

SUBURBAN SAUNTERER.

One of the Salt of the Earth.

The community will be shocked to learn that Mr. Wm. M. McCutchen has been stricken with paralysis. He is 86 years old, and well known and revered by everybody. He has been an esteemed resident of this city and a tireless laborer in the vineyard of the Lord, for many years.

The meetings at 73 West Front street, under the auspices of the Womans Christian Temperance Union, are still continued through the Summer, notwithstanding some reports to the contrary. The Sunday services at 9:15 A. M. and 4 and 7 P. M. Thursday's meeting at 4 P. M., also every week, and Saturday at 7:30.

It Stunned the Bird.

On Tuesday, July 23, about half-past six o'clock, as Mr. J. L. Marshall was crossing Front street, at the intersection of Park avenue, he felt a sharp sting on his right cheek. Looking on the ground beside him, he saw a humming bird lying stunned at his feet. Mr. Marshall at first thought something had been thrown at him, but he soon became convinced that the bird struck him on the cheek.

Major Anderson Post Meeting.

A regular encampment of Major Anderson Post, No. 109, G. A. R., was held in Perseverance Lodge room on Thursday evening, with Commander E. D. Moffett in the chair. The attendance was large, but there was little or no business transacted outside of the usual routine. Two propositions for membership were received and laid over.

Major Anderson Post started with a membership of twenty-three, and it now has the names of forty-two members enrolled upon the list. The Post has nearly doubled its membership since it was instituted, about two years ago.

A Chip of the Old Block.

In writing of the Men at Chautauqua, a correspondent of a New York paper, says: "George E. Vincent, the acting chancellor, has relieved his father of many details of the chancellorship since the Bishop took leave. He is one of the most popular people on the grounds, and introduces a new lecturer as successfully as he organizes a social celebration or arranges the items on a two-months' programme. His energy and activity are amazing to those who have never met his father, whom he greatly resembles in manner and voice. Mr. Vincent is a graduate of Yale and has traveled extensively in this country and abroad."

Concerning the Accident at Dunellen.

Mr. Henry Palmer of East Second street, left his home Friday morning to go to his work on Leland avenue, and on the way he met two young men, one of them neatly dressed and the other one more poorly clad. The men were talking about the wreck, and as Mr. Palmer had not yet heard of it, he inquired the particulars of them. The men said they were among the five men on top of the freight train that was wrecked, and that one of their number, a stranger who boarded the train at Jenkintown had been killed, and another man with $160 in his pockets, who was also on the car was missing.

One of the men with whom Mr. Palmer talked said he was employed as a tinsmith in Baltimore until four weeks ago. He was now on his way from Philadelphia to New York. The other man said he was going to Newark.

Judge Suydam's Funeral.

The funeral services following the death of the late ex-Judge Geo. P. Suydam, took place from the deceased's late residence on East Fifth street, Thursday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock, and from the First Baptist church at three o'clock. The service at the house consisted of a prayer by Rev. Dr. Yerkes. Members of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. and A. M., with which the deceased was connected, escorted the body to the church, where Dr. Yerkes spoke in eulogy of the departed dead, and a quartette composed of Mrs. J. K. Myers, Miss Alice Holmes, Messrs M. C. VanArsdale and Arthur Freeman, sang appropriate music.

At the grave the service was according to the Masonic rites, and was conducted by Past Grand Master Robert Moore, of Elizabeth. The floral display included a cross, pillow and broken column, the latter presented by Jerusalem Lodge. Interment was made in Evergreen Cemetery.

The pall bearers were: Craig A. Marsh, W. L. Hetfield, John M. Crane, Dr. J. T. Fritts, R. J. Shaw and Isaac Brokaw.

An Interesting Ball Game Between the Crescents and a Picked Nine.

At two o'clock of Saturday afternoon, Manager Mack of the "West Ends," assured Manager Gavett of the "Crescents," that his nine would be on hand, and the latter at once began preparations for the long expected second contest between Plainfield and Somerville.

In spite of the threatening weather, fifteen hundred people gathered at the Bowling Club's grounds—eight hundred of whom crowded the grand stands and benches. The Somerville team, however, failed to put in an appearance, and the match was postponed until Wednesday afternoon of this week.

To calm the probable disappointment of the crowd, a game was arranged, Saturday, that was full of interesting features. The good feeling between the Plainfield and Somerville players was shown by the make up of the picked nine that faced the Crescents. The West End battery was supported by Mr. Ditts, late short stop of the Crescents, Roger Murray, and Tod Runyon of this city, and some members of the West End nine who had come down to see other fellows play the game for them.

Harkins wore Gately's shirt, and Conklin covered second in Cogswell's trousers. The game at the end of the fourth inning stood 2 to 2, but after that it was all up with the picked nine. Harkins tossed in some easy ones that were hit freely, besides which the big pitcher forced a run around by sending Cadmus to first on balls when the bases were full.

Gately, however, was not so careless. He gave the assemblage as interesting a game as possible. Even Harkins could not make a hit off him, and only Conklin, Bergen and Cathers found the ball, and but once apiece. Gately took a hot fly straight from Harkins' bat. It was just the same kind of a hit with which Harkins last year knocked out the pitcher of the Cuban Giants. But Gately held it fast and made a double play.

CROPS IN THIS VICINITY.

Correspondents of THE PRESS write that the continued wet weather is causing the grapes to turn black and rot on the vines. In many cases the whole vintage will be a complete loss, as grapes need a good deal of sunshine at this time of year. Some large growers say they do not think the crop will be worth harvesting. The Concord and Isabella grapes, the kind principally raised in this vicinity, are already beginning to drop off the vines.

A great deal of the oats which were reaped last week and which are now in shock or lying in the swath, it is thought will start to grow before they can be properly dried to put in the stack or barrack, thereby entailing considerable loss to Plainfield's farming neighbors.

Considerable anxiety is felt concerning the potato crop, as the constant rains have filled the ground with water, causing the potatoes to rot. In some places near here, the crops are a complete loss.

A Narrow Escape.

A little boy and girl who were playing on the track just West of the Park avenue bridge, Thursday afternoon, stepped out of the way of a coal train and in front of the 9:15 for New York that was just slowing up as it approached the station.

The engineer blew his whistle to attract their attention, and they got over on another track along which was coming at full speed, the Philadelphia express bound West.

Every one whose attention had been called to the scene by the locomotives' whistles, shut their eyes till the train dashed by, and then opened them with a shudder expecting to see the remains of the little ones strewn along the track.

But the conductor of the way train by shouting at the children had warned them in time, and they both succeeded in jumping down the bank just as the express reached them.

Robbing a Newspaper Office.

(From The Central Times.)

Sometime on Sunday evening a valuable memento was abstracted from the office of the DAILY PRESS. The article stolen was a five dollar bill with an interesting history.

On May 16, 1887, Messrs. W. L Force & Bro. turned out the first DAILY PRESS from their office. On May 1st S. V. Woodruff, then proprietor of Hotel Netherwood, telephoned to Editor Demarest that he wished to be not the "old subscriber," but the oldest subscriber. His five dollar bill paid for a subscription in advance. The bill was framed and hung in a conspicuous place over the editor's desk, where it remained, until stolen.

The theft having been committed on Sunday, the "devil" was absent, and it cannot, therefore, be conjectured who perpetrated the crime. When the editor entered his office on Monday, and cast his eye as usual to the spot generally covered by the souvenir, he was not long in finding out that it had been stolen. He was as calm and placid as the paste pot before him, and is still waiting for the missing property to turn up.

INCENDIARIES AT WORK.

About 1 o'clock Thursday morning, Mr. Henry Clay Randolph, who resides on what is known as the Short Hill road, about two miles southeast from this city, was suddenly awakened by a crackling noise, and looking out of his bedroom window discovered that his barn was on fire. The barn together with the out buildings, stood directly opposite the house on the other side of the street, and when Mr. Randolph reached the spot the buildings were enveloped in flames. He succeeded, however, in rescuing a cow, but the buildings together with three good work horses, two farm wagons, thirty tons of hay, oats, rye, harness, a mower, rakes, forks, and $100 worth of fertilizer were totally destroyed, involving a loss of $3,775. The loss is divided up as follows: On buildings, $2,600; on contents, $1,175. The buildings were insured for $800, but there was no insurance on the contents.

When a PRESS reporter visited the place that morning the ruins were still smouldering, but where last night stood a large barn and sheds is now one expanse of space. Mr. Randolph told the reporter that the fire was undoubtedly started by an incendiary. When he first discovered the blaze, he says, it was on the ground floor, in the stable, so the origin could not therefore be attributed to spontaneous combustion. Mr. Randolph also says that he has had considerable difficulty in securing and keeping help this Summer, and on several occasions he has been obliged to discharge one or the other of his men. But the men have invariably left on good terms.

Following is a detailed statement of the losses, made by the owner: Loss on buildings, $2,600; three horses, $400; hay, $400; oats, $40; rye $30; mower, $50; two wagons, $75; harness, $80; forks, rakes, etc., $20; fertilizer, $100. Total, $3,775.

On account of the distance the fire department did not turn out, although Chief Doane was notified of the fire and he held the department in reserve.

A Scheme That Some Plainfield Capitalists Have in Their Mind.

A PRESS reporter in conversation a few days since with Mr. J. B. Miller, of Laing's Hotel, gleaned the following information in reference to the much talked of "Honeymoon Hotel" that a number of Plainfield capitalists talk of building on the mountain top near this city, in imitation of a similar one on the Rhine.

"The infelicitous arrangements of the ordinary caravansary for people traveling, who are in that condition of mental beatitude and ecstasy incident to a very recent matrimony," said Mr. Miller, shutting his eyes and taking a long breath, and swallowing a clove, "have long proved a stumbling block to the proper enjoyment of a honeymoon trip. It is suggested in the prospectus that if an establishment is conducted extensively in behalf of such people, the usual annoyances arising from sarcastic and impertinent comments made by guests of a soured and meddlesome disposition, as also the impudent guying of waiters, will be happily avoided. If the proposed scheme ever comes to a focus, everything will be made in imitation of Fairyland. Sylvan grottos, purling brooks and velvety turf will abound in the spacious grounds attached to the house; electric lights disguised to represent softly falling moonbeams, will be provided for gloomy nights, and nightingales will be induced by an artificial heating apparatus to believe that they have found perpetual Summer, which will prevent them migrating Southward at the approach of Fall and will secure a full complement of their melody all the year round. The servants will be attired as nymphs, fairies, Greek shepherdesses, and peris, while marble statues will be met at every turning point. The walls of the room, plates, dishes, bath towels, etc., will all be enlivened with pictures of loving couples lost in the delights of mutual adoration, while music of the most heavenly character will, according to the acoustic arrangements of the hotel, salute their ears at every hour of the night and day. By times it will be the soft breathings of an Aeolian harp, the delicate strumming of a lute, the tinkling of cymbals, and the deep diapason of the majestic bassoon.

"Dost thou like the picture?"

And the reporter dusted.

—It is not generally known, of course, but $150 to $200 per month are invested by people here for Louisiana lottery tickets. It is all money practically thrown away, for it is doubtful if any investor has yet drawn an equivalent to the amount spent for tickets.

"LEANDER" HOME AGAIN.

Mr. Charles Doane's celebrated homing pigeon "Leander," came home from the sea to his loft again in this city, Thursday morning at 9:10 o'clock. He also brought "Hermes," one of his loft mates, with him.

"Leander" is the same bird that brought the message through the fog from where the ship on which the Rev. Mr. Mitchell sailed was stuck on a bar. He also was the first to get home from the "Britannic" on which were Miss Bulkley and her party of Plainfield young women. He got home from that trip the next day at noon. On Thursday last, however, he was probably released later yet he was in his loft three hours earlier.

The way "Leander" came to sail so soon again, is interesting for many reasons. Mr. Edward Scripps, an enterprising Western newspaper man, having probably heard of the fine records made in all directions by the homing pigeons of Plainfield, wrote to Mr. Doane asking the privilege of hiring some of the latter's birds to send to sea. Mr. Charles Doane sent four and Mr. Hervey Doane two. As stated above, two of the former have already reached home.

The birds sailed on the City of Rome, Wednesday afternoon, with a party of fifty American craftsmen bound for Paris and the Exposition. The British Government is going to send 100 British workmen to the Paris Exposition, but the American Congress refused to send any American workmen to Paris, so a newspaper man, Mr. Edward Scripps, stepped into the breach to do what Congress wouldn't undertake.

The workmen tourists come from every part of the United States. They include a silk weaver from Paterson, a millwright from Minneapolis, a shoemaker from Cincinnati, a pianomaker from Boston, a foundryman from Texas, and one workman, Mr. Julian Hawthorne, who is a literary workman, from Scotch Plains.

Mr. Hawthorne accompanies the expedition as a correspondent. On "Hermes" was a long message written by Mr. Hawthorne. It was immediately wired by Mr. Doane, to the "Scripps News Association" which includes in its membership a number of leading papers.

The message was as follows:

> All good omens have attended the Scripps expedition thus far. Warm, perfect weather, a Summer sea and a clear sunset last evening. Our members paced the deck, sat on the steamer chairs, made acquaintance with one another, and chatted about the situation and the prospects. All are in capital spirits, and anticipate a successful and interesting journey.
>
> Everyone was present at dinner, and there have been no symptoms of seasickness. If we go on as we have begun there will be nothing left to wish for. Au revoir to America.
>
> (Signed) JULIAN HAWTHORNE.

—Our merchants complain that business is very dull just now.

—Probably the handsomest business wagon ever seen on our streets, is that just completed for R. W. Rice & Co., the North Plainfield grocers. It was built in Elmira, N. Y., at the establishment of Mr. L. D. Huntley, who is a brother-in-law of Mr. C. J. Rice, the junior member of the firm. Its driver is Mr. Henry Williams. The vehicle attracts much admiration.

NEW GOODS.
NEW STYLES.

The styles we are now showing in Spring and Summer Suits for Men are models of the tailor's art. All-wool Cheviots, light or dark colors, at $9, are a sample of what we are doing, beyond the reach of any would-be competitors.

Twelve or fifteen new lines of Boys' Suits embellish that department, and vary in price from $4 to $10.

The whole North end of our great establishment is devoted to juvenile wear. Children's Suits will be found here. A dozen fresh styles have just come in, and the New All-wool Summer Fabrics are sold as low as $2 per suit.

CITY DEPARTMENT.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE, THE COUNTY AND THE CITY, AND HAS THE LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY PAPER PUBLISHED IN THE COUNTY OF UNION.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - City Editor.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE OF MAILS.

NEW YORK MAILS.

[illegible]

W. L. FORCE, Postmaster.

—Oh, for a Y. M. C. A. building.

—Peaches are [illegible] high for people of limited means.

—Housewives say tobacco is becoming an acquired taste with moths.

—While often too wet, it is never too hot for the boys to play base ball.

—The oldest inhabitant says we are going to have an early Fall and cold Winter.

—It is said that men will work harder for a day's pleasure than they will for a week's wages.

—The State convention of the Y. P. S. C. E. will be held at the Tabernacle in Jersey City, on October 3d.

—The sound of the katydid has been heard in the land, and there remains but about six weeks before frost.

—This is the season of the year when the baggage master has to earn every cent of his wages by hard work.

—A Plainfield man was "held up" by two negroes the other night on the road from Plainfield to New Brunswick.

—A party of young men from this city and North Plainfield held a clambake on the mountain, near Washington's Lookout, Sunday.

—There was no trotting on the track of the Gentlemen's Driving Park Association, on Saturday afternoon, on account of the rain.

—The usual number of "wall flowers" crowded the sidewalks in front of the various churches at the close of the services Sunday evening.

—The question is asked whether a hundred years hence George Washington or some base ball hero will appear the more glorious character.

—A wrecking crew worked all day at Dunellen on Saturday, gathering up the wreckage caused by the smash-up on the railroad there the day before.

—Dog-catcher Babbitt gathered in four unmuzzled dogs Monday, and there are yet many worthless curs roaming about the city without the regulation muzzle.

—It is illegal to kill upland plover until August 1, and also illegal to kill woodcock after the last day of July until the 1st day of October. The penalty is $25 fine.

—The First Baptist church will be closed during the month of September, at which time extensive repairs will be made including the putting in of the new $5,000 organ.

—Some very fine catches of black bass have recently been made in New Market pond. The waters of the Raritan have been too roily from frequent rains to make good bass fishing.

—Mr. Chas. B. VanWinkle bowled 227 at the Olympia Alley on Saturday evening, making him second on the list of high scores. Mr. Chas. Kenyon comes first with a score of 23[illegible].

—Last year there was a big crop of small peaches; this season there is a small crop of big peaches. The size of the baskets, however, will remain the same; likewise the price.

—A religious paper says the practice of encoring by clapping the hands and even stamping the feet in religious assemblies has come into vogue and bids fair to become a troublesome innovation.

—It is not likely people will tumble over each other for the positions of census enumerator, soon to be given out. The salary connected is insignificantly small, while the work is hard and plenty of it.

—Negotiations are being made to engage The Crescent for two days and nights in September for the holding of a Rainbow Bazaar by the ladies of the parish and the friends of All Saints Episcopal church of Scotch Plains.

—Officer Flannigan on Thursday found Richard Nevil expounding the Gospel before an audience of children and frightened women on East Seventh street, and escorted him to the City Jail. Friday he was sent up for thirty days.

—The Front street nine could not get itself together, Thursday, to play the deciding game of the series with the Park avenues. Captain Vanderbeek, of the latter team, was on the field with his men, and claimed the game by a score of 9 to 0.

—The man who advertises liberally in what is known as "the dull season" is pretty apt to capture what trade is going. Persistent and polite invitation is likely to be accepted by the purchasing public, while he who doesn't believe in advertising waits in vain for patrons.

—Mr. John Gallagher of South Elliott place, Brooklyn, brought a valuable four-year-old colt to this city recently, and turned the animal out to pasture in a lot near the Grant avenue station. Thursday night the animal broke out of the pasture field and was killed by the cars.

—Chief Carey received a check for $50 from the Board of Freeholders, Tuesday morning, towards the fund for sending Mrs. Fleig home to Prussia. The Chief needs about $40 more. Who else will contribute towards placing this poor demented woman among her friends?

—Light Battery B., National Guard, of Rhode Island, comprising four guns, fifty men and sixty head of horses, together with supply and [illegible] wagons, passed through the city Monday on the way from Newport, R. I., to the Pennsylvania State Camp, at Mt. Gretna, near Harrisburg.

—It seems the reason that some of the telegraph and telephone poles along the country roads that are to be improved, have been ordered down is merely because when they were put up there was no curb line and now that the width of the road has been surveyed and established, many of the poles must be set back.

—A number of strangers who have been prowling around town for the past few days need watching. Singly and in pairs they beg from house to house and hang around the stores just at closing time. These men belong to the fraternity known as tramps, and this city is infested with just such individuals. Why not weed them out?

—The congregation, teachers and scholars of the Trinity Reformed church, and their friends, numbering over 200 in all, enjoyed an excursion to Highland Beach, 26th inst. The affair was a great success in every way. Many improvements and attractions have this season been added to the resort, and the place now ranks as one of the most popular.

—F. Ohm, [illegible], Dunellen, N. J., writes: For some time I was a sufferer from pain in my back after doing any heavy work; I was very nervous. I tried a number of different medicines without deriving any particular benefit. Dr. [illegible] Vegetable Remedy had proved itself valuable, and has done me more good than anything else I ever used. Relief came almost immediately after commencing its use.

A young son of Mr. C. V. Shaddle of Woodland avenue, was accidentally shot in the leg, by the premature discharge of a revolver, at Seawaren, Monday afternoon. The injured boy was brought to his home in this city, where Drs. Endicott and Davis probed for the ball. The wound is not thought to be dangerous.

Have All the Generous People Left Town, Except One?

A gentleman who desired that his name be not published, stopped in THE PRESS office Friday, and left a ten dollar bill with the request that it be handed Chief Carey, if THE PRESS thought best, for the fund to send the demented Mrs. Fleig home to Prussia.

This is the largest subscription yet received, and helps swell the total, but there are still hundreds of generous Plainfielders who have not yet given one cent towards the worthy purpose of sending a poor afflicted woman out of a strange country to her old home and friends.

ALMOST MURDERED BY A MADMAN.

A fierce looking man, unkempt, unshaven and unshorn, was confined in one of the new cells of the Borough Lockup, charged with assaulting and almost murdering an inoffensive farmer and his wife who live on the Green Brook road, not far from Dunellen.

The tramp, who is probably a madman, stopped at the house of Mr. Reick, early Thursday, and demanded something to eat. Either because he was not quickly or satisfactorily supplied, he became enraged and seizing a club began an attack on the inmates of the house. He first sprang upon Mr. Reick and knocked him down. He then attacked Mrs. Reick and beat her severely.

The neighbors were called to the assistance of the victims, but the brute escaped. Shortly after, however, he was captured by Officer Warden of the Borough of Dunellen. As the offense was committed outside the jurisdiction of the Middlesex county authorities, the prisoner was taken in a wagon to North Plainfield, and there safely confined in the lockup.

Above morning a PRESS reporter visited the brute in his cell in the borough jail. The fellow is about 35 years old, and looked like a "freak" that had just escaped from a museum. His clothing consisted of a striped dirty shirt, black and ragged coat and old plaid pants. He was barefooted. He gave his name as Carl Schmidt, and said he had no home. He claims to be able to speak three different languages. The nails on his feet were an inch long.

When searched at the lockup the officers found in his pockets two rocks about the size of a man's fist. On the whole the man was the worst specimen of humanity that was ever seen.

Justice Crowley committed the mad man, without bail, to the Somerville jail, and Constable [illegible] took him up that afternoon.

MANY PLAINFIELD RESIDENCES INUNDATED

By the Downpour—Dams and Bridges Break Away—Great Damage and Loss of Property, and Lives Also Endangered.

Plainfield has no big river to overflow its banks and submerge its valleys, nor any mountain reservoir to burst its dam and inundate the city, but Plainfield and its vicinity Tuesday passed through the disasters of raging streams and the "moving accidents of floods," just the same.

There was no "cloud burst" but just a deluge of rain for hours without cessation. The streets were flooded over the curbs during the greater part of the afternoon, and under the railroad bridges the water was above the hubs of the vehicles and pedestrians were forced to climb over the railroad embankments or wade through waist deep.

The worst effects of the storm began to be experienced about four o'clock. Green Brook began to rapidly overflow its banks rising to a height of many feet above its usual level. It is a stream which comes from the hilly lands beyond the city, and its force had been greatly increased by the excessive rain.

About four o'clock Coddington's dam on Stony Brook, in the Notch, North Plainfield, gave way, and the large body of water carried away the Coddington ice houses and threatened the Green Valley Mills with destruction. Several buildings were swept away, but the damage cannot yet be estimated.

Somerset street was completely flooded. Green Brook divides the two counties of Somerset and Union, and Plainfield from North Plainfield, and when the water poured down in a torrent it was blocked by buildings that were undermined and threatened with destruction.

The scene on Richmond and Putnam streets, between six and seven o'clock, beggars description. Could THE PRESS give a detailed picture in words, it would hardly be believed.

About six o'clock a massive body of water began to rise in the street and in less than twenty minutes it was to the tops of the fences. The current of this mysterious flood was traveling at a rate of about thirty miles an hour.

People living in the neighborhood began to make preparations to get away from the terrible danger that menaced them, but knew not which way to turn in flight from the foreboding fate that filled their imagination.

The Hon. John Ulrich waded through the waters almost to his armpits, to the house of Mrs. Baxter and endeavored to rescue that lady and her children in a piano box. The current was so strong, however, that the box was dragged out of his hands.

Mrs. E. E. Anthony tied her infant child to her shoulders and plunging into the stream reached shallower water. Then with the assistance of Mr. Ulrich, who had to carry his own child at arms' length above his head, Mrs. Baxter, Mrs. Anthony and their children, with Mr. Ulrich's own family, succeeded in getting to the home of Mr. J. H. Kenyon on higher ground, where they remained over night.

Some of the residents in the above vicinity had to actually swim to their doorsteps.

Mr. George W. Rockfellow, of the Health Board, suggests that everyone whose cellar was submerged should sprinkle a barrel of lime in it to absorb the dampness and act as a thorough disinfectant.

The mill race at Somerset street burst and dug a gully right across that thoroughfare through which a load of hay could easily be driven. The foundations of Heidelott's Hotel, and French's flouring mills, were undermined, and it was expected these buildings might fall in at any moment.

Martin's blacksmith shop was thrown over into the middle of Somerset street, an entire wreck with its roof caved in. It will be impossible to pass through the street with vehicles for some days.

The arch under one side of the orchestra floor of Music Hall, settled about two feet. The threatened danger prevented the entertainment advertised by Dockstader's minstrels. Those who had purchased tickets, were refunded their money.

After the bursting of the dam at Scotch Plains, which swept away Seeley's paper mills and all the bridges in its vicinity, Tier's dam broke and caused the swelling of the race that damaged the Somerset street buildings. Seeley's mills were en*tirely destroyed causing great loss. Front* street near Cole's hill was thereby flooded for hours so deep that even horses could not get through.

Willow Lake on the William Lane Homestead, where Mr. Percy Ohl and family reside, overflowed its banks, washed away the new sluice-ways that had been put in, and about 100,000 young bass that the lake had recently been stocked with, were destroyed by being washed up on the land. Two valuable Jersey cows belonging to Mr. Ohl, are missing. They are supposed to have been lost in a swamp nearby that was submerged.

The reports in the New York papers of human lives lost, are all false. The bass and cows as told of above, with possibly a chicken or two unrecorded, completes the list of dead and missing.

The bridge on the Randolph road, between Central avenue and Park, is washed away. It crossed Cedar brook at that point, and the water rose many feet above it.

THE RAILROAD BRIDGES ENDANGERED.

The embankment under one side of the railroad bridge at Grant avenue, was washed away but without danger to the the bridge. It was repaired later in the evening. But the bridge at Berckman street was so undermined by the many feet of water rushing under it, that one side settled and only one track was safe enough to run trains over. The Clinton avenue bridge at Evona station was threatened, and only the South track was used across it. The water at times was four feet deep beneath it.

NOTES OF THE FLOOD.

Out of thirteen bridges in this county, examined up to Wednesday by a Committee of the Board of Freeholders, four were found to be washed away and three are badly damaged.

Hackman James Farley, F. W. Conger and Mr. Loizeaux, had a very narrow escape early in the evening. The carriage had just crossed the Water street bridge, when the latter floated off its foundations and passed down stream.

Mr. Lewis Hummer and son had a similar experience in Washington valley. They had just crossed a bridge when its foundation gave way and it was carried off by the water.

Word was received by telephone Tuesday evening about 9 o'clock, that the family of James W. Davis on Tenth street, wanted to be rescued from their house which was tottering on its foundation. The fire alarm was rung and the truck sent there. With hooks and ropes Chief Doane and assistants got through the current near enough to the house to attract Mr. Davis' attention. The latter, however, called out that he was not afraid and had not sent for help.

First Asst., Eugene Laine, and George Ball, carried Miss TenEyck through the flood from a house at the corner of Tenth and Richmond streets, to her home opposite. The current was so strong that they did not dare let go of the fences and ropes. Chief Doane led the way carrying a lighted lantern held above the water.

The barn of Mr. Tunis Brokaw, at Harris' Lane, was struck by lightning during the storm, and entirely consumed with all the contents. This is the second that Mr. Brokaw has lost a barn by lightning, within a few years.

The damage to bridges about Westfield, will amount to over $2,000. The Parkhurst mill dam was washed away and all the dams went down stream with the wagon bridge below.

The wooden bridge on Springfield road, near Mrs. High's, was also swept away.

The wooden bridge on Mountain avenue, near Schoonover's and the small stone bridge, near Lee place, in Westfield Township are also gone.

Further details of the results of the flood and an extended account of its effect in Scotch Plains, appeared in Thursday's PRESS.

THE DESTRUCTION OF SEELEY'S MILLS.

The large dam at Feltville, which holds back the body of water known as Feltville Pond, is situated between the Orange and Blue mountains, the dam being built from one mountain ridge to the other. This dam which held back a lake 1½ miles long, 300 yards wide and 20 feet deep, succumbed about four o'clock of Tuesday afternoon to the force of the water, so suddenly thrown against it. When it broke it let loose the largest artificial body of water in this part of the State.

Situated as it is in a valley, not unlike the fated Conemaugh, the force of water freed was something appalling to those who witnessed it. In its course it carried away fences, grain, hay, bridges, and whatever lay in its way. During this condition of the flood its approach was seen by some workmen in Seeley's Paper Mills, who gave the alarm. In an instant it was realized that the mills could not stand. The men at work making pasteboard were ordered out, not a moment too soon, as the wall of water almost instantly struck the mill causing it to tremble like a reed.

The men made their way over the rocks to the mountain side, just as the building toppled over and partly fell into the mad stream. Some of the men did not have time to get their coats and dinner pails that were hanging on hooks alongside of them, so sudden was the collapse of the mill.

This mill was partly destroyed several years ago by a freshet, but was rebuilt at the time and improved machinery introduced. The mill and contents will be a total loss as it was insured only against fire. 300 tons of coal which Mr. Seeley had just put in his bins to supply his boilers, was carried down stream. The destruction of this mill, one of the largest of its kind, will throw a large force of workmen out of employment.

The scene at Seeley's mills is hardly describable. Where Tuesday morning stood stout paper mills, with handsomely laid out grounds adjoining, is now a waste of rushing waters and debris. Mr. Seeley was absent at Long Branch at the time of the calamity, where he is Summering with his family.

He stated to a reporter of THE PRESS that the work of a life time had gone down with the waters. He had been in business there for the past 36 years. His loss would foot up over $50,000, on which there is no insurance. Over 50 tons of prepared card board stock was in one of the buildings. It is doubtful if he rebuilds his mills.

This is his second loss by flood, the first occurring in '88. It is singular that the lower dam which gave way, and which was built on solid rock and always considered safe should give way, while the upper dam, which was built by Mr. Seeley later, and not considered as safe as the lower one by "doubting Thomases," should stand the torrent, only the wing wall on one side going out.

IN THE VALLEY.

The storm of Tuesday, which visited *that section, was most severe in the vi*cinity of Washingtonville.

The recent steady rains had swollen the streams to more than their height, even during ordinary showers. About half-past two o'clock a large, heavy black cloud came up from the Southwest and appeared to settle down over the Valley, *almost level with the tops of the surround*ing mountains, between which the Valley is situated. Several persons, whose attentions were attracted to the heavy, pall-like cloud, were suddenly startled by a loud and heavy peal of thunder, followed by a vivid flash of lightning that was almost blinding. Then commenced one of the heaviest rainfalls ever witnessed in this section of the country. The rain was so dense that objects but a short distance away could not be discerned. Rivulets became strong, wild, rushing streams, carrying down the mountain sides stones, gravel and shale. Stony Brook already overflowing its banks, became a raging river.

At Washingtonville, where the two streams meet that form Stony Brook, the water suddenly rose several feet, caused, probably by the breaking of the large dam just above. This was the first to give way. It belongs to the Wilson estate, and was thought to be secure, a heavy stone facing having been built quite recently, and precautions being otherwise taken to make it safe. So large a body of water being let out at once it swept down stream like a Conemaugh river, striking the large white bridge on its course, raising it about a foot from its foundations, the water flowing three feet over the planks of the bridge. It was with some difficulty that a valuable horse was removed from its stall, where the water was almost up to the animal's back.

Turning into Green Valley, as it is known the torrent of water did its worst work. Here is situated Wetumpka Falls, and just below is the stone crusher of Mr. Jasper Wilson. The end of the dam next to the roadside gave way, washing the road bed out to the depth of twenty-five feet in one place and uncovering the large iron pipes used to convey the water to the turbine wheel of the stone crusher, and making the road almost impassable to drive over. This place was washed out several years ago and cost many hundreds of dollars to repair. The road further up, above Demier's Hotel, is washed out worse that at the time of the great freshet a few years ago. It will cost the township $2,000 to put it in repair again. Mr. Demier says this is the worst storm and highest water he has witnessed in the vicinity for 55 years.

Further down is situated the large flouring mills and ice houses of J. W. & H. Coddington, who are by far the heaviest losers of the many victims of this storm. The sudden rush of water caused their dam to give way on one side. The force of the water undermined the foundation of the large ice house letting it fall into the stream, now a rushing sea. The house which was built several years ago to take the place of the large one destroyed by a similar freshet at that time, was one of the largest and latest improved of its kind in this part of the State. The ice (probably 2,000 tons) about half filled the house, and all went down together, causing a loss of about $10,000 on houses and ice alone. The timbers of the wrecked houses struck a new bridge leading to the mill and barns. In the latter were stored two tons of hay, besides sleighs, wagons and harness. Six valuable horses were standing in their stalls when the water rose in the stable, and it was with some difficulty and at imminent risk they were rescued, and none too soon, for the barn and contents was carried away, not a plank being left to show where the barn and bridge stood but a few minutes before, thereby increasing Messrs Coddington's loss to nearly $15,000.

The large wooden bridge belonging to the L. B. Boice estate, was carried away, and together with some of the wreckage of the ice houses was piled up to the second story windows of the cottage occupied by Mr. VanOrten, who with his family narrowly escaped drowning, the water pouring through the house driving them out.

The property of Jacob and Wm. Miles suffered by water to the extent of about $900. Many narrow escapes occurred during the height of the storm. One stone carter insisted on driving over a bridge while the water flowed over it, and it was only when bystanders refused to let him go that he finally gave in. No loss of life is reported.

The beautiful grounds attached to Edgewood, the residence of Mr. Chase, suffered considerably from the force of water tearing out paths and flower beds, and strewing the lawns with stones and gravel.

Plainfield's Unitarian Society.

The last number of the Christian Register of Boston contains the following notice of the organization of the Unitarian Society in this place:

"The movement to establish a Unitarian church in Plainfield, which was begun a few months ago by Rev. D. W. Morehouse, secretary of the New York Conference, resulted in the organization of a vigorous new society and the election of a full board of officers on the 10th inst. Mr. Morehouse has had the assistance in this work of the pastors of our churches in New York, Brooklyn and Yonkers. The *steady growth of the new society is in*sured by the fact that it includes a good number of excellent workers who have had experience in some of our older parishes in New England and elsewhere. Plainfield is one of the most beautiful of the many charming suburban towns in the neighborhood of New York, and is a popular place of residence for many of New York's business men."

A Suspension in the Clothing Business.

The great closing out sale of fine cassimere pants at $3 a pair, and elegant suits at $10, by Watson & Co., is causing almost a suspension of the clothing business in this city, and has been followed by mark-down sales all over town.

All follow Watson & Co., but the crowd of buyers, you will notice, fill their store when many larger ones appear so dull and lonesome.

Just now the rush is phenomenal, and to-night will probably be very lively around the corner of Broad and Market streets, where many are getting bargains which they will remember, and the first buyers always gets the finest goods and handsomest patterns. Fine cassimere pants, silk and satin-trimmed, for $3 a pair, and complete suits of elegant Sax*ony goods for $10, will soon close out the* last garment, which is the policy of Watson & Co., at the end of each season, as they have neither the room nor desire to carry over even the choicest garment.

See the elegant garments they are now closing out; the handsomest goods from the best looms in the world can be found among them, but remember they are to be divided only among their customers, and no dealer who wishes to buy to sell again need apply.—Newark Press.

Why Should I Go to Montana?

Great Reservation. Because 18,000,000 acres of free Government land, with a delightful climate, and equally suited for general farming and stock raising, have just been opened to the homeseeker, in the Milk River Valley and near Benton and Great Falls.

Stock Raising. Because the favorable climate and superior grasses of Montana make it the natural home of horses, cattle, sheep and other domestic animals; and because Winter feeding is not required, as stock graze at large the year around.

General Farming. Because a rich soil and abundant Summer rains produce wheat, oats, rye, barley and the grasses and vegetables of a quality, size and yield unsurpassed.

Mining. Because Montana produces more of the precious metals than any other state or territory, and abundant opportunities remain to secure valuable properties at nominal cost.

Immigration. Because the Great Reservation is the meeting point of settlers from the Pacific Coast and from the Eastern States, and is the only extensive tract of good land left, suitable for settlement.

Business. Because the rapidly growing towns along the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. offer splendid opportunities to engage in business.

Manufacturer. Because the 3,000,000 horse-power water-power at Great Falls, the extensive coal veins, the wool, mineral and grain raising resources of Montana offer exceptional opportunities to the manufacturer.

Tourist. Because the canon of the Gates of the Mountains, the Great Falls of the Missouri, the Giant Fountain and Continental Divide offer the most sublime and diversified scenery to be found on the Continent. Take a Summer tour.

Why Travel by the St. P., M. & M.? Because only by it can you travel through the largest body of free land left for settlement. Because it reaches the Great Falls, with the largest water-power in the Continent. Because it reaches Helena, the richest city of its size in the world; and because it is the shortest and best route to Butte, the largest mining camp on earth. Special tourists' and landseekers' rates. Daily trains through solid to Montana. Choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. Find out all about it by writing for "The Great Reservation," and "Tourists' Summer Guide." For further information, rates, maps, etc., apply to F. I. WHITNEY, G. P. & T. THREE KINDS!

I know
The past, and thence I will essay to glean
A warning for the future, so that man
May profit by his errors, and derive
Experience from his folly.—SHELLEY.

Three kinds of men start out to buy Clothing. The foolish man is hauled in by a bait and buys cheap shoddy clothing from the "hurrah" fake.

Then comes the thoughtless man, who wends his way to the fashionable tailor, gets a good suit, but pays a very big price for the same.

The wise man deals with some reputable manufacturer of Clothing and secures garments fully equal to those made to order at about half custom prices. Thus the wise man gets his Clothing, with quality and workmanship thrown in, as cheap as the foolish man his miserable trash. An unusually large number of wise men are being attracted to our store this Spring. Whether it's a case of "once bitten twice shy" or not, we don't know, but certainly their patronage of us does credit to their good judgment, and we don't think, once having traded here they'll be caught by clap-trap again. We know what we sell. We make it, and neither time, effort or money is spared to produce garments that will do us credit and still further establish our reputation. It's a selfish interest we take, we'll admit, but the effect is the same. It's there, and it pays both you and us.

DR. HOLT'S FIRST PATIENT.

It Was a Lady and He Had to Thrash Her Husband.

And So He Won His Confidence—He Whips the Bruiser in Slabville After That and Gets All of Their Business.

COPYRIGHT 1889.

"Wonder if that feller will ever get a call?"

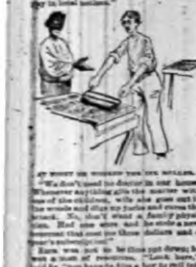
This bit of speculation was often heard in Slabville, and it referred to a young physician named Ezra P. Holt. He had been graduated with honors but sat in his office with never a call to light up the gloom of his disappointment. At night, while deep in the study of his books, he would hear the "holler" that summoned the backwoods swamp doctor to the bedside of an [illegible] citizen, and of mornings when he went to the town well, he heard the railroad section "boss" and the foreman of the livery stable speak in high praise of "Doc" Sanders, an ignorant old bigot who could not have distinguished the earliest symptoms of catarrh from the final development of glanders. Shortly after arriving in Slabville Dr. Ezra P. Holt had attempted to deliver a lecture, but nobody came to hear him, and as he turned away from the clapboard hall, he heard the [illegible] of the swamp doctor and recognized the contemptuous chuckle of "Doc" Sanders.

Ezra decided to try advertising. In the Slabville Eagle he could get any shade of [illegible] at three cents a line, but he could not afford the expense involved by the insertion of two lines a week, so calling on the editor he said:

"Sir, I know the great influence of your [illegible]."

"You bet we've got the circulation."

"Yes, I know that, and I would like to become your family physician and take my pay in local notices."



AT WORK ON WORDS YOU'RE [illegible].

"We don't need no doctor in our house. Whenever anything ails the matter with one of the children, wife she goes out in the woods and digs up [illegible] and cures the [illegible]. No, don't want a family physician. [illegible]"

Ezra was not to be thus put down; he was a man of resources. "Look here," said he, "you have to hire a boy to roll [illegible] your type. Now give me that job and I will take it out in advertising."

The editor [illegible] Ezra's hand. All that night the doctor inked the forms. [illegible] and at midnight when Ezra listened for the "holler" that summoned the Swamp doctor to the bedside of a [illegible] citizen, he was greeted by the voice of [illegible] Jim, yelling:

"W'y dont you stir'n dat roller?"

[illegible]

One evening Stephen Bieker, a well known colored Justice of the Peace, drove into [illegible] town. His wife, he said, had been seized with cramp colic and that she must have a doctor at once. Ezra was the only doctor in town at the time, and old Stephen called upon him.

"I want you ter come out an' see my wife," said old Stephen.

"What!" exclaimed Ezra, springing to his feet.

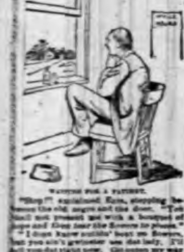
"Jes you know what I wants. You'se er doctor, ain't you?"

"Yes, oh yes," Ezra replied, trying to calm his emotions, "I am a doctor and you [illegible] for as this is the first call I have ever received I—"

"Hole on dar, sah; hole on. Does you mean dat you ain't been ter see no sick person yet?"

"Yes, but—"

"Hole on dar, sah. Dat'll do fer me. [illegible] I don' want nobody [illegible] on my wife. I bids you good day sah."



WAITING FOR A PATIENT.

"Stop!" exclaimed Ezra, stepping between the old negro and the door. [illegible]

"I don' know nuthin' 'bout no flowers, but you ain't gwineter see dat lady. I'll tell you dat right now. [illegible]"

"I am a doctor, I tell you, and I am going to see your wife."

"Not lessen you'se stronger den I is."

"I don't know about that but I am going to see her."

"Not lessen you kin whup me an' I'se [illegible] you gwine to git outen my way."

"No."

"Gwine to fight me den, is you?"

"Yes, unless you take me to see your wife."

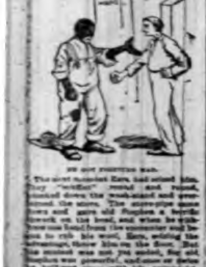
"White man, I'll gin you warnin'; I'se a [illegible]."

"So am I."

"White man I ain't nebber been whipped."

"Well then, if you don't want to lose your reputation you'd better take me along."

"I'se gwine to fight," said the old negro, [illegible] the floor and beginning to roll up his sleeves. "Gwine fight fer de wife o' dis yere house an' [illegible]."



HE GOT FIGHTING MAD.

The next moment Ezra had seized him [illegible]

"Hole on, boss; hole on, sah. I don't [illegible] My wagin's out yere" he added when Ezra had let him up. "Come right on fur we ain't got much time ter lose case I 'spec de lady dun' dead by dis time [illegible]."

OTIS P. REAR.

THE BEST EXERCISE.

A Professor of Swimming Describes Its Good Points.

It Makes Healthy Bodies, Pumps and Fair Muscles on the Doctor's Legs—Advice to People Who Think They Are Drowning.

In a well-known athletic club half a dozen young men of stalwart build, while sitting around a table, became interested in discussing the question of the best general exercise [illegible] from the stand-point of [illegible]. It was but natural that every [illegible] enthusiast should have his own theory. The base-ball devotee advocated [illegible] in the gymnasium, the [illegible] in favor of the paddle, the boxer [illegible] to illustrate the superiority of gloves, [illegible] was ready to meet all comers with the [illegible]. [illegible] declared that a sprinkle of salt water was highly conducive to health, and [illegible] the theory that his [illegible] kept him in perfect condition. Last of all, [illegible] was a compactly built [illegible] man, who asserted that swimming was the best exercise from every point of view. The young man gave as his authority a swimmer who has had twenty-five years' experience as a general athlete. This athlete is Prof. T. F. Donaldson, of New York City.

Prof. Donaldson is about [illegible] feet two inches in height. He was born in a small [illegible] near London. In 1868 he won the [illegible] swimming championship of England. [illegible] Since then he has lived from High Bridge, New York and Westminster Bridge, London. [illegible] gold and silver medals have been won by him in various branches of athletic sports.

"Of all the sports I have engaged in," said Prof. Donaldson to a Sun reporter, "swimming I believe to be the best for the [illegible]. For a dozen years and more swimming has been my only exercise, and although I am engaged in a sedentary occupation, I [illegible] I am in pretty good condition. Feel my muscle."

The reporter, being invited, put his hand on Prof. Donaldson's biceps and on his thighs. They were as hard as boards.

"I find that swimming is the best physical exercise I ever had," continued Prof. Donaldson. "I haven't had a doctor in ten years, and nothing is the matter with me. To what do I attribute my health? To salt water, in the first place."

"Is swimming difficult to learn?"

"On the contrary, it is very easy. But [illegible] is necessary—confidence. There is a curious example of this in my experience. Not long ago I taught a walloping big fellow, who must have weighed 250 pounds. He learned in two lessons. One day he wanted to jump off from a pier 100 feet from shore and swim to land. I thought he could do it, and I let him try, but I went into the water with him. For a few yards he swam famously, and then [illegible] he got something like stage fright. He sputtered and kicked, and the more he kicked the further he got from land. I was thoroughly frightened, but I didn't let him know it. I couldn't have handled him if he had given up, he was so big. But he was highly cropped, so that I could not take hold of it. All that I could do was to put him on the shoulder and tell him he was all right, and then I put one hand under his chin to keep his head above water. He fell prostrate on the beach in a minute, utterly used up. If he had believed in himself he could have paddled along as well."

"Should swimmers eat before entering the water or after the bath?"

"Authorities differ. There seems to be a [illegible] prevalent that a bather should [illegible] into the water before eating. While I would not advise bathers to eat immediately before going into the water, I [illegible] from observing thousands of men [illegible] a quarter of a century's experience [illegible] it is debilitating to bathe for any length of time with no food in the stomach. Captain Webb used to eat a hearty meal [illegible] before going into the water. Of course, if you should eat a big, complicated dinner before bathing you would [illegible]. The length of time a person can [illegible] in the water depends [illegible]. [illegible] the best sign that he needs a tonic. [illegible] bathing, taken moderately at first, and increasing the dose. For many bathers it is best at first to take a quick dip and then [illegible] for an hour or two, enjoying a sun bath. Afterward the tonic of a sea bath may be enjoyed for a longer time."

"What is the best course to pursue in aiding persons who are drowning?"

"Grasp them by the back hair and hold them at arm's length. I've noticed one thing about drowning people. When they are [illegible] the first time if they see you and they come up again they know where to grasp [illegible] you, and the result is you both go down together, with a strong probability that you will be drowned. It is my advice that if you go to rescue a drowning person you should swim around him and [illegible] him, so he won't see you when he comes up the second time. Another [illegible] going to a person's rescue try to [illegible] his confidence. It is a fact that one [illegible] person's body will [illegible] if you can only get him to [illegible]."

"What is the best time for bathing?"

"Before breakfast or late in the afternoon. A glass of milk or a small cup of coffee should be taken if the bath is to be [illegible] after rising, and a sharp run afterward and a brisk rub with a towel will be of service."

"In your twenty-five years' experience how many lives have you saved?"

"I prefer to say only one, and that was the life of a boy who had fallen off a pier. I don't believe half the reported life saving is true. Jobs are put up by the savers."

A DOCTOR'S DON'TS.

How to Preserve Health and to Relieve Suffering.

Don't Eat Pork—Don't Drink Green Tea—Don't Take Animal Food Oftener Than Twice a Day—Don't Read After Dinner.

From "Six Hundred Medical Don'ts," by Frank C. Valentine, M. D.: Don't give a child [illegible], except [illegible] candy or [illegible], and those only very rarely.

Don't permit a child under five to remain out of bed after eight p. m., even if you have to forego your most sacred social duties [illegible] a most brilliant first night at the theater.

Don't feed a child under one month of age oftener than every hour and a half.

Don't feed a child three months old oftener than every three hours and twice at night.

Don't conclude that a child needs food each time it manifests hunger. Try to assuage thirst by several teaspoonful of boiled and cooled water.

Don't believe that your baby must be sick during the second summer; if you take proper care of it the second summer should be more satisfactory than the first.

Don't hold a child in cool water in your arms, but strip it quickly and immerse it in a tub [illegible] of moderately warm water.

Don't allow a patient with colic to suffer until the physician arrives; give large injections of warm water with [illegible].

Don't [illegible] by the use of [illegible]; if nothing else is obtainable use cold water; [illegible].

Don't [illegible] your head when with cases of [illegible] they very rarely [illegible] up [illegible] and give him [illegible] of [illegible] every hour until your physician arrives.

Don't imagine that sunstroke (heat prostration) [illegible].

Don't [illegible]. When it is absolutely [illegible] to do so, it should be [illegible].

Don't [illegible] growing and your black hair [illegible].

Don't [illegible].

Don't take animal food more than twice daily.

Don't let your entire food exceed thirty-four ounces in twenty-four hours.

Don't infer that chewing tobacco is the most injurious method of using the weed; the contrary is true.

Don't smoke immediately after meals.

Don't forget that healthy persons generally lose weight in winter and gain in summer.

Don't wear dark clothes in very cold weather, because of the readiness with which they eliminate body heat; the Russian and Siberian great coat is invariably of a light gray color.

Don't wear high heels; women who wear them publicly advertise the fact that they want or wish to maintain serious internal troubles.

Don't mistake weight for warmth in clothing; feeble people may be worn down by heavy clothing and yet be less sheltered than those who wear light woolen fabrics, both as inner and outer garments.

Don't believe that one attack of a communicable disease protects against another. (The writer treated a gentleman, aged seventy-two years, who had two distinct attacks of small-pox pits, and this third attack was of a confluent character.)

Don't read, write, or do any delicate work unless receiving the light from the left side.

Don't read in street-cars or other jolting vehicles.

Don't imagine that the eyes can be benefited by holding them open under fresh water.

Don't fear to open your eyes under salt water.

Don't attempt to clean the ears with any thing but the tip of the little finger.

Don't attempt to remove hardened earwax by picking it out. If you can not reach a physician when hardened ear-wax becomes troublesome or painful you may gently inject (preferably by means of a fountain syringe) large quantities of warm water, to each pint of which half an ounce of bicarbonate of soda has been added. This will convert the wax into a soap, which will run out with the water.

Don't administer baths to patients under 98 nor over 99 degrees, unless by special order to that effect.

"Don't read even the address on an envelope after dinner" (Spanish proverb, intended to urge absolute physical and mental activity after the principal meal of the day).

Don't allow yourself to grow habitually constipated. Coax intestinal action by regularity of habit, exercise, fresh and stewed fruits, and the avoidance of constipating food. Take drugs only under a physician's directions.

Don't endeavor to check a diarrhea suddenly.

Don't believe that eating fat will make you fat; quite the contrary holds true.

Don't eat gamey meats; remember that "gamey" is the hyper-refined word for rotten.

"Don't pour a mouthful of coffee into the empty stomach, even if you must tear a button from your coat and swallow it before," says an Arabic proverb. This applies to tea as well.

Don't drink coffee when suffering with a diarrhea.

Don't attempt to remove foreign bodies from the upper part of the windpipe by endeavoring to reach them with instruments of any kind. Try giving a violent blow on the back immediately after the accident. If this does not succeed have the patient held suspended by the feet, head downward, and moved rapidly from side to side while you strike between the shoulders with the palm of the hand; discontinue this at once if the patient shows evidences of suffocation; if these continue or the foreign body is not dislodged send for a physician to perform tracheotomy or laryngotomy as quickly as possible.

WOMAN'S CROWNING GLORY.

The Proper Way of Cleaning, Brushing and Dressing the Hair.

A rich mass of hair that when uncoiled can easily be sat upon by the fortunate possessor is a beauty of itself, yet, strange to say, it has less to do with producing the effect of beauty than almost any other attribute. Complexion, eyes, nose, mouth, all count for more in the general summing up.

It is strange, too, writes Ella Rodman Church in Harper's Bazar, to note how frequently this gift is found where there is an entire absence of all other personal attraction; and among German women of the working class, who are exceptionally plain, great masses of thick braids often cover the entire back of the head. A German prescription for promoting the growth of the hair is to wash it thoroughly once a week with the yolk of an egg well rubbed in among the partings, and afterward to rinse it off with cold soft water. A thorough drying and vigorous brushing complete the operation, which is one that working-women would scarcely take the time to indulge in.

This formula has been improved by the addition of half a tea-cup of ammonia, a tablespoonful each of oil of bergamot and melted [illegible] soap (pure white Castile or [illegible]), a teaspoonful of powdered borax, and a quart of rain-water, to be thoroughly mixed and kept in a covered jar for a [illegible] washing of the scalp. This is often enough for purposes of cleanliness, and better for the hair, as frequent washing injures the young growth.

The egg should first be beaten to make it blend and rub in better; and before washing it is well to braid long hair in several braids, as this precaution keeps it from tangling. Braids and scalp should be thoroughly dried with a coarse towel, and the process assisted by sitting for an hour or so in the sun or by a fire.

Perfect cleanliness and patient brushing are recommended as the best restoratives for the thinning and breaking of the hair which is sure to follow the excessive use of pomades, many of which are highly injurious, and the piling up of hair on one head which grew on another. Much of the hair of commerce has been taken from the dead, and it heats and irritates the heads to which it is transferred. This, with the use of applications containing chemicals, has a most disastrous tendency, and many of the victims have a crown where the hair straggles thinly over a painfully blushing skin, and partings that assume in their frightened eyes, as they look in the glass, the proportions of the gates of Gaza, or have a stubble of short wiry coarse growth, inclined to bristle up, and giving an infinity of trouble to keep in decent order.

Some toilette tables fairly bristle with bottles, boxes and jars containing "dressings" innumerable for the unfortunate locks, which thrive best, if one did but know it, without any dressing whatever but that administered by a well-made, moderately stiff brush, varied by an occasional application of the hands. The latter gives a glossy gloss; and a country lady, whose hair always had a particularly neat, shining appearance, was once detected in the act of putting her finger in her mouth for an extra touch to the front locks.

People who never indulge in an actual washing of the head, "for fear of taking cold," do not hesitate to wet the hair frequently with bay-rum and other applications, although this is a surer way of taking cold than a brisk washing of the entire head and an equally brisk drying. The latter, too, is far more cleansing and invigorating, and with proper precautions there is no danger of any ill effects.

Gentle and regular friction is the best of means to induce a healthy condition of the scalp and to restore the natural beauty of the hair when it has been lost through injurious treatment. A little ammonia in the water used for cleansing acts as a mild stimulant; also a homeopathic amount of tincture of cantharides. Brisk rubbing of the scalp with a raw onion, and after this a touch of honey, is said to work wonders; but all remedies are useless without regular and persevering brushing—fifty strokes night and morning, beginning at the very roots and going through the entire length of the hair.

Cutting the ends of the hair once a month is often recommended, but it is of little avail unless each hair is taken separately, as scarcely any two are of the same length. This is a task that requires two or three hours in the execution, and it is said to pay if persevered in. Children's hair should not be cut unless it is thin, as the first silken growth is never restored; and with the British women, who have magnificent hair, it is always allowed to grow from infancy.

The color of hair has much to do with its beauty, and as a general thing the golden blonde is the most popular. Fortunate is she on whom nature has lavished these shining tresses, which give the possessor such a peculiarly youthful appearance. Many have been the attempts to imitate them with art, but such attempts are sure to terminate disastrously. Occasionally the lovely color is retained even beyond middle age, but generally it is an evanescent as the youth it expresses, and the golden-haired girl of sixteen frequently becomes the brown-haired matron of thirty.

[illegible] has undoubtedly lifted her red-haired sisters out of their Cinderella ashes, [illegible] on the recent rather than the brown tint, [illegible] as the [illegible] beauty [illegible], "[illegible] a woman, so delightful, and [illegible] there [illegible] of [illegible] with bright [illegible] red hair she will stand out from the rest with a remarkable prominence, which, if she be a pretty woman—and redhaired women have often great beauty of feature and very often lovely complexions—is of the greatest advantage to her, artistic speaking."

An approach to the desirable tint may be obtained by using a preparation composed of half a pint of rose water and three ounces of clean powdered gum-arabic, mixed and strained, after which one drop of aniline red should be added to give it a rosy tinge. This is also recommended to make the hair curl stiffly.

The worst hair—which is usually in streaks or patches of color—can be vastly improved by avoiding every thing like a stiff or conventional arrangement, whatever the fashion may be. Such hair should be loosed and fluffy, in large waves and careless twists—not untidily, but picturesque. This causes the light to strike it in such a way that the inequalities of color are not noticeable.

The ugly fashion of combing the hair from the neck to the very top of the head spoils the effect of the prettiest hair, and is becoming only to a small, perfectly shaped head. The bare spaces at the backs of heads afford an excellent opportunity for the study of phrenology, and the many undesirable "bumps" thus exposed to view might never have been suspected but for the unnatural withdrawal of their proper covering.

OHIO'S GRETNA GREEN.

Where Squire Beasley Has Tied Many Thousand Matrimonial Knots.

Sixty-five miles above Cincinnati by the windings of the stream, and bathing her feet in the beautiful river like a lovely maiden, writes a [illegible] correspondent of the Philadelphia News, sits Aberdeen, the Gretna Green of the West. The place contains about a thousand souls, while directly opposite rises the more pretentious city of Maysville, located on a high bluff, with the grand old Kentucky hills forming the background of a picture worthy the brush of an artist.

In the early days the popular squire was a remarkable man named Thomas Shelton, who officiated at more marriages than any other man that ever lived in the United States. He required no license, and for many years kept no records. Thousands of young people, whose parents were unfavorable to their plans, fled to the "old Squire" and found his services an efficient remedy for their misfortunes. The old gentleman, for many years previous to his death had a peculiar passion for watches and knives, and if the prospective groom had not the requisite amount of money to pay for the marriage ceremony he would take a watch or knife in exchange, and when death claimed him he had in his possession over three hundred brass and silver watches and many old knives.

After the death of Shelton Massie Beasley was elected to fill the vacancy, and is now justice of the peace, having been in office a score of years, during which time he has married between 4,000 and 5,000 couples.

Squire Beasley is a well-preserved man for his age, being now seventy-eight years old. He has never married but once, but has had numerous proposals from "belles" of the Blue Grass region. His marriages never run less than one a day, and often go up to a dozen. Many persons from all parts of the United States have had their marriage rites solemnized here, but the majority are from Kentucky, Indiana and the Virginias. His fees run from $1 to $10, and he has several times been paid as high as $50, and one party from New York who came here gave him $40 in gold. In the winter time, when the river is full of floating ice, and it is considered very dangerous for any one to attempt to cross, a wedding couple may often be seen battling with the ice, and in some instances the loving ones have been carried several miles below the city before they could effect a landing.

Many thrilling stories are told of hot pursuit of irate relatives, of the crossing of the Ohio just in the nick of time, of the discharge of firearms and threats of vengeance and life-long enmity and all that sort of thing. The captain of the steamer Gretna Green, which plies from the Ohio to the Kentucky shores, is always on the alert to help the runaway couple. Just as soon as they are aboard he pushes out into the stream and no persuasion can prevail upon him to turn back until the knot is well and securely tied. There has recently been an attempt to stop these Gretna Green marriages, but it was fruitless, and the number is not diminished.

A CRIPPLE'S INDUSTRY.

How a One-Armed Man Built Himself a Comfortable House.

On Highland avenue, Malden, stands a large and handsome stone house, which, having been in process of construction for the past four years, has at last arrived at completion, and is now pointed out by the inhabitants as a standing witness of what the skill and industry of one man, alone and unaided, can accomplish. The builder is a one-armed man, Mr. C. O. Bosworth, who has been a newsdealer in Malden for thirty-two years. When seen by a Boston Herald reporter he related the story of the work as follows:

"In 1885 I started to build a house, and, as I had previously built a small one alone, I determined to build a house for myself and family on which no labor but that of my own should be expended, and I have at last accomplished my task, the only help I have had being to have a man mix my mortar. The house is built of rough stone, of such a size that a single man could handle them, laid in red mortar, and is three stories high. The trimmings are of brick, and inside the stone-work is a complete wooden frame house. The roof is made of roofing paper fastened together with a composition of my own, which is also used around the chimney and in various other places instead of lead or tin. In the second year of the work, while busy near the roof, I fell a distance of thirty feet, and was so badly injured that I could do nothing more for a year. Of course, my one arm has been a severe drawback, but I have managed by various devices and a liberal use of nails to get along very well. I have built all my own scaffolding, and put in without help the roof timbers. I paint every thing thoroughly before putting it up, so that after finishing I have not had the trouble of stagings and ladders to paint high places. The house is large and commodious, and is filled with many odd little ideas of my own. It also contains some interesting relics; my front steps are taken from the Universalist church here, and are the same steps that I sat up on that church thirty-five years ago, when I had two hands."

Mr. Bosworth is a Swede by birth, and came to this country thirty-five years ago. He lost his right hand thirty-two years ago in a mill accident, and since that time has sold papers in Malden. He is a bright, energetic man, and now that he has a home proposes to rest and enjoy it.

"DID 'OO KILL IT?"

Ludicrous Incident During Service at the Brooklyn Tabernacle.

Every seat in the Brooklyn Tabernacle was occupied the other Sunday morning, says the New York Press. The famous clergyman was in the midst of a most interesting sermon, and the ten thousand eyes of the congregation were riveted in interested expectancy upon the expressive face and gesticulative figure of the noted divine. The stillness of death, except for the exhortations of the pulpit orator, pervaded the huge edifice. Down in the center of the church, almost crowded out of sight by her elder neighbors, a black-eyed little tot of four years nestled close to her mother's skirts.

The hairless pate of an aged worshiper loomed up directly before the bright eyes of the little miss. A common house fly circled around the child and finally alighted on the top of the old gentleman's head.

It stood motionless for a second and then moved softly over the smooth and shiny surface. The aged gentleman was deeply engrossed in Dr. Talmage's sermon, and for awhile evinced no uneasiness from the ticklish maneuvers of the little insect.

All the while the child's eyes followed the movements of the fly. She was deeply interested, and looked around to see if somebody else wasn't enjoying the scene.

Suddenly the old gentleman's arm shot up, and came down with a resounding whack upon his cranium. The little one behind had been waiting for this, and sliding out of her seat before her mother could check her, she placed her chubby little hands on the old fellow's shoulders, and peering over into his face, unmindful of the time and place, asked with much animation: "Did 'oo kill it?"

She Got It.

They were sitting on the piazza that faced the sea watching the white-sailed yachts as they crossed the moon's track, when he suddenly said:

"I think it must be delightful sailing on such a lovely night."

"Oh! lovely, I should think."

"I wish I owned a yacht for your sake. I would take you sailing every night."

"That would be just lovely!"

"What kind of a yacht would you prefer—a steam yacht or a sailing one?"

"I think," she murmured, as she glanced around, "I think I would like a little smack."

She got it.

He Was Convinced of It.

Old Mr. Widower had been sitting silently alone with Miss Autumn for fifteen minutes. Suddenly he spoke:

"Miss Autumn you are pretty—"

"Oh, Mr. Widower?"

"You are pretty—"

"How can you say so Mr. Widower?"

"I started to say you were pretty—"

"Oh, you horrid man, stop."

"Great Scott, woman!" shouted Mr. Widower, rising and breaking for the door, "I wanted to say that you are pretty nearly as old as I am—now I think you're twice as old." (Somerville.)

HUNTINGTON'S HORSES.

A Millionaire's Dicker with Another of the Same Ilk.

It is fun to hear one millionaire tell a story of another millionaire, and here is one of that stuff, says the New York World. Some time ago he heard that Mr. Huntington had a couple of very handsome cobs for sale, and being in want of just that sort of thing the millionaire communicated with Mr. Huntington and asked the price. In response to the note Mr. Huntington appeared next day in the office of the would-be purchaser. He explained that the cobs were particularly fine animals, and that he would not part with them except for the reason that they were rather too small for himself and wife, who were rather large people. The purchasing millionaire had his wife also being large people, this of course was no objection, and Mr. Huntington was asked to state his price. He said he wanted $1,000. Well, the millionaire had seen the cobs and asked his coachman, and he knew that this was a pretty long price. He expressed that opinion to Mr. Huntington, and told him that if he could get down to a reasonable figure they might talk business. Mr. Huntington asked what his idea of a reasonable figure was, and the would-be purchaser said he would give him $800 for the pair. Mr. Huntington scoffed at the offer, and said that he wouldn't entertain it for a moment, and the millionaires parted and matters were left in this shape.

The next day Mr. Huntington reappeared and said that he had thought the matter over, and that he was willing to take nine hundred dollars, but the other party to the negotiation was not willing that he should have nine hundred dollars of his. In this transaction at least, he stuck to his original offer of eight hundred dollars for the cobs. Mr. Huntington talked for some time and expatiated on the equine excellencies which justified the nine hundred dollar price, but the millionaire purchaser wasn't at all impressed. Mr. Huntington was quite as eloquent as any auctioneer who ever held forth at Bull's Head or any that Mr. Van Tassel had ever employed, but the eloquence failed of any effect, and Mr. Huntington again departed. He appeared again, however, and appeared and disappeared for all the days of the week and several days of the following week, and altogether spent perhaps twelve or fourteen hours in striving to convince his customer that nine hundred dollars was not too much for what he had to sell. But failing utterly in this philanthropic design he finally said that he would take the eight hundred dollars which was offered if the purchaser would pay his coachman twenty-five dollars.

"But," said the other millionaire party, "I have nothing to do with your coachman."

"But," said Millionaire Huntington, "my coachman expects something, and it seems to me that if I give you the horses at your price you ought to pay him."

Well, the purchasing millionaire didn't look at it in that way. He didn't think that a coachman's wages—and he presumed that Mr. Huntington paid his wages regularly—was entitled to commissions, and he thought they had a demoralizing and corrupting influence on the stable or carriage morals of the coachman, and he thought also that if there was any corruption or demoralization to go forward it would have to be done with Mr. Huntington's money. These arguments were, of course, unanswerable, and Mr. Huntington, having spent a number of valuable hours—because millionaires' hours must be valuable—in attempting to induce the other party in negotiation to pay one hundred dollars more than he wanted to pay, and having failed utterly, accepted the check for eight hundred dollars, and the horses were duly transferred.

CRAWFISH THOMPSON.

A Coloradoan Who Practices a Peculiar Style of Locomotion.

At the Inter Ocean last evening W. C. Hart, the well-known geologist and extensive gardener, whose home is near Fort Collins, Col., was engaged in general conversation with half a dozen guests of the hotel and a Cheyenne (Wy. T.) Leader owl, when he incidentally mentioned the name of Crawfish Thompson.

"Who in the world is Crawfish Thompson?" inquired one of the listeners.

"Didn't you ever hear of Crawfish Thompson?" was the interrogative reply of both Mr. Hart and another Coloradoan. The remaining member of the party replied in the negative, and Mr. Hart, who is a talker of the order denominated "smooth," was pressed to tell the story. He said:

"R. S. Thompson, or Crawfish, as he is called in the Poudre valley, is a prosperous granger who owns and manages a splendid farm and orchard located a few miles from Fort Collins. A sight of the man establishes his title to the sobriquet of Crawfish. This applies to his method of locomotion, for, strange as it may appear, he always walks backward after the manner of the crustacean whose name has been thrust upon the old gentleman. The peculiar affliction is the result of natural causes, and is not a whim or crazy notion. When Thompson was a boy he gave great promise of becoming a noted athlete and employed experienced trainers to prepare him for physical contests. He was partial to pedestrianism, and for a long time seemed invincible in endurance events. It was after a walk of forty-eight hours that his ankles failed. The members were operated upon by eminent specialists, but the lost strength could not be restored. Thompson accidentally discovered that he could walk backward without pain and industriously practiced that style of traveling. He has become quite proficient and easily keeps pace with the ordinary walker. The misfortune is more troublesome on the farm than in town, but the farmer's healthy sons save him many steps. In walking Thompson's head is always inclined sideways, and he rarely collides with an obstruction. Museum managers have importuned the man to exhibit himself, but he prefers to remain at home."

HER MUSE'S CAREER.

It Produced Six Lines of Poetry and Then Gave Up Its Ghost.

The Washington (D. C.) Critic thus tells of a young lady whose only "poem" made a hit:

A very bright girl, the daughter of a Congressman, and well known in Washington society during the past winter, is a great reader of poetry.

"I love poetry," she said the other day, "and I would give any thing if I could write it."

"Did you ever try?" asked her companion.

"Never but once," she said, hesitatingly and with a poetic blush; "never but once, and that ended my muse's career forever. I was in school then, and the teacher insisted upon every girl in the rhetoric class writing a poem for [illegible] day. I couldn't do it, and [illegible] I couldn't, but she insisted, and finally I had to."

"What was the poem?" inquired her friend, cautiously.

But the evasion was of no avail, and she refused to divulge for some time, but at length gave up.

"Well, if I must, I must, I suppose," here it goes:

"Dear funny my delight,
For I am asked to write
A poem for the rhetoric class to-day.
My only inclination
To do this for [illegible]
Is that I haven't thought of one darned word to say."

"Wasn't it awful?" she continued, "but the worst of it was the teacher made me recite it before the whole school. But it brought down the house." And a very valuable experience it all over her.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Rheumatism and Neuralgia

These twin diseases cause untold suffering. Doctors admit that they are difficult to cure—so do their patients. Paine's Celery Compound has permanently cured the worst cases of rheumatism and neuralgia—so say those who have used it.

FOR SALE. NO USE TO OWNER.

"Having been troubled with rheumatism at the knee and foot for five years I was almost unable to get around, and was very often confined to my bed for weeks at a time. I used only one bottle of Paine's Celery Compound, and was perfectly cured. I can now jump around and feel as lively as a boy." FRANK CAROTE, Eureka, Nevada.

"Paine's Celery Compound has been a Godsend to me. For the past two years I have suffered with neuralgia of the heart, doctors after doctor failing to cure me. I have now taken nearly four bottles of the Compound, and am free from the complaint. I feel very grateful to you." CHAS. H. LEWIS, Central Village, Ct.

Paine's Celery Compound

"I have been greatly afflicted with acute rheumatism, and could find no relief until I used Paine's Celery Compound. After using six bottles of this medicine I am now cured of rheumatic troubles." SAMUEL HUTCHINSON, So. Cornish, N. H.

Effects Lasting Cures.

Paine's Celery Compound has performed many other cures as marvelous as these,—copies of letters sent to any address. Pleasant to take, does not disturb, but aids digestion, and perfectly vegetable; a child can take it. What's the use of suffering longer with rheumatism or neuralgia?
